Offices placed in union

By Bobby Parker

While renovations to the second floor of Alderman Administration Building have been going on this summer, administration and faculty offices formerly located there have been moved to temporary quarters in the Student Services Building and Randall Library.

The move of offices of the Student Affairs Division into the Student Union have prevented the re-opening of the Goodwood Tavern this fall and taken office space from student publications.

The Office of Career Planning and Placement is sharing a room upstairs in the union with the Seahawk and the Fledgling, the student yearbook. The Counseling and Testing Office has occupied the Goodwood Tavern and a student meeting room, and the Financial Aid Office was moved to part of the old bookstore space next to the recreation room.

The History Department and history faculty offices were relocated in the library.

The Alderman renovations will restructure some office space and make repairs to the buildings air conditioning system. The project was originally scheduled to be completed in mid-October, but completion is now projected for November.

Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy said that the "underlying reasons" for the renovations are new federal regulations requiring access for handicapped students to most university facilities. In Alderman, not equipped with an elevator, second floor offices were inaccessible for many handicapped students.

The renovations will include moving many student service offices downstairs while placing business offices upstairs.

Meanwhile, plans for renovations in the Student Union are also behind schedule. The major part of work had been planned for the summer, but the contract was not awarded until mid-July. The same company is working on both buildings.

Renovations to the union include permanent offices for Counseling and Testing in the space formerly occupied by the bookstore, a meeting room in the second floor and an office for the Student Activities secretary. An information desk is also planned for the lobby.

Working materials have been moved into the union and construction was scheduled to begin this week.

"The process (for renovations) took longer than everybody's earliest estimates," said Linda Moore, director of Student Activities. "A little delay here was multiplied there," she added.

Moore said that the situation has been "unfair for everybody concerned" -- to students who have lost union space and administrators who have had to uproot and move into rooms not designed as offices.

But, said Moore, "it seemed as though this is the best that could be worked out" under the circumstances.

Trustees postpone football study citing lack of club members' interest

By Bobby Parker

In a reversal of its decision of last spring, the UNCW Board of Trustees, at its July meeting, postponed a feasibility study which would have considered the future of football on campus.

The study, which would have been coordinated by the Student Affairs Office, was postponed indefinitely.

Dr. William Malloy, vice-chancellor of Student Affairs, told the board's student affairs committee in July that students involved with the Football Club had expressed the desire to see how the club performed as a club team before moving into Division I or III collegiate competition.

The board's decision, which was unanimous, approved the recommendation of the student affairs committee. Dr. Hubert Eaton, who delivered the committee's report to the full board, said the students who had supported the study last year "had apparently graduated" and student interest had declined.

But Malloy said in an interview Monday that the full reason for the postponement had not been presented at the board meeting, and that some people may have incorrectly concluded that all interest in the feasibility study had died.

Malloy said he talked with members of the Football Club prior to the board meeting and was told that consensus among club members was to retain club status for at least the next few years.

Bill Morris, vice-president of the Football Club, said Monday that "most people who are playing club football (at UNCW) want it to remain" in club status.

"Club ball for UNCW is fine for two or three more years," Morris said. "Let club ball get established" before moving to Division competition, Morris continued.

Morris added, however, that he and others "are not against the idea of a study . . . I don't know why they (the trustees) cancelled it."

Malloy emphasized that the study had only been postponed, not cancelled altogether.

"It's really a live issue," Malloy said. "It's not dead."

Malloy said that his office had begun lining up people to serve on a committee which would have conducted the study. He said that he had encountered several people who wanted to be on the committee, including students and administration officials.

Athletic Director Bill Brooks, who opposed the study before the trustees last spring, had indicated a willingness to help with the study also, according to Malloy.

Brooks had argued last year that a Division III team would damage the school's overall athletic program, especially the budding Division I basketball team. A Division I team, (See Football, page 7)

Something new that's not really new at all

by Robert S. Brown
Staff Writer

There's something new on campus but it's not new to the campus. The annual arrival of its many parts make it conspicuous wherever they are seen. Most of its parts come from North Carolina while others come from out-of-state locations. Individually they are driven, like caterpillars, to spin a cocoon on campus to protect themselves during the pupal stage, with hopes of emerging in four or five years as beautiful butterflies. Collectively they make up the newest addition to the university -- the freshman class.

The first few weeks of the new school year, when they are adjusting to their new surroundings, are the easiest times to spot members of this conglomeration. They're usually the ones who have that lost or confused look on their faces, giving the impression that they just missed the last bus home or have misplaced their car in a parking lot somewhere.

Another distinctive trait they exhibit is walking blindly into pine trees, which they failed to notice, as they intently study campus maps trying to decide which way is north.

Many can be identified by the characteristic heavy sweating which occurs when they realize they are ten minutes late for a class and still haven't figured out where building E is.

While others can be seen wearing baggy clothes, which used to fit closely, as a result of a crash diet brought on by the absence of mom's home cooking and the refusal to eat the slop in the cafeteria. (Don't worry, they'll f.l. those clothes again.)

And there are always those who never realized they would have so much spare time on their hands and spend it constantly searching for the "stranger" from Columbia, Mexico or Hawaii, or that special lover who will fulfill their sexual needs with no promises or strings attached, all for the sake of experience and higher education.

Upper classmen reading this have been there and know what it's like. So next time you see someone who looks lost or confused, offer some assistance, and help make the new kid in town feel welcome.

Postponement of football study leaves questions still hanging

Something is missing in the debate over whether or not this university's administration will conduct a feasibility study on an NCAA division football team here. Officials have given weak and inconclusive excuses for the sudden postponement this summer of a Board of Trustees-authorized study which should have, by all rights, been under way at the time of the postponement.

There was a Board of Trustees decision last spring to conduct a feasibility study. There was substantial student support for such a study. And there was a general understanding that the study would be completed.

Why did the trustees reverse their decision? They were told that the students who supported the study "had graduated" and, thus, they assumed that the need for the feasibility study "had graduated."

Wrong.

A feasibility study that will have as great an effect as this one on the student body and the university doesn't graduate with one group of students. Those responsible for coordinating the study should have been viewing it as a long range proposal that would begin the preliminary groundwork for expansion.

Had student support for the study disappeared? Major student proponents of the study -- such as former SGA President Karin Whaley and former Football Club Coach Frank Zerbino -- were out of office and, thus, student pressure had subsided.

Wrong.

The summer months are no time for trustees or anyone else to gauge student opinion at UNCW. The views of present Football Club members were also misrepresented when the idea was put forth that they did not want division competition now and did not favor the study. Indeed, they did and do not advocate division status now; they are not, however, against a study now.

Were those students who pushed for the study wrong to believe that, once approved, it would be carried out? Evidently the feeling was that without constant student pressure and oversight, there was no hurry about beginning the study.

Wrong again.

The trustees' sanction was evidently not enough to convince the administration of the sincerity and seriousness of the effort to establish the study. Surely the board has every right to change its mind, but any agency would have been right to question why action hasn't been taken on a distinct and clear-cut directive it has handed down.

The student position on this issue has not been served as well as it might have. SGA President Wayne Dunlap, an ex-officio member of the board, voted against the study at the trustees' meeting while saying he feels a study should be done and is not satisfied with the decision.

This clear contradiction in Dunlap's position is further muddled by his statement that he "really didn't think it was that important." It was important.

So where does this leave football at UNCW? Right where it is and has been, which certainly doesn't mean that it is not worthwhile and without purpose -- the case is quite the contrary.

But the questions also remain about the future direction of UNCW football and the university athletic program -- questions that could and should have been answered by a feasibility study.

ANOTHER VIEW

"YOU'VE BEEN ON VACATION FOR DAYS NOW SENATOR. WHEN ARE YOU GOING TO START PUTTERING?"

President sees good student year

Once again the UNCW campus comes to life with the beginning of the fall semester.

This year more students have enrolled than ever before.

With so many new freshmen and transfer students I'm looking forward to more input and enthusiasm from students that ever before.

We have a big year ahead that should be both hard work and a lot of fun. It is my hope in setting out to accomplish the tasks before us that we can do so in a manner and enthusiasm unparalleled by students in the past.

The Student Government Association and other university organizations provide students with the opportunity of attending and participating in such functions as rock and soul concerts, theatre, ballet, poetry readings, lectures, dances and the symphony. I would urge all students to take part in as many of these diversified activities as possible as I'm sure that you would find them stimulating and beneficial to your academic, intellectual and cultural growth.

With the completion and use of a third dormitory this year, and a new dorm and classroom building on the way, it is quite evident that the University is rapidly growing in a physical sense.

As we grow in a physical sense a great deal of responsibility weighs upon the shoulders of students to see that we grow in an academic sense as well.

It is my opinion that students should be continually pressing for newer, better and higher levels of academic programs here at the university.

Academic standards for the Dean's list have changed this year from a minimum grade point average of 3.0 and 12 academic hours to a minimum grade point average of 3.2 and 15 academic hours, with no grade lower than a "C".

The Student Government Association is already working to provide students with a dance this Saturday in the Pub from 8-12 (BYOB) and a concert featuring the Outlaws on Oct. 1. The first Student Legislature meeting will be held Thursday, September 7, upstairs in the Chemistry-Physics Building. Any interested persons are urged to attend to observe the Legislature's action.

UNCW is a small community within a community. With such a variety of people from various educational and cultural backgrounds, UNCW students should be able to experience quite a diversity of life.

I invite each of you to come by the SGA office if you feel that we can be of some assistance to you in any way. I will be holding office hours from 3-5 p.m. every day.

Let's get this semester off to a good start. I'm looking forward to UNCW's finest year ever.

Democrats' attitude spells trouble for Ingram

Some state Democratic Party insiders have recently adopted the opinion that their U.S. Senate nominee, Insurance Commissioner John Ingram, will win this November in spite of himself. It's that type of wishful thinking that may prove disastrous for the Ingram campaign.

Most observers will agree that Ingram has faced and still faces an uphill battle to unseat the Republican incumbent, Jesse Helms. It doesn't take a trained eye to see the preponderance of red, white and blue "Jesse" bumper stickers scattered across the state's highways (mostly on farm trucks and Oldsmobiles.)

The fact that Helms' $4.65 million war chest is purportedly the largest ever raised in a U.S. Senate campaign in any state doesn't mean blue skies and daffodils for Ingram either.

Estimate of 40 to 50 percent of that multi-million dollar figure have been poured into the financing of the direct-mail fundraising efforts used to raise Helms' bankroll. Many contributions have come from outside North Carolina from a growing nationwide conservative element to whom Helms' ideology appeals.

Ingram will use these two facts to label Helms the candidate of big money and special interests as he did when he upset Charlotte banker Luther Hodges in the May Democratic primary. At last report, Ingram had spent well below $100,000 since the beginning of his primary campaign, through the runoff and into the general election campaign.

But Ingram will find it more difficult to attack Helms on these grounds than it was with Hodges for two reasons.

One is that Helms has raised the vast majority of his funds through individual contributions while Hodges raised a substantial amount through bank loans and loans from himself. The difference is that behind the Helms contributions are voters who will remain loyal to him; behind the Hodges loans, there were no voters, as the runoff primary proved.

Second is the public's perception of Helms and Hodges. It is easier to tie a big-city banker to special interests than a politician who has thrived on a self-molded image of being a champion of the little man.

Another major difference in the Helms and Ingram campaigns is organization. Here, Helms has an obvious edge with his state headquarters occupying two complete floors of a Raleigh building, in contrast with Ingrams suite of several rooms located at the state party headquarters.

The Democrats have mounted a "unity" campaign which, they say, is aimed at electing all Democratic candidates at all levels. This is probably, though, a thinly veiled attempt to keep Democrats within the fold, which would mean a guaranteed victory since Democrats outnumber Republicans three to one in the state.

Helms, on the other hand, is having little to do with the efforts of other Republican candidates because he knows that to win, he must attract conservative Democrats--the so-called "Jessecrats"--who elected him in 1972. The state Republican leadership is resigned--unhappily, no doubt--to this political fact of life, grateful that Helms

(a former Democrat) at least still claims their party label rather than an independent one.

Ingram's campaign shows signs of weak organization through its handling of the press. Television cameramen recently walked out of an Ingram news conference because the candidate arrived late while no one was sent to explain the delay.

Some reporters for major state newspapers heard the official announcement of President Carter's second visit to North Carolina (Asheville) on Ingram's behalf on radio broadcasts rather than from his campaign headquarters as they should have. The White House had made the announcement.

The root of Ingram's organizational troubles can be traced to his entrance into the Democratic primary. His decision to enter appeared a hasty response to Attorney General Rufus Edmisten's decision not to run and the legislature's reduction of Ingram's powers as insurance commissioner.

Helms, by contrast, has had a well-established organization which he has been nurturing during his term as senator.

The most serious problem for Ingram, however, is the lackluster support he has received from loyal Democrats who have serious doubts about his qualifications to be in the Senate. Not that they are in the least satisfied with Helms' performance. But they do worry that their party has rejected some of their best--Luther Hodges, McNeill Smith, for instance--and settled for a candidate less-than-best in a race so important to the state.

The major concerns of these Democrats are Ingram's campaign style, based on personality attacks rather than issues; his lean track record outside of the state insurance department; his reputation as a party maverick who sometimes clashes with party regulars; and his general lack of experience as a real leader and formulator of policy in government or business.

Given these circumstances, it is hardly safe for Democrats to assume that Ingram will win "in spite of himself."

State internship program now accepting applications

Learning by doing is the goal of the Fall '78 State Government Internship Program which will run from October to December, according to the North Carolina Department of Administration.

Any student attending a North Carolina college, university, technical institute or community college or any North Carolina resident attending such a school outside the state is eligible to apply.

Students are required to spend at least 15 hours a week on the job and may carry regular course loads. They do not receive stipends but are eligible to receive academic credit through individual arrangements with their respective schools.

Brochures explaining the fall program and state employment application blanks are available in placement offices of colleges, universities, technical institutes and community colleges. Application deadline is September 15.

For additional information, call or write Ken Wright or Jeannie Jo Bell at the N.C. Youth Involvement Office, 112 W. Lane St., Room 115, Howard Building, Raleigh, N.C. 27603, 919/733-5966.

President, editor to receive salary

The Student Legislature approved salaries for the SGA president and Seahawk editor at its last meeting of the Spring 1978 semester. The president and editor will receive $950 each beginning this year.

The salaries were proposed by former SGA president and new Senior Vice-president Karin Whaley. Whaley cited the long hours and many responsibilities of both positions as justification for the salaries.

The presidential salary was passed unanimously.

However, the editor's salary passed narrowly by an 8 to 7 vote. Opponents argued that the editor's duties were not as great and that it would set a precedent for salaries for student editors of other publications.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap and Seahawk Editor Bobby Parker will receive the salary in monthly installments of approximately $105.

DIALOGUES: Rules, signs say you've got to have your ID

A dramatization
by B. Parker

"May I see your ID, please?"
"My what?"
"Your ID. You know--picture, name, number."
"Oh, my student ID."
"Yes, that's it. May I see it?"
"No." Matter-of-factly.
"What?"
"No."
"What do you mean, 'no'?"
"You asked me a question, right?"
"Yes, I did..."
"...and I get two choices, right? I pick 'no'."
"Listen, kid, if you want to go in the bookstore, you've got to have your ID."
"Why?" Sincerely.
"Why?" Indignantly.
"I asked you first."
"What are you trying to prove? Can't you read?"
"Sure I can."
"Well, then, you can read that sign right there which says that you've got to have an ID to get in the bookstore."

"Why?"
"I just told you."
"Oh, now let me get this straight. I have to have my ID to get into the bookstore because that sign says so."
"No, not exactly." Patiently.
"You see, that sign says you have to have your ID because that's the rule."
"Law of the land, huh?"
"Something like that. Look, wise guy, you're beginning to bother me. Do you want to go in or not?"
"As a matter of fact, I do."
"Then just show me your ID and you can go."
"Well--friend--to tell you the truth, I don't have an ID."
"Are you a student?"
"Yes."
"But you don't have an ID?"
"Well, it's kind of a long story. You see, I have this dog that loves the taste of plastic. You know--plastic bones, plastic fruit, plastic flowers..."

Why do they check IDs?

I. D. checks at the bookstore can be a maddening experience if you haven't had yours validated or have left it elsewhere when you try to buy your books at the beginning of the semester. Arnold Siko, bookstore manager, assures us that this procedure is necessary to protect UNCW students from being stranded without books. That has happened in previous years when students from other campuses have purchased their books here after supplies ran out at their own student bookstores.

The bookstore only orders enough textbooks, the amount requested by the faculty for each course, to supply UNCW students with what they will need to participate in classes taken each semester. Non-UNCW students may purchase remaining textbooks after UNCW students have had time to fill their needs.

I. D. cards can be validated in A-113, the office of Student Affairs.

"...and plastic IDs."
"You got it."
"Why don't you get a new one."
"Well, I didn't really like the old one. I never could take a good picture. Always looked like an exhibit out of the Smithsonian."
"Well, you still need an ID."
"Oh, I don't know. I never liked the idea of carrying an ID card in the first place. Made me feel like 1984."
"Nineteen-eighty? For what?"
"That's 1984. You know... well, maybe you don't."
"Well, anyway, you should get a new ID. You need it."
"For what?"

"Well, for basketball games."
"Don't go to basketball games. They won't ever let me in the door; say I've got to have an ID."
"See?"
"No, I don't see. What's the difference if I don't have an ID?"
"The difference is, you don't get in the bookstore without it. Besides, how else would we know you're a student?"
"I told you that ten minutes ago. Anyway, if I weren't a student, why would I be coming into the student bookstore to buy student textbooks?"
"Well, I don't know. But I don't make the rules here. I just follow orders."

"Hey, I tell you what. I'll give you the money and you can go in and buy my books for me. I've got to be in class in 10 minutes."
"Oh, I don't know about that."
"Why not? Come on, we're old buddies. We've known each other for almost twenty minutes."
"But I have to stay on my job."
"It'll only take 5 minutes. I'll stand there while you're gone. What do you say?"
"Well... I've never been asked to do something like this before. Maybe just this once. But you ought to go get another ID as soon as you can."
"Oh, I will, I will."
"OK. But don't you let anyone by this door unless they show their ID."
"I won't, I won't."
"And don't you tell anyone I did this. I can't be making a habit of it."
"Don't worry about it. Here's the money and a list of books. Thanks a lot, friend."
"Now you stay there and don't let anyone in without their ID. You got that?"
"I got it."
"I'll be right out." Opening the door.
"Oh, wait just a minute."
"What is it now?"
"May I see your ID?"

Students awarded internships

Three UNCW students received federal internship appointments for summer 1978. Steven Douglas Rawles was selected by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration as a program assistant; William N. Jackson was selected by the U.S. Customs Service as a program analyst intern; and Loretta Johnson Bradford was selected by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Seahawk summer baseball ranks third for state

UNCW Sports Information
UNCW's entry in the N.C. Collegiate Summer Baseball League concluded its season with a fine performance in the league's championship tournament, finishing second to tourney and regular season champion Louisburg.

The Seahawks came in third during the eight-week season with a 15-17 mark, but played well during the tourney, defeating both North Carolina and Campbell while dropping two contests to Louisburg.

Third baseman Herbie Dawkins, rightfielder Richard King and leftfielder Bubba Baldwin tied for the team hitting lead with .310 averages. All three also ranked among the league leaders in various offensive categories.

Dawkins was runnerup in both hits (49) and runs-batted-in (33) while finishing in a tie for first in doubles with eight. Baldwin was third in RBI's with 33 and King led the league in bases on balls with 38.

Top pitchers for the 'Hawks were Roger Sutton, Mike Williams and David Pope -- all with four victories apiece.

Six Seahawks were honored during the season by being named to the league all-star squad. In addition to Dawkins, Baldwin and Sutton, shortstop John Tallent, catcher Jim Montague and designated hitter Ron Broadwell were selected to the team in voting by league coaches.

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Seahawk soccer squad in action last year.

Soccer program hopes to repeat success of last year's season

The fast-growing soccer program at UNCW enters the 1978 season with two imposing problems. Primary on the agenda is the task of improving (or even equaling) 1977's outstanding year -- one which saw the Seahawks win 11 of 15 contests and rise as high as fourth in the South Region ratings. The second problem is that Coach Calvin Lane's squad must perform task #1 against the most demanding schedule ever attempted by a UNCW team.

The Seahawks of 1977 were an aggressive and offensive-minded club. They outscored the opposition 59-20 on the year and were not shut out all season. Highlights of the season were victories over Rollins (2-0), North Carolina (6-3 OT), Duke (4-2) and Campbell (4-0). UNCW finished the year as the seventh ranked squad in the South.

Five starters are gone from that team, however, leaving the veteran coach Lane, who enters his eighth season at the Seahawk helm, with a tough re-building job if he is to match last season's success. Leading the returnees is the exciting forward tandem of Gil Castilla and Erwin (Chi Chi) Mercado, both juniors from Silver Spring, Md. Castilla led the '77 squad in scoring with 18 goals and six assists, while Mercado added eight goals and another half dozen assists. Mercado, both juniors from Silver Spring, Md. Castilla led the '77 squad in scoring with 18 goals and six assists, while Mercado added eight goals and another half dozen assists.

Two-year starter Eddie Brock and top reserve Ashley Dixon also return in the front line. Wilmington native Dennis Davis, an all-state selection as a high schooler, is the top newcomer up front.

The midfield and fullback areas were hurt worse by graduation, but it is also here that Lane concentrated his recruiting efforts. Ted Kort, MVP in last year's UNC-Charlotte Invitational, and Doug Powell, perhaps the most versatile player on the team, head the veterans. A trio of junior college transfers should bolster the defense, too, with former juco All-American John Miller topping the list. Matt Wight, an all-regional standout and teammate of Miller's at Prince George Community College (Md.), also is expected to contribute, as is Nick Stephanos, a member of the national semi-finalist team at Montgomery County-Rockville (Md.).

Charlie Ingold, who recorded seven shutouts as a first-year man in 1977, returns in goal, along with top reserve Rusty Russ.

"The upcoming season should be another good one for us," UNCW's Lane says, "but just how good is hard to say. Offensively, we have the ability to score, and depending on how the new players fit in, we could be even stronger than last year defensively.

"Our schedule, however, is extremely demanding. It is quite possible that we could have a better club this season but not win as many games."

The Seahawks will once again face powers North Carolina, Rollins and William & Mary, and have added the likes of Division II power Maryland-Baltimore County and NAIA leader Warren Wilson. In addition to its Florida trip (to Rollins and Stetson), UNCW will participate in the prestigious Harbor Front Classic in Norfolk, Va., facing Old Dominion. That field also include James Madison and William & Mary.

The 1978 season opener for UNCW is September 9 when the Seahawks host Warren Wilson.

Doc and Merle Watson, Gamble Rogers in Kenan September 27

Wednesday, September 27, Doc and Merle Watson with guest Gamble Rogers will appear for two shows, one at 7:30 p.m. and the other at 10 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Student tickets may be purchased after Labor Day for $5.50 at the Student Activities Office in the Pub, valid I.D. required; all seats are reserved. Other tickets are now on sale for $6.00 at the Pony Express, School Kids Records, The Vinyl Factory, Record World (both locations) and Gillham's Guitar Works.

The concerts are sponsored by WHSL and the Pony Express, and are a Beggarman Production.

Doc

The story of Arthel "Doc" Watson could make a successful novel in the line of "rags to riches" stories popularized by Horatio Alger in the latter 1800's.

A small boy, living in Stoney Fork, North Carolina, grows up surrounded by a musical family who passes down the traditional tunes of a young country to their attentive ears. He learns to play the harmonica, banjo and guitar, perfects several picking styles, possesses himself of the ancient feelings which sparked the mountain music he plays, pays his dues in small bands through years of just getting by. He is finally "discovered" by a travelling folklorist and achieves fame, fortune, and several Grammy awards, despite the fact he is blind.

After his discovery it became apparent that Doc, because of what he had learned from his family and their heritage, was one of the most important purveyors of the "down home" sound of the southern mountains. He is in every sense of the word an authentic folk singer -- a captivating performer with a subtle wit, a warm personality and an incredibly proficient picking style.

Doc Watson

Doc has contributed an enormous amount, both stylistically and spiritually to country and bluegrass music. His music paints a picture of another, more peaceful and reflective way of life. It is a glimpse of our heritage. And for over fifteen years Doc Watson has been at the forefront of this genre of music.

Of his music he says, "The music we play is basically a traditional music with a bunch of other things that came along later in country music." He also says, "it gets to the soul or down to earth, and it's not hard to understand. It expresses the joys and sorrows of people."

Merle

Merle is a first rate banjoist and guitarist and is especially appealing on slide guitar. Since the mid-sixties Doc has relied on Merle's brilliant guitar to supplement and embellish his own work.

Gamble Rogers

Appearing as opening act for the Watsons will be Gamble Rogers. Rogers is an excellent musician as well as the gentle humorist whose whimsy echoes young Will Rogers and conjures up the smiling ghost of the ageless Mark Twain. He's the savage critic of a plastic America using razor-sharp satire to shatter neon dreams. His delivery has the fervor of the hellfire and brimstone evangelist.

He's the legendary troubadour, weaving incredibly detailed stories from his Southern heritage. He's the strolling minstrel spinning dazzling musical lines on a six-string acoustic guitar.

He's the folk singer who loves the people in his songs, and the good ol' boy, who doesn't suffer fools gladly. A great outpouring of words fashion verbal portraits as vivid as his poetic imagery.

Through the course of the show he'll introduce you to such characters as the Georgia cracker who "was wearin' a breechclout made outta two Freuhauf mudflaps, a styrofoam pith helmet with an STP decal on the front, Thom McAnn penny loafers with quarters stuck in 'em, two 45 caliber bandoleer belts with the cartridge loops alternately stuffed with Hav-A-Tampa Jewels and Slim Jims."

He'll also acquaint you with "Slow Bill", the cattle rancher with the two-acre spread."

Rogers has an album with some of his monologues and songs on it entitled "The Lord Gives Me Grace, and the Devil Gives Me Style". This will be the three men's first appearance in the Wilmington area and the word is that they are looking forward to it. Why don't you look forward to it and buy your tickets early.

NIGHTS

The Pony Express, 4001 Wrightsville Avenue, will feature Campbell and Ego! Wednesday night, John Glover Thursday night, George Williams Friday night, and UNCW's own Sam Dorsey Saturday night. Sunday night they will feature Open Mike, where all area musicians can show off their talent. There is no cover charge at the Pony Express.

The Three Penny Gallery, located in the Cotton Exchange downtown, will feature John Glover Friday night, and Sam Dorsey Saturday night. There is no cover charge this weekend at the Three Penny. Watch for coming attractions.

At the Crest, Lumina Avenue, Wrightsville Beach, Brice Street will play Thursday, Friday and Saturday night. Cover charge for guys will be $2.00 Thursday night and $3.00 for the rest of the weekend. Ladies will be admitted for $1.00 Thursday night and $2.00 for the rest of the weekend.

The Four Winds, Market Street, has disco Friday and Saturday night with a $50.00 door prize Friday night. There is no cover charge this week. Wednesday night Subway and the Platters will be featured and Subway will be featured Thursday night. All this week, Four Winds has a special membership drive. This week membership (for a year) is $2.50 with UNCW student ID.

Atlantis calendars available

According to editor, Richard Long, 4000 "Atlantis" calendars will be available, for as long as they last, in the library, the Pub and Kenan Hall.

The calendar is free to students and is put out by the staff of "Atlantis" every year. "Atlantis" is the university literary magazine which is run by students and publishes poems, short stories and artwork of UNCW students.

Long has added a new look to the calendar this year by listing and color coding special days during the 10 month school schedule. Previous calendars have been 12 month calendars without the important dates set off from the rest.

The artwork heading the calendar was done by Robert S. Brown 3rd.

rangements in a letter to Chancellor William Wagoner and Vice-chancellor Malloy this summer. Dunlap said he is primarily concerned with the use of the Goodwood Tavern since its operations have been halted by the presence of Counseling and Testing.

Wagoner, in a reply to Dunlap's letter, described the arrangements as "last resort" and said that "no other temporary location on campus" could provide acceptable accommodations for Counseling and Testing, whose records must be locked up.

Dunlap questioned, in an interview Monday, whether all alternatives had been fully considered before the move was made.

"I think that students have been inconvenienced too much (by the move)," Dunlap said. "In the long range planning of the university, this never should have happened."

"Outside of office space, there's just one room for students" now in the union, Dunlap continued, referring to the recreation room.

"Knowing that renovations were going to come up," Dunlap said, "perhaps if (the work schedule) had been planned better -- doing it in segments."

Vice-chancellor Malloy said that other alternatives that had been considered included the library, the "VIP" lounge in Kenan Auditorium and mobile units.

The library spaces were taken by history faculty offices, the Kenan lounge was considered too inconvenient because of its decentralized location and mobile units were too costly to move in.

Dormitory lobbies had also been suggested but were considered too ill-suited for offices.

Brooks had said, would prove too costly to the university.

Student government president Wayne Dunlap, who as a member of the Board of Trustees voted to postpone the study, said he was not satisfied with the decision but that the process may have been "moving too fast." He said he voted against the study because the "students who had wanted it so badly" had stopped pushing for it.

Dunlap also said that the club "should work on becoming the best club football team around" before moving to Division play. He said the study would have been of little value if the university "weren't going to go through" with its recommendations.

"Unless you're making immediate plans," Dunlap said, "... there's really no reason (to) justify the money spent.

Dunlap also said that he "really didn't feel it was that important" to push the issue before the trustees.

"I didn't think the results would yield anything that significant," Dunlap said.

Dunlap said that the trustees had discussed the study as a long range plan.

Vice-chancellor Malloy, however, said that "the thinking really wasn't long range. There was an immediacy about it."

Former SGA President Karin Whaley, a major proponent of the study last year, was unavailable for comment this week.

Nikki Bane: Student, worker and family woman

by Ray Warren
Staff Writer

For those few uninitiated souls who don't know, that attractive woman who will be handling most any business in the student government office this year will again be Nikki Bane. Nikki, who is also a full-time graduate student here, is the only university official whose salary is paid by the Student Government. Her title, Administrative Assistant, means that she does, (in her words) "a little bit of everything".

Nikki's job came into being two years ago when the Student Senate (now called the Student Legislature) decided to hire somebody to take care of the day-to-day duties in the student government office. Today that job includes handling the Student Government's bookkeeping, financial transactions and typing. In addition, in her 1 1/2 years on the job, Nikki has also served as a liaison with the administration and an advisor to student body presidents. "I take care of the mundane details so the students can concentrate on important issues", Nikki explains.

Ms. Bane's present job is only the latest episode in a very exciting life. A child of California, she graduated from the University of California at Irvine with a double-major of Marine Biology and Spanish. "Living in the Southwest, I was naturally bi-lingual", she adds as explanation of that unusual combination of disciplines.

"I've lived a great many places," Nikki says, but she only offers scant details about her past. She does reveal that she spent 4 years in New York where she taught college and did research in marine biology. Later, she taught for a while at St. Francis College in Maine.

In a more exciting vein, she describes her research and teaching experiences in Peru, Mexico and Puerto Rico. "I got in a fight with a stork in Peru", she says. Then she reveals that it happened at the Lima Zoo. "He was determined to get my popcorn and I wouldn't let him have it", she says. Later, she admits, the stork won.

"After he had made my arms into 'hamburger', I let him have it. After all", she adds, "he was determined".

"Then", she adds there was the time the boat sank when we were studying sharks". . .

A rather productive writer, Nikki has co-authored three books. In addition, she modestly announces that the UNC Press will be publishing another collaboration this fall. She did part of the writing and all the illustrating for the forthcoming Near Shore Fishes of North Carolina. For the children, she has done a coloring book which is on sale at the Marine Resources Center in Fort Fisher.

As a full-time student, Nikki is seeking her master's degree in Educational Administration.

Her class will be the first to graduate in that program next May. "They have a really good program here", she says, adding that the program is quite difficult, but thought-provoking.

SGA Administrative Assistant Nikki Bane role as facilitating that improvement.

"I work for the students, not the administration", says Nikki, and there is pride in the way she says it. "Students often see me as being arbitrary, but I can't say 'yes' if the senate says no. I don't approve of a lot I have to do, but it's not my place to decide student policy".

That Nikki takes student government seriously can be validated by the work she puts into it. The walls of the student government office are painted with a bright pattern, including the official school Seahawk logo that she designed. Even the mass of paperwork that student government produces has taken on a form of organization. Getting all that paper into a semblance of order was no mean task and Nikki announces with pride that if she left the system could still carry on under her successor. Hopefully, however, she won't be able to prove that claim for a long time to come.

LIVING BY THE SEA

WILMINGTON, N.C.

Dear Readers:

Soapbox is an occasional column that gives students a chance to anonymously express an opinion or react to other's opinions. To participate simply drop your letter by the Seahawk office. Use a pen name and let us know what's on your mind. Remember though, slander or excessive profanity cannot be allowed.

S. B. Editor

Dear Soapbox:

The Bible teaches that our bodies are the temple of the spirit. Alcohol is a poison. It is not pleasing to the Lord for us to poison our bodies.

With so many beautiful things in the world why do students feel they need chemicals and drugs to enjoy life? Aren't the most beautiful things in life natural?

If everyone would just trust in God and not drink, they'd find what a real "high" is all about.

Loves Jesus

Dear Soapbox:

I'm sick and tired of professors who have ridiculous attendance policies. Last semester one of my instructors only allowed 2 cuts.

A lot of students live pretty far from school and inevitable transportation problems cause them to miss class when it's not their fault. Also it's real easy to get sick more than two times.

Personally, I think it's a student's responsibility to decide when to attend class. If the professor is being paid then it should be none of his business whether students want to hear him lecture. As long as people go to their tests, they should only have to attend class when they feel they need to. Superfly

Dear Soapbox:

The student government is insane. They are supposed to be people who know the policies of the school and work to better it. But instead of passing amendments to help the university -- the SGA argues about whose amendment is going to be passed first. Or maybe the big business of the night is whether a motion is in order or not. I mean really! I would like to hear how other students feel -- maybe we could ban together and make things right/

Slow Bill

Well students, is "Loves Jesus" right about alcohol? Is "Superfly's" description of attendance policy on the button? Are there other important issues you want to write about? We look forward to hearing from you.

On their own: former students 'make it' in Wilmington area

by Ray Warren
Staff Writer

What happens to those people who, clutching those precious sheepskins, walk into the sunset after graduation never to be seen again? How do they fare in the cold and cruel world of capitalist society? Is there hope for any of us?

Relax, there is life after graduation. A great many UNCW graduates leave town to make their fortunes in other locales. Some, however, remain in our fair city to become integral parts of our local community.

Curious to learn how those who have gone before for us have found their just reward, the Seahawk contacted some recent graduates who have chosen to begin their careers here in "river city".

Carole Raines graduated in May with a degree in accounting. A native of Bolton, N. C., she wanted to live in a larger town like Wilmington. Through the Office of Career Planning and Placement, she learned of an opportunity to manage a new food establishment in town. After several weeks of training in Sumter, S.C., she took over, around July 1, as the manager of Sub-Station II.

Carol, who enjoys her job, says that her degree knowledge helped her in her job, management courses being particularly good.

The duties of a restaurant manager include ordering food, scheduling and figuring the payroll.

In the future, Carol plans to take a few more management courses at UNCW. Despite long hours (96 hours last week) she plans to stay with the company for several years to come.

Clarke Butler spent a worrisome summer looking for work in his field, accounting. Recently, however, his persistence paid off when he began work for Cape Fear Management Company.

Clarke has no doubts about the value of his education. His degree, he believes, "definitely" helped him get his job.

For the future, Clarke plans to stay with Cape Fear Management. "I thought about the ministry", he confided, "but I believe the Lord is leading me to minister and and still keep my job". The only other possibility would be to open his own bookstore. "This job can teach me a lot about business", he added.

Work on her degree led directly to a permanent job for Mary Beth Hickman. After finishing her practicum for her social work/criminal justice degree, Mary Beth was given the opportunity to return to the New Hanover Juvenile Service Center in a full-time position.

Mary Beth's duties include checking kids into the center, testing them, and helping with odd jobs like fixing lunch. To get her job, which involves working with delinquent youngsters, she believes her degree was indispensable.

Although she has received applications from other social work agencies, Mary Beth enjoys her work and plans to continue in her present position for the immediate future.

Staff Photos by Howard Jarrell

Karen S. Dunda didn't wait to graduate to begin her career. When she decided to drop her plans for a drama career she not only switched to a business major, she also opened a business. A junior this fall, Karen will be seeking an accounting degree. After class, she will be doing the books at her own bookstore, The Bookworm. Karen opened the store with money borrowed from her parents.

"I always liked books and I wanted my own business" is Karen's simple explanation of her remarkable feat. Her accounting classes are "just starting to help", but Karen thinks her degree will eventually prove very valuable. The confident sort, Karen says of the future, "I'd like to expand in three or four years".

Mary Beth Pack left UNCW in May with a degree in Marine Biology. She has worked this summer as tour guide at Chandler's Wharf in the Historic District. She isn't sure that her degree helped her too much in getting her job, but she claims it does help her answer questions from tourists. "It helps more with the offbeat questions" she says, "like 'Is the Cape Fear River salty' (well, it's brackish), or whether there are alligators in the area (there are)".

Mary Beth's future isn't totally certain. "The marine science field is very closed in Wilmington" according to Mary Beth. "There was some hope of a few jobs at the Marine Resources Center, she says, "but we think they will be filled by people whose CETA jobs were eliminated. My real hope is to work with a veterinarian," she adds, "but for now I'm staying with my present job."

Jay Taylor had the good fortune to be able to work in a family business, Jay Taylor Exterminating Co. Taylor, who was married this month, is a company manager. His duties include scheduling, supervising the office and handling accounting problems. He believes his UNCW classes "definitely" help him in his job.

Taylor will stay with his company for the foreseeable future. He may bone up on his management skills, however, by taking a few more business courses next year.

Bruce and Cindy Shell demonstrate their belief in marital togetherness by working together. Bruce is the manager of the Village Inn Pizza Parlor and Cindy works with him. Both graduated last May, he in business administration, she in psychology. Both had worked in their present capacity prior to graduation.

Both Cindy and Bruce will probably continue at Village Inn for some time. Bruce, who feels he greatly benefited from his degree, wants to return to school (while still working) and get his accounting degree as well. In a few years he'd like to go into accounting. Cindy would like to try her hand at writing or perhaps go to graduate school. Both of them extol the fact they are relatively free now to determine their

One and a half years after he graduated (in 1977) Paul Laird went to work for the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce. Although his particular field of study (history/anthropology) wasn't too helpful on his job application, he believes having a degree "definitely helped" him get the job. Personally, he considers "the chance to mature" in college more significant than classroom instruction in preparing him for work.

As manager for economic development, Paul oversees the work of the chamber's councils on economics and public affairs and all task forces connected with these councils. He also sits in on meetings and "does a lot of legwork" for the chamber. "I'd like to continue with the chamber and make a career out of it," he says. My dream is to be the executive officer of a chamber. I'll probably have to go elsewhere if I do that", he adds, "but I really love Wilmington".

Like a lot of Nursing students, Sue Padrick has gone on to work at New Hanover Hospital. Padrick, who completed the two year program for an associate degree in nursing, says she had no problem getting a job. If the proposed baccalaureate program in nursing is approved, however, she says she would consider returning to expand her education. For the time being, however, Sue is quite pleased with the fruits of her education -- a meaningful job.

APO to sponsor rush party

The beginning of another year means students have another opportunity to join Alpha Phi Omega. APO is the group on campus who perform various tasks such as Red Cross blood drives, help with orientation and registration, fundraisers for the Heart Fund and March of Dimes and ushering concerts.

However, APO is not "all work and no play." Last year the fraternity won the Homecoming Spirit Award for participation at basketball games. APO members braved the wilds of Towne Creek by canoe on two occasions, had beach fellowships and an awards banquet. Similar events are planned for the 1978-79 season. If anyone would like to find out more about the fraternity they are invited to APO's rush party to be held at Governor's Square, 8 p.m., September 8. Free beer and munchies will be served. If you need directions or a ride, call Tommy Long in 112 Belk Hall at 799-7557.

APO brothers have several meetings to attend. On August 31, an executive board meeting will be held at 7 p.m. and a call meeting at 7:30 p.m., both in room 103 of the Business Building. On September 5, a call meeting will be held at 7:30 in room 217 of the Business Building.

Fraternity sponsors book sale

The semi-annual student used book sale will be held for the remainder of this week. All persons wanting to sell their old books or students looking for good used books should come to the second floor of the Student Services Building (Pub).

All students are requested to check with their instructors about the required books needed for their course before buying. Students selling old books are reminded to have the price they want to sell their books for already in mind when they bring books in.

All business students interested in joining Phi Beta Lambda this year are requested to stop by the book sale and talk with representatives of the business fraternity.

Laymen law to be offered in courses

Two short courses on Law for Laymen will be offered by the UNCW Office of Continuing Education beginning in early September.

Section A, Due Process and Court Procedures for Businessmen will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. on Tuesday evenings from September 5 through October 10. Section B, Citizen Survival Course, meets from 7 to 9 p.m. on Thursdays from September 7 through October 12.

The registration fee for each section is $35, and registration must be completed in the UNCW Office of Continuing Education, room 119 Hoggard Hall.

Robert A. O'Quinn and John C. Collins, both practicing attorneys in the Wilmington area, will teach the courses. Both are graduates of Wake Forest University School of Law.

Due Process and Court Procedure for Businessmen will cover uniform commercial code, sales transactions and commercial paper; contracts, rights and duties of parties; collections of debts, protections for debtors and tools for creditors; corporations, partnerships, and sole proprietorships; organization and enforcement of liens; and pursuing or defending commercial claims.

The Citizen Survival Course will deal with the court system and procedures; real property ownership and rental; wills and estates; contractual relationships and obligations; constitutional law and its effect on our lives; and consumer rights and duties.

Financial aid pick-ups

Students receiving student financial aid for the fall semester may pick up their payments beginning Thursday, August 31, from 9:30 — 3:00.

All receiving aid must report to Financial Aid Office in the James Student Union except those students receiving National Direct Student Loans. These students must pick up their financial aid in Room A—203 of the Administration Building. All students must present a valid student identification card. Following receipt of payment, each recipient must report to the Business Office, Administration Building.

Automatic cash refunds will be given through Wednesday, September 6, to students receiving aid in excess of direct costs. After this date students will have to make a written request for any credit balance on their account.

Food service sees major changes

by Robert S. Brown
Staff Writer

As a result of student complaints about the service and menu in the cafeteria last year, Interstate United Food Service's contract was not renewed for the 1978-79 academic year.

The contract was instead awarded to Professional Food Service Management of Livonia, Michigan. Phil Welsh, director of dining services at UNCW, says, "Professional is the largest food services company in the United States specializing in colleges."

One of the first things Welsh noticed when he arrived on campus in August was the attitude of the cafeteria staff towards students. He says, "They acted like they were doing people a favor by waiting on them."

To correct this situation he immediately began to replace or reassign the staff members to compliment his plans. Many employees were actually hand-picked by Welsh. He acquired his chef from a Keffe Pancake House in Texas and one woman who had previously been a cashier under the old management is now baking fresh cakes daily.

Welsh also noticed the lack of "atmosphere" in the cafeteria and snack bar. The snack bar had greater possibilities for renovation so he set out to give it a "saloon" type appearance.

By adding wooden counters and cabinets he has made the snack bar more inviting. And with Pepsi's cooperation, he has added new equipment such as self service soda machines and a coffee machine.

An antique meat counter was also incorporated into the new look. Welsh searched for this himself and found it in a junk yard. He had it rebuilt, installed and stocked with fresh sandwich meats (a new and excellent addition itself).

In the future he hopes to carpet and furnish the right side of the snack bar, giving it a terrace effect.

"It will take a couple of months to get everything together," Welsh said. "I didn't want to add too many new things at once and end up not doing anything right."

The cafeteria on the second floor posed a greater challenge

Organization, non-student traffic caused closing of radio station

by Bobby Parker

Campus radio station WLOZ closed down for approximately six weeks this summer after experiencing organizational and manpower problems coupled with concern by university officials over the number of non-students visiting the station in evening hours. Sources close to the station's staff have also revealed that part of the concern was over suspected use of marijuana on the station's premises.

The sources, who declined to be identified, said that the alleged marijuana use was the major reason for Student Activities Director Linda Moore's decision to close the station. The sources said that the unusually large amount of non-student visitation had lead officials to suspect that selling and buying of the drug was also occurring at the station.

Moore, however, pointed to the organizational problems, shortage of staff members and "improper activities" as reasons for closing WLOZ. She declined to elaborate on the specific "improper activities" which she referred to.

Moore said that during the first session of summer school this past year "some problems came to my attention rather suddenly" concerning the radio station.

"The station was not operating at the caliber that UNCW deserves to have," Moore said.

After consulting with Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy and the deans of students, Moore said that she realized the problems were "not going to be easily remedied" and decided that the best solution was to close the station for a while.

WLOZ Station Manager Steve Hess said that at the time of Moore's decision to close the station, he preferred that WLOZ remain open.

"I thought we could handle the problems without closing the station," Hess said.

Moore, when questioned about her authority to suspend the operations of a student government-funded activity, said that the nature of the problems gave her the right to step in.

"In this case, the problems . . . were heavy-duty," Moore explained.

Hess said that the main problems for the station were organizational and he "didn't see any problem" as far as use of drugs at the station.

Hess said, however, that

Campus Security had complained about the "flow of traffic" in and out of the station, particularly during late-night hours. But Hess said that many of the non-students visiting the station were involved with its operations.

"We don't see any reason we can't use them (non-students)," Hess said, "especially during the summer."

Hess said that there were seven or eight students working at the station at the time of its closing. This is less than a third of the normal staff during the spring and fall, he said.

Lieutenant David Gurganus of Campus Security said that there was never a formal complaint or investigation of the station by the security department. Gurganus said, however, that security police were concerned about the number of off-campus visitors to the station, especially at night.

Gurganus said that he had once asked a visitor to leave one evening because the visitor was not a member of the station's staff. He also said that some officers had been concerned about drinking at the station.

Gurganus emphasized that the security department had not been involved in the decision to close the station. He said that it was entirely up to administrators and students and that the security office does not "attempt to regulate student activities" but only "enforces regulations put out by the administration."

Asked if there was concern on the part of the security officers

Administration disregards students in moving offices into union

The decision to move administrative offices into the Student Union this summer while renovations are made to Alderman Building is being described by various administration officials as "last resort" and "the best that could be worked out." But instead of a "last resort," it appears to be a convenient resort which, from the students' point of view, is far from the "best that could be worked out."

Three administration offices have occupied rooms in the Student Union: Counseling and Testing in the Goodwood Tavern, Career Planning and Placement in a portion of the Seahawk office, and Financial Aid in part of the former bookstore. Students had originally been told that the Union would be back to normal by mid-October, but inevitable delays have pushed the projections into November. Students might realistically expect to celebrate Christmas with these administrators still in the Union.

The most important violation of student interests in this situation is the occupation of the Goodwood Tavern. While the other offices have not halted student activity, the presence of the counseling office has prevented the opening of the tavern, thus denying student access to one of two campus snack bars and eliminating coffeehouse programs totally.

The Goodwood predicament is particularly critical because the counseling office will probably be the last of the three to be moved. It is in line to receive permanent quarters in the Union in the old bookstore after renovations are completed there--and these renovations are even further behind schedule than those in Alderman.

Administration officials would have us believe that this solution was the most feasible alternative. They know better, and we do too.

There is only one building on this campus reserved for student use, while there are more than a dozen others. True, there is a space crunch on a campus whose physical capacities haven't kept pace with its rapid growth. But are we to believe that somewhere on this campus there is not one room to spare for temporary use by the counseling office outside of the Goodwood?

Other alternatives, we are told, were considered before moving into the Union. These included dorm lobbies, the "VIP" lounge of Kenan Auditorium and mobile units. These suggestions were dismissed because the lobbies couldn't be locked, the lounge was too "decentralized" and mobile units were considered too costly.

Well, that all depends on one's definition of "costly." In terms of dollars, any other alternative would have probably cost more than occupying the Union. But in terms of student needs and benefits--a foreign language to many--the present arrangement has been far too expensive.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap summed it up exactly: "In the long range planning of the university, this never should have happened." The situation shows a lack of foresight on the part of the university's administration.

A perfect solution would have been to delay the Alderman renovations until the new classroom building was completed later this fall. That would have given the administration two uncomplicated, acceptable solutions: (1) move the History Department (as planned) into the new building instead of in the library where it is now, thus freeing the library space for the three offices in the Union; or (2) move all offices--history, counseling, career planning and financial aid--into the new building and wait on relocating the academic departments which are planned for that building.

The administration and Board of Trustees talk endlessly about the need for more space for student use and, eventually, a new student union building. Then officials come along and make a far-reaching decision of this type which totally disregards that need. And if that's not enough, students are asked to believe that this was the only alternative.

Who are they kidding?

"How was the demonstration at the nuclear plant, dear?"

VIEWPOINT

by Ray Warren

The more radical wing of feminism has never been very tolerant of dissent. As with all lovers of ideological purity, they fail to understand the difference between honest disagreement and malicious evil. To this mentality any means can be used so long as the coveted end is achieved. Passage of the "Equal Rights Amendment" is a cherished goal of the National Organization for Women and other powerful pressure groups. Their most recent tactic is to extend the ratification deadline while preventing any "backsliding" by previously ratifying states. True to form, this attempt represents a serious confusion of priorities. Should the radicals succeed, their desire to have the E.R.A. at any price will have wrecked the integrity of our two-centuries-old amending process.

In an act of true faith and courage, this writer will resist the temptation to debate the merits of the ERA itself (or more exactly, the manifest lack of such). Rather, let us concentrate our energies on the immediate question of extending the ratification deadline.

Phyllis Schlafly, best known for her disinclination to utilize intelligence over emotionalism, has charged that the deadline extension is illegal and unfair. This time, however, Phyllis isn't alone. Many distinguished supporters of the ERA have broken ranks with NOW, and joined the opposition to tampering with the original Congressional resolution. Ms. Schlafly's argument (I have liberated her name) is based on the idea that states previously ratified the amendment under a "contract" that it would be rejected or accepted in a seven year period. Such a contract cannot be unilaterally altered, in her view, by one side without nullifying its effects (previous ratifications). In other words, a ten year ratification period is a change in the "contract" which states must approve by restating their intention to ratify.

If the courts decide the matter on the basis of law rather than ideology, Schlafly will win. Such legal technicalities, however, aren't necessary to see the danger in allowing the House-passed extension bill to survive the Senate. Old fashioned fairness condemns the move, whether or not it can be deemed legal.

The militants claim that there is nothing illegal about extending the deadline because Congress created it and Congress can change it. As Rolfe Neal (editor of the Charlotte Observer and ardent ERA backer), has pointed out, they would surely sing a different song were the shoe on the other foot. Suppose anti-ERA forces had convinced Congress to shorten the deadline by three years, or suppose Congress declared the time period over next week. Would the feminists firebrands consider that fair? Of course not. If Congress can change the deadline unilaterally, then it will become nothing more than a meaningless political football.

One might agree to granting more time to argue the issue (as if we haven't heard arguments enough) except that the extension bill doesn't allow states to rescind a previous ratification. Not only is that unfair, it reeks of ignorance about the amendment process. The idea is required to be that a consensus is required to amend the supreme law of the land.

Congress, however, seems to ignore this sound idea, for what William F. Buckley calls the "sacramental marriage" view of the amendment process. That is, like a Catholic marriage, a ratification is forever and may never be set aside. This position is heavily biased in favor of acceptance of any proposed amendment. The proponents can lose again and again so long as they can just once get a legislature to agree to their position.

Opponents, however, must repeatedly beat back the opposition and do not have a similar opportunity to return and change minds the next year.

Clearly, our forefathers intended to institute the consensus system. The courts have upheld it by validating the idea of ratification deadlines. Now if the people of North Carolina have changed their view of the ERA, then perhaps the people of Idaho may have done likewise. If one state moves from opposition to acceptance and another takes the opposite tack, then there is no net progress towards consensus.

The radicals aren't impressed by constitutional theory. In myopic rage they decry the fact that their precious amendment has been stopped by "emotionalism and political deals." In fact, however, they have played political handball themselves by spending thousands of dollars to defeat anti-ERA legislators (like Jim McDuffie, D-Mecklenburg). In addition, they can hardly call their economic boycott of non-ratifying states a high form of intelligent persuasion.

A sometimes comparison between the ERA and the Civil War amendments is spurious. True, those amendments required a little arm-twisting "push" from Washington. Slavery, however, had been held as legal by a Supreme Court decision and could only be eliminated by amendment. There are other ways to ensure sexual equality. Besides, let us hope the feminists aren't contemplating military reconstruction for non-ratifying states.

There's a lot more at stake here than an amendment. If the extension bill passed, our Constitution will be seriously damaged. Regardless of one's position on ERA, such a dangerous tactic must be opposed. Who knows, ERA may pass before the present deadline. If not, its supporters would do well to propose a frevised version that can both insure equality and preserve the integrity of the amendment process.

Differences between Democrats and Republicans: Rutabagas, paint brushes

(Winthrop C. Libby is a retired president of the University of Maine. Reprinted from the Raleigh News and Observer as taken from the Ellsworth (Me.) American.)

A rainy day took me foraging through an attic collection of old family photographs and souvenirs. Among some of these papers I found an old, undated, typewritten document by an unknown author. I must have thought it was amusing at one time. I still think it is moderately so. Let me quote:

Although to the casual glance Republicans and Democrats may appear to be almost indistinguishable, here are some hints that should help with positive identification.

The people you see coming out of white wooden churches are Republicans.

Republicans are likely to have fewer but larger debts that cause them no concern. Democrats owe a lot of small bills. They don't worry either.

Republicans consume three-fourths of all the rutabagas produced in this country. The remainder is thrown away.

Democrats give their worn-out clothing to those less fortunate. Republicans wear ties.

Republicans usually wear hats and almost always clean their paint brushes.

Republicans post all the signs saying PRIVATE and NO TRESPASSING and KEEP OUT. Democrats bring picnic baskets and start fires with the signs.

Republicans employ exterminators. Democrats step on the bugs.

Democrats name their children after currently popular sports figures, politicians and entertainers. Republican children are named after their parents or grandparents, dependent on where the money is.

Democrats keep trying to cut down on smoking, but are not successful. Neither are Republicans.

Republicans tend to keep their shades drawn, although there is seldom any reason why they should. Democrats ought to, but they never do.

Republicans study the financial pages of the newspapers. Democrats put them in the bottom of their bird cages.

Republicans fish from the stern of a chartered boat. Democrats sit on the deck and let the fish come to them.

On Saturday, Republicans head for their vacation lodge or the country club. Democrats wash their cars and weed the garden.

Republicans raise dahlias, dalmatians and eyebrows. Democrats raise mutts, children and taxes.

Democrats grow shaggy beards. Republicans have trimmed moustaches.

Republicans have guest rooms. Democrats have spare rooms filled with old baby furniture.

Republican boys date Democratic girls. They plan to marry Republican girls, but feel they are entitled to a little fun first.

Democrats plant their gardens using organic methods. Republicans use commercial fertilizers, insecticides and straight rows.

Democrats make up careful plans and then do something else. Republicans follow the plans their grandfathers made.

"Excuse me but I seem to have lost my mind."

Compressor purchased by university

An Eagle four stage compressor with a 3500 pound per square inch capacity was purchased by UNCW in July. The compressor is equipped with an air bank consisting of four storage bottles, each containing 400 cubic feet of air, and two filling stations with two outlets, one located on the pool deck and the other on the ground floor of Trask Coliseum.

According to Frank Chapman, scuba diving instructor and biology faculty member in charge of its use, the compressor will be used by the scuba diving classes and by the faculty, staff and students for research purposes and also for any university sanctioned research programs.

NCSL recreates legislature

The North Carolina Student Legislature (NCSL) would like to welcome all incoming freshmen and returning classmates. The NCSL seeks to provide its members with invaluable experience in the workings of the state political system by copying its structure.

NCSL recreates this political experience by holding a legislative session annually in Raleigh. Interim council meetings are held monthly at member schools to carry out legislative business between sessions.

The NCSL is based closely on the actual North Carolina state legislative structure including senate and house divisions, the committee system, and a student governor. This year, Jon Fail, a member of the UNCW delegation, currently holds the chair of the State membership Committee.

The officers of the UNCW delegation are Mark Beanblossom, chairperson; Todd Fennel, vice-chairperson; Craig Lambert, secretary and Mike Sanders, treasurer.

NCSL is sponsoring a workshop behind the Patio (next to Hardees), Friday, Sept. 8, at 5 p.m. Free draft beer will be available after the workshop. All interested persons are invited to attend.

UNCW will also be hosting an interim council meeting in mid-October. Senator Jesse Helms is expected to be the guest speaker.

NCSL also invites interested persons to attend a planning meeting Wednesday, Sept. 6, upstairs in seminar room number 2 at 7 p.m. in Randall library.

Student government vice-president DeLuca issues welcome to students

Hello. My name is Francis DeLuca and I am your Student Government Association vice-president. I am going to briefly try to acquaint you with my office and responsibilities, and also some of the roles of student government.

First, let me say welcome to all new students and welcome back to all returning students. I hope it will be a good year for all.

As vice-president, my main job is to serve as speaker of the legislature. I preside at legislative meetings and I am, in a way, responsible for making sure the actions of the legislature are carried through. The legislature meets every Thursday night starting this week, Sept. 7, in room 227 of the Chemistry-Physics Building at 7 p.m. I would like to encourage all to come and sit in on the meeting and contribute if you wish. These meetings are the process by which student funds are allocated and spent.

Vice-president

Coming up this session will be the creation of a Student Program Board, a $40,000 affair which you will hear more about. I will be making my two nominations to the Student Court, Jim Sardi and Joe Thompson. There will be much more.

Also as vice-president, I am a member of several committees such as student affairs of which I will tell more later.

There will be elections this month in which you will choose seven at-large representatives and the freshman class will elect their officers. The student government is often criticized, and I, too, criticize it, but the only way to make it better is to get involved. This is the chance to stop complaining and back up what you say.

I don't intend for this article to be long. If you have the chance, stop by the Student Government Office upstairs in the Pub and ask some questions. Or if you happen to know me, feel free to stop me and I'll try to help.

Until next time, enjoy yourself.

Wildlife directory available by mail

The 23rd edition of the Conservation Directory, published by the National Wildlife Federation, lists colleges and universities in 49 states, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands and Canada which offer professional training for careers in specialties in the conservation field, including environmental sciences and wildlife ecology.

The major sequences within the field range from environmental engineering at California Polytechnic State University, to range management at the University of Arizona, marine geology and geophysics at the University of Miami to biometereology at the University of Saskatchewan.

The 264-page directory also lists the names and addresses of 1600 organizations and 9500 individuals in the conservation movement. It is available, for a check or money order for $3, from the National Wildlife Federation, 1412 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

N.W.F., the nation's largest citizens' conservation organization, offers more than 50 publications in the environmental field free of charge. A free catalog listing them can be obtained by writing for "Conservation Education Publications."

He has moved the ticket punch counter away from the stairs and inside the cafeteria proper. The counter is framed in wood and has a barber chair behind it (for effect). He has hung an awning above the food and beverage lines and has built a wooden roof over the salad bar.

Fresh baked cakes, an ice cream machine and a doughnut machine, which should arrive in about two weeks, are also some of the additions Welsh has brought in the short time he has been at UNCW.

The changes in the separate dining room of the cafeteria are perhaps the most impressive. He has added curtains, tiffany style Pepsi lamps, an independent lighting system and a separate food line (same menu) to provide for private meals. Monday through Thursday, for students who want to reserve the room for special occasions. Any group of 25 or more students can reserve this room.

Seven hundred dollars worth of potted plants were also purchased by the university to help enhance Welsh's accomplishments. Professional Food Management pays for all remodeling and menu changes.

Welsh is especially appreciative of his personnel, most of whom are new to the campus, for doing such a fine job the first week. And he also thanks the students for being so cooperative with and understanding of the cafeteria staff.

As Welsh reflects on how things have improved he says, "I can't understand why it wasn't like this before."

On October 8, Welsh hopes to introduce what he calls a "theme dinner." He has done this at UNC-Charlotte where he worked before coming to UNCW and it was a great success.

At UNCC he had a "Las Vegas night" which included a Las Vegas floor show, a special menu of T-bone steak, stuffed chicken breast and veal parmigian, special furnishings and decorations, limousine service for campus and local officials and participation of students acting as waitresses, hosts, hostesses and chauffeurs.

Welsh became interested in food services when he was assigned to the officer's club after his helicopter was shot down in Vietnam. From 1972-74 he was food and beverage director at Hilton hotels in Baltimore and Cincinnati and since 1974 he has served as director of food services at the University of Pittsburgh at Bradford and UNC-Charlotte.

Welsh is married and has two children.

about drug use at the station, Gurganus said that "there's always rumours." But he added that "I haven't seen any evidence of drug use" at the station.

The sources said, however, that the major concerns about marijuana use had come from administration officials and not Campus Security.

Officials were concerned mainly, the sources added, about possible use of marijuana by non-students visiting the station and not as much about possible use by students. The officials had not, however, ruled out use of the drug by students at the station, according to the sources.

Station Manager Hess said that the organizational and manpower problems have now been worked out, as the station went back on the air August 27. Hess, who did not assume his duties as manager officially until this semester, said that the station had been left during the summer "without someone really in charge."

"Most of last year's staff disappeared," Hess said.

The station lost its program and music directors over the summer and the two positions have only recently been filled. The station has a staff of about 25 now, with five non-students serving on it.

WLOZ became an FM broadcasting facility in 1977. It is awaiting its license from the Federal Communications Commission after a trial period of programming.

Continuing education, Fine Arts join to present Cinema '78 series

Cinema 78, seven outstanding films, ranging from "Potemkin" to the New Cinema Animation Festival, will be presented September 8 through December 8 by the UNCW Office of Continuing Education and the Fine Arts Committee in cooperation with the departments of Drama and Speech, Philosophy and Religion and Mathematical Sciences.

The first film in the series, slated for presentation September 8, is "Potemkin," considered by many to be one of the most important films in the history of cinema. There will be no admission charge for the season opener; memberships for the remaining six films will be $10. An admission fee of $2.50 per film will be charged those attending without a membership. All UNCW students will be admitted for $1 for each film showing.

In addition to "Potemkin" on September 8, other films in the series are Ingmar Bergman's "Smiles of a Summer Night," a comedy about the spicy sport of partner switching, to be presented September 22; "The Horse's Mouth," starring Alec Guinness, on October 6; Juan Bardem's

"Death of a Cyclist," an attack on class morality in Spain today, on October 20; Jaromil Jire's "Valerie and Her Week of Wonders," a rich, rambunctious cinematic hymn to life, on November 3; and Akira Kurosawa's "Dodes' Ka Den," an impassioned affirmation to life and to man's overcoming his adversities through hope and dreams, on November 17.

The season's finale, a collection of short films by international directors of the 70's, will be presented December 8. The program is composed of "Do-It-Yourself Cartoon Kit" by Bob Godfrey of England, "Two Castles" by Bruno Bozzetto of Italy, "Ars Gratia Artis" by Dusan Vukotic of Yugoslavia, "Pop Show" by Fred Mogubgub, "Portrait of a Horse" by Witold Giersz of Poland, "Twiddle Twaddle" by Zlatko Grgic K. L. Ruppel of Yugoslavia, "All" by Yoji Juri of Japan, "A Texas Romance, 1909" by Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt, "The Apple" by George Dunning of England, "The Pistol" by Wolfgang Uerchs of Germany, "Striptease" by Nadaliko Dragic of Yugoslavia, "Allures" by Jordan Bel-son of the U.S. and "Games of Angels" by Valerian Borowczyk of Poland.

All films will be shown at 8 p.m. in King Auditorium. Registration must be completed in the Office of Continuing Education, room 119 Hoggard Hall, on or before September 15.

ENTERTAINMENT

'Miracle Worker' at Arts Council

From the people who brought you "A Streetcar Named Desire" the Lower Cape Fear Council for the Arts announces this year's major theatrical production, "The Miracle Worker" by William Gibson.

The story concerns the early years of one of the most inspiring and courageous women of modern times — Helen Keller, her family and teacher Anne Sullivan.

Rendered blind, deaf and mute by a severe childhood fever, Helen Keller's struggle for human awareness through her teacher Anne Sullivan provides some of the most exciting theatrical moments in the history of the theatre.

The production will be directed by Donn Ansell who directed last year's very successful "A Streetcar Named Desire" also for the Lower Cape Fear Council for the arts. Ansell has become known throughout the area as a proficient actor, director and theatrical technician. "We are very excited about this year's production, "The Miracle Worker." Not only are we trying to reach all those audiences who usually frequent theatre but with "The Miracle Worker," we shall institute 'theatre for the deaf' with the addition of sign language technicians so the deaf can also witness Helen Keller's incredible story. Ansell says of the play. As with "Streetcar," we shall again use the main studio at the Community Arts Center in a most unique way, literally surrounding the audience with theatre.

The production will run September 14, 15, 16 and 17, Thursday through Sunday at the Community Arts Center, Second and Orange Streets in Wilmington. Curtain is at 8:30 p.m.

Advance reservations must be made by calling 762-4223, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tickets are $3.00. Group rates are available (over 20).

'Animal House': Twisting the night away

For all hard-core Lampoonites, Saturday Night Live groupies and those members of the general public that enjoy a somewhat rowdy time, National Lampoon's "Animal House" is the fic of the week.

John Belushi, of Saturday Night Live fame, portrays a hard-drinking, perpetually unshaven pre-med student with the eating habits of a Hoover vacuum cleaner. He, along with a relatively new line-up of faces including Thomas Hulce, who plays the innocent-but-learning Pinto, and Tim Matheson, as the suave seducer Otter with an ever-present black doctor's bag containing an unmentionable article, takes us all back to the early sixties when fraternities were the life-blood of college and the students within. In an amusing and unsuitable way, we are shown from the beginning how students are sorted out among various fraternities depending on their personal quirks. Of course, the plot narrows to a conflict between the two extremes: the wild and raucous Animal House (Deltas) and another fraternity consisting of model students and sneering ROTC cadets that give the appearance that there was a major break-out at the Ken doll and G.I. Joe factory the night before casting was begun.

The Animals, featuring Belushi as the semi-psychotic Bluto, D-Day (who looks like a junior high school metal shop teacher), and various other odd characters like the Stork (Douglas Kenney, for all those familiar with National Lampoon magazine), wreak havoc on the fictitious school Faber College and incite the wrath of Dean Vernon Wormer. Wormer then enlists the aid of the Ken-doll fraternity along with the ROTC cadets to somehow sort the Animals from Faber forever.

But the party goes on. Amid failing grades and warnings from Dean Wormer, the music of the late Sam Cook keeps the Animals twisting the night away in the Roman garb of a toga party. Never has a smashed beer bottle had such significance as when broken over Bluto's head. A keg flying through a window has the audience ready to go. There is a real-but-ragged energy in the Animals and it plows into the audience. You can re-live smoking pot for the first time or the feeling of surrendering totally to the rigors of heavy-duty partying.

On top of all this, there is some good acting on the part of Belushi, who conveys a character strongly with very few lines of dialogue. Bluto is seen mostly in facial expressions and physical action. Matheson, the suave Otter, is the focus of some delightfully tasteless scenes, including one where he exploits the sympathy of a dead coed's roommate to secure dates for himself and friends. (But who can have sympathy for a coed killed in a kiln explosion?)

It was basically a fun movie, but most importantly, it showed college could be as truly a tasteless experience in the early sixties as it can be now.

"Animal House" is now showing at the New Centre Cinema.

JAMES TILTON

James Tilton is a sophomore biology major. He will be reviewing films for the Seahawk this year.

Literature-in-Film series will open with 'Lord of the Flies'

The Literature-in-Film series will show "Lord of the Flies" at 7:30, Wednesday, Sept. 6, in the Randall Library auditorium. Based on the novel of the same title by William Golding, "Lord of the Flies" shows the crash and subsequent isolation of a group of small boys on an uncharted island after evacuating war-ravaged London.

The idea examined is whether the boys, played by James Aubrey, Tom Chapin and Hugh Edwards, will maintain their civilized state or regress to archaic primitivism dominated by the decapitated head of a pig, the Lord of the Flies. Admission to "Lord of the Flies," a ninety minute movie, is free to everyone.

HOW HIGH IS YOUR E.Q.?

Outlaws concert to feature return of Wilmington native Arnold

To appear October 1

The news that the Outlaws were to play Trask Coliseum on October 1 was greeted by a strange mixture of wild enthusiasm and, to be honest, by some who asked "Who are the Outlaws?" The enthusiastic ones fell generally into two categories—old fans that had followed the band from its first hit, "There Goes Another Love Song," and had seen their blistering live performances or those who knew that bass player Harvey Arnold was a Wilmington native who used to play in the local group Heather.

There are still quite a few people that remember Heather. They were always a band that could have possibly made it but things just never seemed to happen for them. Most locals still remember the many times the band played the Wreck Hall (now the Crest) or the beer busts at UNCW. After Heather's demise, Harvey Arnold headed for Florida where he was asked to join the Outlaws. Arnold's first album with the group, "Hurry Sundown," even includes one of Heather's finest efforts, "Cold and Lonesome."

But the Outlaws are a group, and like so many southern groups, there is no one star. It's a close knit effort to produce a group creation. Outlaws feature a unique blend of not one but three lead guitars backed by two drummers. There are other characteristics that make the group unusual—combined with a solid rhythm section and a "guitar army" are vocal harmonies which lend a closer resemblance to a West Coast Crosby, Stills and Nash sound. It is all combined to create something much more interesting than the usual "southern boogie."

The result has been a growing international reputation with opening slots on shows for Lynyrd Skynyrd, Jefferson Starship, Bad Company, The Who, and, for the second consecutive tour, the Rolling Stones. And if you think that just any band can open for the Stones, keep in mind that Foreigner did the same thing this summer.

The outlaws

The Outlaws live performances have been garnering critical raves and winning new admirers with every performance. They are definitely a live act and should not be missed.

Special guests for the Outlaws will be Louisiana's Le Roux who have just released their first album for Capital. They currently have a big hit with "New Orleans Ladies." You will see more about them next week as they promise to be better than the usual "opening act."

Its all shaping up to be a good time affair on October 1.

Tickets have been on sale for two weeks but the best floor seats have been reserved exclusively for UNCW sales. Reduced student admission is only $5 and $5.50 (ID required for purchase). Non-student tickets are $6 and $6.50. Tickets are available now from Linda Moore's office in the Student Services Building—but hurry, because the best seats always go first.

Hurricane

Surviving nature's killer

by Ray Warren
Features Editor

Last week Wilmington came close to experiencing its first serious hurricane threat since 1960. Even though Ella eventually missed the Carolina coast, she brought back memories of the Cape Fear's most destructive storm, Hazel, which devastated the region in 1954. Many also recalled that in 1955, three hurricanes struck southeastern North Carolina in a six week period.

While the 1950's were admittedly unusually active years for hurricanes in the North Carolina area, there have been many such storms in the past two hundred years. In fact, the total lack of such storms for the past 18 years is believed to be an aberration which should end in the near future. Unfortunately, in the years since 1960 (when the last major storm to pass near Wilmington occurred) the memory of hurricane damage has faded. As a result, many authorities fear that local residents are ill prepared to understand proper hurricane safety procedures when the storms make their inevitable return to the Cape Fear region.

UNCW has never been affected by a hurricane at our present location. In fact, even those students who are local natives are likely to be too young to remember the last hurricane to seriously affect Wilmington. Those who have come here from the piedmont and mountains generally lack even second-hand memories of such storms.

Since the hurricane season extends through November, there is a chance that UNCW could be affected by a storm this year. Students therefore, should be aware of what to expect and what to do to ensure their own safety under hurricane conditions.

Unlike tornadoes, which are small funnel-like storms, a hurricane covers several hundred miles and may last for up to twelve or more hours. As the center of the storm approaches, there will be a gradual but steady increase in wind speeds to 150 mph or more (By contrast, "severe" thunderstorms usually feature winds of only 40-50 mph).

Beach tides will be considerably above normal and waves of 10-12 feet (or more) may be expected. Rain will be heavy and will flood streets and low lying areas.

Those in greatest danger will be students who live at the local beaches. (During hurricane Hazel all of Wrightsville Beach and a large part of Carolina Beach were inundated by an extra high storm tide). Depending on the

Instructions for Evacuees

When your local government advises evacuation, keep calm, and follow these procedures promptly:

- Shut off main gas valve and pull main power switch before leaving home.
- Head for the designated shelters or evacuation points indicated for your area, as directed on your Evacuation Plan maps and by broadcasts during the emergency. Follow routes indicated on maps. Drive up to shelter entrance, unload, and park car as police instruct. If on foot, proceed to nearest loading station and board buses. No fare will be charged.
- Take only clothing, food, and special medicine that is necessary, do not try to bring household equipment. Evacuated areas will be policed to prevent looting.
- Follow instructions of shelter personnel, and volunteer to help with any tasks needed for efficient shelter operation.
- Remain at the shelter until informed that you may leave. People will not be allowed back into evacuated areas until advised by official public announcement.

Hurricane Safety Rules

Hurricane advisories will help you save your life... but you must help.
Follow these safety rules during hurricane emergencies:

- Enter each hurricane season prepared. Every June through November, recheck your supply of boardwalk, batteries, nonperishable foods, and the other equipment you will need when a hurricane strikes your town.
- When you hear the first tropical storm or hurricane advisory, listen for future messages; this will prepare you for a hurricane emergency well in advance of the issuance of watches and warnings.
- When your area is covered by a hurricane watch, continue normal activities, but stay tuned to radio or television for all National Weather Service advisories. Remember, a hurricane watch means possible danger within 24 hours; if the danger materializes, a hurricane warning will be issued. Meanwhile, keep alert. Ignore rumors.
- When your area receives a hurricane warning:

Plan your time before the storm arrives and avoid the last-minute hurry which might leave you marooned, or unprepared.

Keep calm until the emergency has ended.

Leave low-lying areas that may be swept by high tides or storm waves well in advance of the hurricane. If you plan to evacuate, evacuate early.

Leave mobile homes for more substantial shelter. They are particularly vulnerable to overturning during strong winds. Damage can be minimized by securing mobile homes with heavy cables anchored in concrete footing. However, even if tied down your mobile home does not provide safe shelter during a hurricane.

Moor your boat securely before the storm arrives, or evacuate it to a designated safe area. When your boat is moored, leave it, and don't return once the wind and waves are up.

Board up windows or protect them with storm shutters or tape. Danger to small windows is mainly from wind-driven debris. Larger windows may be broken by wind pressure.

Secure outdoor objects that might be blown away or uprooted. Garbage cans, garden tools, toys, signs, porch furniture, and a number of other harmless items become missiles of destruction in hurricane winds. Anchor them or store them inside before the storm strikes.

Store drinking water in clean bottles, jugs, and cooking utensils; your town's water supply may be contaminated by flooding or damaged by hurricane floods.

Check your battery-powered equipment. Your radio may be your only link with the world during the hurricane, and emergency cooking facilities, lights, and flashlights will be essential if utilities are interrupted.

Keep your car fueled. Service stations may be inoperable for several days after the storm strikes, due to flooding or interrupted electrical power.

Stay at home, if it is sturdy and on high ground; if it is not, move to a designated shelter, and stay there until the storm is over.

Remain indoors during the hurricane. Travel is extremely dangerous when winds and tides are whipping through your area.

Monitor the storm's position through National Weather Service advisories.

BEWARE THE EYE OF THE HURRICANE

If the calm storm center passes directly overhead, there will be a lull in the wind lasting from a few minutes to half an hour or more. Stay in a safe place unless emergency repairs are absolutely necessary. But remember, at the other side of the eye, the winds rise rapidly to hurricane force, and come from the opposite direction.

- When the hurricane has passed:

Seek necessary medical care at Red Cross disaster stations or hospitals.

Stay out of disaster areas. Unless you are qualified to help, your presence might hamper first aid and rescue work.

Drive carefully along debris-filled streets. Roads may be undermined and may collapse under the weight of a car. Slides along cuts are also a hazard.

Avoid loose or dangling wires, and report them immediately to your power company or the nearest law enforcement officer.

Report broken sewer or water mains to the water department.

Prevent fires. Lowered water pressure may make fire-fighting difficult.

Check refrigerated food for spoilage if power has been off during the storm.

Remember that hurricanes moving inland can cause severe flooding. Stay away from river banks and streams and know their elevation.

Tornadoes spawned by hurricanes are among the storms' worst killers. When a hurricane approaches, listen for tornado watches and warnings. A tornado watch means tornadoes are expected to develop. A tornado warning means a tornado has actually been sighted. When your area receives a tornado warning, seek inside shelter immediately, preferably below ground level. If a tornado catches you outside, move away from its path at a right angle. If there is no time to escape, lie flat in the nearest depression, such as a ditch or ravine.

They keep ya feelin' good

by Kirk House
Staff Writer

"There's no excuse for poor health care here on campus," says Linda Jasinski, one of three staffers at the University Health Service Center. "The student has plenty of help available," she said.

"Most anything medical" is available from the Health Center, according to Ms. Jasinski, a family nurse practitioner. "The only exception is surgery and orthopedic (bone) problems."

Anywhere from 15-40 patients are seen each day, says Ms. Jasinski, and are treated for everything from respiratory ailments, stomach and urinary tract problems, venereal disease, and gynecological problems to skin rashes, sprains, allergies, and cuts. As a family nurse practitioner, she is authorized to give shots, prescribe medications and even sew up minor injuries.

Birth control counseling is also offered, although birth control pills cannot actually be prescribed. According to Ms. Jasinski, this falls into the category of "elective" treatment, which is not provided by the center. There are several other clinics in town, however, that do provide this service at no charge, said Ms. Jasinski.

The Health Center is open Monday - Friday, from 8:30-2 p.m. Either Ms. Jasinski or Catherine Vangellow, a physician's assistant, is present each day at the center, located in the main lobby of Galloway Hall. A registered nurse, Vivian Adams, is also on hand to help out.

The staff here are medical personnel with the Wilmington Health Associates, which has an arrangement with the university to provide on-campus health care. Wilmington Health Associates is a local clinic which provides general out-patient services and treatment of general medical disorders. The Health Service Center here functions like a "university branch" of the clinic, designed for students only. The cost is pre-paid for the student, by student fees, so there is no charge for treatment.

Not all illnesses occur, of course, between the convenient hours of 8:30 and 2 on weekdays. There is help available, though, on a 24-hour basis, says Ms. Jasinski. If medical attention is needed at any time, the student can call the Wilmington Health Associates, at 763-8251. If it is during regular office hours (8-5), the student may simply visit the office there. Otherwise, a doctor will be contacted by the answering service to discuss the problem and decide whether it needs immediate treatment or it can wait until morning.

"The doctors work 12-16 hours a day, though, and obviously don't want to hear about your poison ivy at 2 a.m.," said Ms. Jasinski. This is an area where the resident assistants in the dorms could be of help, she said.

For anything of a serious nature, though, such as a severe illness or accident, the student should not hesitate to call immediately. He should then go directly to New Hanover Memorial Hospital. In this case, the student would be responsible for the emergency room fee charged by the hospital, but by notifying the Wilmington Health Associates, one of their physicians can be called for treatment, which would be covered under the health plan.

It's really a good deal, considering what the cost of medical expenses could be if we were out there in the "real world," Ms. Jasinski said. It's also reassuring to know that medical help is there if you need it, she added.

"Many students may be apprehensive," she said. "It's their first time away from home. Maybe they'll get a stomach cramp at night or something — they would have just told their mother about it at home — but she's not here now."

It's hurricane season again

expected height of storm tides, all or part of these communities may be evacuated. Those who wait to the last minute will have to leave their possessions behind, so everyone should consider moving stereos and other valuables to safe keeping with friends well in advance of the storm. If a student has no where to go, the Red Cross will operate an emergency shelter at Hoggard High School on Shipyard Boulevard. The mayor of each town has the responsibility of ordering any evacuation.

Other off-campus students should take various precautionary measures in advance of the storm. The primary hazard in town is flying debris.

Grills, garbage cans, lawn chairs, bicycles and other such objects should be secured. To avoid these and other missiles (such as tree limbs) one should not venture out once the strong winds have begun.

There is little danger in well constructed apartments or homes, but some areas (such as College Manor and Pine Valley) may experience fresh water flooding from the heavy rainfall. Homes or apartments with large windows or sliding glass doors should be protected by taping those windows or doors. Students living in mobile homes should seek other shelter as these buildings are easily overturned by hurricane winds.

Driving will be hazardous due to washed out pavement and downed power lines. In addition, a weather service spokesman warns that in open areas, such as College Road, small cars may be blown off the highway during the windiest part of the hurricane.

Electricity may not be restored for some time, so candles, or better yet, flashlights, should be handy. A battery powered radio is also an excellent idea. Water should be stored before the storm, particularly if one is dependent on an electrically powered well-pump. Gasoline pumps also operate on electricity, so one should fill up before the power goes out.

Most people are aware that the storm may cease for up to fifteen minutes if the center (or "eye") passes directly over the area. This time of quiet may end considerably sooner, however, and very unexpectedly. Therefore, nobody should venture out or try to drive then, lest they be caught in the sudden return of hurricane force winds.

According to Dr. William Malloy, the Chancellor, after consultation with the deans and vice-chancellors, will determine whether classes should be cancelled due to the weather. Such a decision would be made in time to give all students adequate time to evacuate or prepare for the storm.

On campus, the main precautions will be to remove such easily blown objects as trash cans to a safe place. The plate glass windows in the library and dormitory will also be taped. The cafeteria will prepare to serve non-cooked meals (such as sandwiches) to dorm students in the event of a power failure.

In the past, dormitory students have been instructed to stay on the bottom two floors of the dorm. This will be the policy again unless the hurricane is expected to be particularly severe. In that case, Malloy indicated that these students might be removed to a safer place such as the gymnasium.

In the event that UNCW is visited by a hurricane, the campus will return to normal within a few days. The utmost cooperation with campus and local authorities will ensure that all 3800 plus students survive to witness that recovery.

Rowing team endures exhaustive preparation for moments of glory

"Get ready! Ready all! ROW!" On these sharp commands, the crews burst from the starting line pulling their twelve-foot oars through the water at the rate of forty or more strokes per minute. The sixty-foot racing shell is brought from a dead stop to better than twelve miles an hour in less than half a minute.

With the coxswain shouting for more power and each oarsman straining at the limit of his strength, the nine-man crew propels the sleek craft over the middle-distance of the 2000 meters at a rate of 30 to 35 strokes per minute. At the finish line (about seven minutes later) the smoothly synchronized boatload of athletes collapses into disarray as they yield to exhaustion. Sporting cheers resound over the water as the losing crews honor the winner. That is the crew race—one of the oldest of intercollegiate athletic events.

To prepare for that seven-minute race, an oarsman must train for months. He must train to drive himself to the outer edge of his endurance; he must train to master the skills required to handle the oar effectively; and he must train to cope with the uncertainty of the weather. Then, boated with seven other oarsmen and a coxswain, he gives up his identity and merges with them to form the crew. It is the crew that rows the race and wins or loses, not the individual.

Training begins ashore with meetings to discuss the tradition, terminology, and equipment of rowing. The fundamental rowing skills are learned in a rowing simulator on land and in a barge on the water before stepping into the eight-oared racing shell. Manufactured in Seattle, Washington, the shell is just over 60 feet long, less than two feet wide, and is hand-built. Kevlar fabric (used in bullet-proof vests), molded over a cedar frame, forms the light yet durable seamless skin for the racing shell. Fully rigged with stainless steel riggers and hardware, nylon carlocks, foam seats, and adjustable leather shoes, the shell displaces about 300 pounds.

UNCW Crew is supported by the Student Government Association. Interested persons should contact Rich Haislip, president of the UNCW Rowing Club; Dr. John Anderson, coach of the men's crew (Ext. 303); or Mr. Tom Burke, coach of the women's crew (ext. 305).

Peel joins staff as women's sports coordinator

UNCW Sports Information
The newest member of the UNCW Athletic Department's staff of women coaches is Judy Peel, the new Seahawk volleyball coach and coordinator of women's athletics at the university.

Peel, a native of Hamilton, N.C., has a solid background as both a participant and instructor in women's athletics on the collegiate level, especially in her primary sport of volleyball.

The past two years, she has guided the team at William Woods College in Fulton, Mo., to a combined 38-7 record. Twice her squads finished second in the state and in 1977 were the fourth-best team in AIAW Region Six.

Peel also has experience in coaching women's basketball, tennis and track at both William Woods and at Illinois College.

As a participant, Peel competed for MacMurray College in Jacksonville, Ill., in an amazing five different sports and was voted the school's outstanding female athlete her senior year.

Peel will also serve as an instructor in the UNCW Physical Education Department, in addition to her coaching and administrative duties.

Ann Kraft, who coached both volleyball and softball last year, will now devote full time to her coaching duties in the spring with the women's softball squad.

The volleyball team still has openings. Anyone interested in trying out should contact Coach Peel.

Former UNC star joins coaching staff of Seahawk baseball squad

Former University of North Carolina star infielder Bobby Guthrie has been named the new assistant baseball coach at UNCW. Seahawk athletic director and head baseball coach Bill Brooks announced today.

Guthrie replaces Dr. Dave Miller, who resigned to devote full time to his duties as head of the UNCW Physical Education Department.

"Bobby will be a very fine addition to our staff," Brooks says. "He has been successful as a player and as a coach on both the high school and collegiate levels. He is enthusiastic about the game and has a sound knowledge of fundamentals which every good coach must master."

Guthrie, a native of Graham,

N.C., was an all-Atlantic Coast Conference second-baseman for Walter Rabb at Chapel Hill, where he earned his degree in physical education in 1974.

Following graduation, Guthrie became baseball coach at Scotland High School in Laurinburg where he guided his team to a state championship in 1977. He also led the Laurinburg American Legion club into the state quarter- and semi-finals in two seasons in that position.

This past year, Guthrie served as a graduate assistant at Carolina and helped direct the Tar Heels to the College World Series in Omaha, Neb., in which they finished third in the country. He received his master's degree this past spring from North Carolina.

The 26-year-old Guthrie will also have some teaching responsibilities in physical education, Brooks added.

Cross-country returns to campus after year-long absence

After a one-year lapse, cross-country returns as a varsity sport at UNCW with 1978's opening competition slated for Saturday (Sept. 9) in the Campbell College Carnival four-mile event.

Dave Warner, whose illness last fall was the major obstacle in the sport's 1977 season, is once again directing the team. The Seahawk harriers are for Football Club views season with enthusiasm

This time last year the UNCW football club started out with 15 players, and additional players were added throughout the season. This year the club is starting out with 45 players, 20 of them returning from last year, and six coaches.

"We're all enthusiastic and we've got a great deal of height, weight, and talent," said head coach Don Corey, who played football while in the army. "We're gonna be 10-0," said Bill Morris, defense captain.

Assisting Corey with the coaching duties are offensive coach Brian McLure, a former East Carolina quarterback who was drafted by the Miami Dolphins; defensive coach Neil Godfrey, a former defense captain at Wake Forest; line coach Rock McLure who played offensive center for State; defensive coordinator Dale Murry; and offensive coordinator Bill Dover.

Reflecting on the teams talent and the coaching staff's experience Corey said, "We're running a straight pro offense that will be wide open and exciting, and we've got a tough defense."

The club's main problem is money and equipment. "We've only got 22 sets of equipment," said Corey.

The coaches and players want student enthusiasm and support. Anyone interested may still join the club. It meets weekdays from 5:30-7:00 p.m. at the soccer field.

Pinter plays feature actors with grasp on characterization

Kiri Allen, Mark Barefoot, Chris Fonvielle and Edward Danilowicz deserve more attention than this review can give and their excellent performances of the Pinter play in the SRO, theatre last week were proof enough of their talent to the members of the audience.

These actors had a grasp on the motivational subtleties of their characters and managed to project the underlying themes as well as the surface stories in their performances.

This may seem like a quite a generalization to make but in the highly symbolic plays by Pinter, especially "A Slight Ache" and "The Room," the fine lines of the characters become very important.

In "A Slight Ache" Mark Barefoot as Edward, an essayist, brilliantly conveys the fear of the unknown felt by his character. Edward leads a narrow life, fenced in his own world. One day a matchseller, Ed Danilowicz, appears outside the gate of his garden and remains there for two months without selling one pack of matches.

Edward becomes obsessed with the man's constant vigil and finally has his wife, Flora (Kiri Allen), bring the man inside his home (his world).

He begins questioning the man about his business and life and ends up trying to explain his own existence to this man, who is more symbolic of the threat of the unknown on his mediocre life than of the occurrence of any real life form. Danilowicz's presentation of an old, deaf mute with a totally vacant expression was handled very well and he maintained the essence of his symbolism.

Edward finally dies and Flora adopts the man and takes him into the garden. Flora shows she can live with and accept the unknown.

Much of the contrast in the play was achieved by the use of the characters clothing. On the longest day of summer Edward and Flora wearing light clothing while the matchseller was wearing boots, a long heavy coat with several shirts underneath and a balaklava on his head.

Clothing was also important in "The Room" where it is one of the coldest days of winter and everyone is bundled up except the blind stranger named Riley who appears wearing a light short sleeve shirt and flip-flops.

The fear of the unknown was also predominant in the "The Room" and Kiri Allen expertly portrayed Rose, a worried old woman in a run-down apartment who voiced her fears about the rooms in the basement that are cold and dark, the rooms upstairs that are cold and wet, the world outside that is cold and icy and the stranger who is trying to meet her.

She also sets up a contrast with her husband (Chris Fonvielle), a truck driver who never verbalizes his fears but is instead a man of action as he shows when he strangles Riley (Mark Barefoot), the blind man and the threat to his narrow life, who wants to take Rose back to her father's home.

Ed Danilowicz as Mr. Kidd, the landlord, also shows how some men are controlled by their fears and in this case by the blind Riley.

Robert Bruce and Carolyn Creech also appeared in this play as Mr. and Mrs. Sand, a young couple apartment hunting, but they didn't seem to be as "inside" their characters as the other actor.

The second play of the evening, "The Lover", was a little different than the other two and also easier for the audience to understand. It dealt with role playing in society. Chris Fonvielle as Richard, the understanding husband, and Kiri Allen as Sarah, the multi-personalited wife, particularly excelled in this play.

Richard goes to work in the morning while Sarah prepares to meet her lover. Richard returns at 3 o'clock playing the lover and Sarah goes through a whole routine of roles (where Kiri especially displayed her dynamic talent) ranging from the coy mistress to the aggressive lover. Richard, the lover, follows her lead but after a few days becomes tired of following and breaks off the affairs.

That night, hours later, he inquires how her day went. She tells him and before long he is taking the lead and she is forced to play the whore who follows Richard's lead and is his fantasy lover. At first she objects but finally she gives in and the play ends with this comic switch.

Some production difficulties, in relation to the audience, occurred when the plays ended the same way the scenes did, by turning out the lights, and no one knew if they were over or not.

Another problem could have been avoided by adding a simple note about Harold Pinter, the playwright, and that he often dealt with the characters' reactions to the invasion or threat of invasion on their narrow world.

Many people left the theatre missing the symbolism and a short reference on the program could have multiplied their appreciation of the play's purpose. After all, university students come to learn to appreciate the arts and a little guidance would be a lot of help.

Teacher examinations scheduled

Students completing teacher preparation programs and advanced degree candidates in specific fields may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of three different test dates in 1978-79. Educational Testing Service, the non-profit educational organization that administers this testing program, has announced that the tests will be given November 11, 1978, February 17, 1979, and July 21, 1979, at test centers throughout the United States.

Results of the National Teacher Examinations are considered by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and used by several states for the credentialing of teachers of licensing of advanced candidates. Some colleges require all seniors preparing to teach to take the examinations.

On each full day of testing, registrants may take the Common Examinations, which measure their professional preparation and general educational background, and/or an Area Examination that measures their mastery of the subject they expect to teach.

Prospective registrants should contact the school systems in which they seek employment, their colleges or appropriate educational association for advice about which examinations to take and when to take them.

The Bulletin of Information contains a list of test centers and general information about the examinations, as well as a registration form. Copies may be obtained from college placement officers, school personnel departments or directly from National Teacher Examinations, Box 911, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08541.

WLOZ seeks disc jockeys

Have you ever wondered what it would be like to be a disc jockey and never had the opportunity. Well now's your chance! WLOZ is starting a new operational year and needs jocks.

If interested, come by the station, which is located in the mobile unit beside the Physical Plant, and leave your name and how to get in touch with you. The "Land of Oz" needs people. No experience required but you have to be a registered student to work at the station.

Soroties hope to establish chapters at UNCW

Several national women's sororities have expressed interest recently in establishing, or in re-establishing, chapters at UNCW. To gauge the present interest in sororities, representatives from four national groups are planning an informal visit to the campus on Wednesday, Sept. 13. Coordinated by the Student Activities Office, this will be held in the lobbies of the fifth and sixth floors of Galloway Residence Hall from 7 to 9 p.m. Explanations of the benefits and responsibilities of sorority membership will be given, as well as the opportunity for those present to ask questions. Another national sorority, Delta Sigma Theta, re-established its chapter here this past spring after an absence of some years. UNCW members will be present at the Sept. 13 gathering to distribute information and answer questions about their chapter.

Other sororities who will be represented at the meeting include Phi Mu and Zeta Tau Alpha, both of which had chapters here in the late 1960's and early 1970's. Alpha Kappa Alpha and Delta Zeta will also be represented, with hopes of establishing new chapters on this campus.

Alpha Phi Omega sets plans for this fall's rush activities

Alpha Phi Omega, the national coed service fraternity, announces their fall rush to be held Friday, Sept. 8, at 8 p.m. in the Governor's Square apartment clubhouse (about one mile past Long Leaf Mall on the right). Anyone interested in pledging the largest fraternity on campus should come out and meet everyone during rush. There will be free beer and munchies, not to mention good music. The dress is informal (no togas, please).

Being the loudest fraternity on campus is no easy task. APO members claim. To be the loudest means to be the most well-known and the most active. APO has its hands into almost everything campus-wide and around the community. You will see APO at any concert armed with flashlights, at any basketball game armed with cloraseptic, at any Registration Day armed with paper fans, and at any Blood Drive armed with Other places where you may not see us at work are the Red Cross House doing odd jobs, collecting money for the Heart Fund and chopping wood every Saturday for poor families around Wilmington. APO means service.

When the work is done, however, APO Brothers unwind with parties, outings and lots of fun. Last year we took two canoe trips down Towne Creek, had many cookouts at the beach, travelled to several away basketball games, and challenged our pledges to friendly games of softball (also played intramural softball).

For more information or for a ride to rush, call 799-7557 (B212) and ask for Tommy. APO hopes to see you Friday night!

Non-traditional students meet

Returning students who are not entering UNCW right from high school and who would like to meet others in the same situation will be meeting Wednesday, September 6, at noon in room 105 in the Pub.

Part-time and full-time students are encouraged to come to this meeting to share problems and ideas, and to help decide how this group can best aid each one in juggling the numerous responsibilities of being a "non-traditional" student.

For more information, contact Linda Moore in the Student Activities office.

Housing Office Outlines General Regulations

The Housing Office has outlined the major policies and regulations pertaining to residence halls. These include:

The residence halls are locked at 12 midnight, Sunday through Thursday and at 2 a.m. Friday and Saturday. After these closing hours, the security guard makes hourly visits to the buildings until 3 a.m. No residents can be admitted after 3 a.m. The residence halls are reopened at 6 a.m. No visitors are permitted to enter the residence halls after 12 midnight.

The administration reserves the right to make room changes any time it is in the best interest of the students involved or the university.

Students who desire room changes must receive written permission from the Housing Office prior to moving any personal items from one room to another. Students found living in rooms other than the ones to which they are assigned by the Housing Office will be assessed a $5.00 fee and may be required to move back to their assigned rooms for the remainder of the semester.

No room changes will be permitted during the first week of each semester.

Because of public health regulations, no pets are allowed in the residence hall. This includes hamsters, mice, other rodents, reptiles, and birds.

Because of high energy consumption and lack of space, only small portable (2 cubic foot) refrigerators are allowed in the residence halls. Students desiring to rent a 2 cubic foot refrigerator should contact the Housing Office for rental information.

The electrical system is not designed to carry heavy overloads of electrical equipment. The maximum capacity assigned to each room is 1,000 watts.

No single appliance which exceeds 700 watts may be used. This allows for the use of most thermostatically controlled coffee pots and popcorn poppers. Hair dryers, electric shavers, radios, and TV's are also allowed. As a matter of safety, open coil appliances are not allowed.

Books, money can be picked up from fraternity sale sponsors

Phi Beta Lambda would like to remind everyone who brought used books to the sale to please come by and pick up their books or money. The books are still in the same location at the Student Services Building. You must bring your yellow receipt copy for identification of your books.

Used books not picked up by Wednesday, Sept. 6, will be donated to the prison farm library.

Student government elections set Sept. 21-22; all students may vote

The Student Government Association Elections Commission has set Thursday and Friday, Sept. 21-22, for freshman class and legislative elections. To be filled are the positions of president and vice-president of the freshman class, two freshman class senators, and seven student body representatives-at-large.

Unlike years past, all students will participate in the fall elections as the seven representatives-at-large will be voted on by the entire student body. Only freshmen will vote in their class elections.

Other class officers and legislators, as well as the student body president, vice-president, attorney general, and chief justice, were elected in the March general election. All elected officials serve from the time of their election until March 1979.

All regular full-time freshmen are eligible to file for the four freshman positions and all regular full-time students are eligible to file for the seven legislative positions. A petition for office must be completed by all candidates who wish to have their names appear on the ballot.

The petitions will be available after Thursday, Sept. 7, in the Student Activities Office in the Student Union. Completed forms should be given to Linda Moore, director of Student Activities, Jon Greene, assistant director of Student Activities, or to the Student Government Office.

Candidates who do not submit a completed petition will be eligible to run only as a write-in candidate. The deadline for registration as a candidate is Friday, Sept. 15. All interested students are encouraged to register as soon as possible.

The UNCW Student Government Association is the only student governing body in the UNC system in which the SGA has the sole determination of expending funds for student activities. Activities and organizations sponsored by the SGA include concerts, the Fine Arts Committee, Homecoming, publications such as Seahawk, Atlantis, Forum, and Fledgling, campus radio WLOZ, and many other clubs, organizations and committees.

SGA officials urge all students — especially freshmen — to take a voting interest in the running of the campus.

Volunteer Center to meet with faculty members

The Cape Fear Voluntary Action Center, in cooperation with the UNCW Student Activities Office, is sponsoring a campus meeting to enable faculty who encourage student volunteer service projects to meet the heads of various community agencies who accept student volunteer workers. This brief meeting will allow each to become more familiar with the needs and expectations of the other party. Copies of the updated booklet, The Volunteer Experience, will be available to help faculty guide their students to the best possible setting for their learning.

The meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, Sept. 6, at 3:30 p.m. in Alderman 215. Questions, as well as requests for copies of The Volunteer Experience, should be directed to Linda Moore, ext. 373.

Fledgling distributed in Pub

by Cheryl Robinson
Sports Editor

The 1978 Fledglings have arrived on campus and are on sale now in the lobby of the Student Services Building at $4.50 a copy. Students who purchased a copy last year may pick it up in the same location weekday afternoons.

Eric McLamb, yearbook editor for the 1978 book, tried to make this the most comprehensive book with the best coverage, staff members said. The 1978 book had more color and more pages than ever before. The "Heart" layout, pages 72-73 is in competition for a national award.

September 7, the yearbook staff held a dedication banquet at Tuesday's for Dr. B. Frank Hall for his outstanding service to UNCW. Dr Hall was instrumental in establishing the Department of Philosophy Margie E. McLamb, editor of the 1979 book, wanted to encourage everyone to order there 1979 yearbooks now at $3.00 a copy.

"I'm looking forward to the Nursing proposal will be sent to UNC Board of Governors by trustees

by Robert S. Brown
Staff Writer

At their July meeting the Board of Trustees unanimously approved the adoption of a new nursing program for UNCW. The proposed program would give students the option of acquiring an associate nursing degree in two years or continuing in the program for a four year baccalaureate degree. It would also allow practicing nurses, currently holding an associate degree, to return to school to obtain a baccalaureate degree.

The trustees have submitted the proposed program, along with a resolution to act on it, to the Board of Governors. The B.O.G., charged with the long range educational planning in the 16-campus UNC system, is expected to decide at its fall meeting whether authorization to plan the program should be granted.

According to Academic Dean Daniel Plyler, if authorization is granted it would take a full year to plan the framework of the program, another year to implement it without interrupting the ongoing educational process and three or four years before it could be fully developed.

Plyler admits there "may be some potential controversy" over the plan because of its innovative approach of offering an associate and baccalaureate degree program simultaneously. UNCW is the only university in the state offering an associate degree in nursing, which is usually the responsibility of community colleges. Relatively few North Carolina universities offer baccalaureate degrees in nursing. (See Nursing, page 5)

University again records 'biggest yet' class on registration day

by Kirk House
Staff Writer

It was only two weeks ago. Everyone remembers it—the drop/add line, the 90 degree weather, the I.D. photo line, the car decal line, etc., etc.—all part of the #1 collegiate sport: Registration Day.

This past registration day over 4000 bodies pushed, squirmed and shoved their way to a new school record. Each year it has been the same—the "biggest yet."

Some changes may be made for next year's registration process, according to Student Affairs Vice-Chancellor William Malloy. All of the Student Affairs operation, which includes I.D. photos and student locator cards, will be pulled out of the mainstream of registration. This will eliminate the big bottleneck students found awaiting them at the back of the gym. The academic part of registration, however, will remain essentially the same.

"The academic registration itself went very smoothly this year," said Dr. Malloy. "I think they did a beautiful job of accommodating everyone into some kind of schedule. A real effort was made on the part of both faculty and administration."

The long lines at drop/add were pretty much unavoidable, said Malloy. The problem is that everyone tried to get their schedule switched around on the first day.

"They all want to go ahead and get it over with right away," said Malloy, "and naturally this creates quite a log-jam."

Most state-supported universities have been seeing the same growth trend over the last decades, but UNCW's rate of growth has been phenomenal. Student enrollment here has more than doubled in the last six years, according to Malloy.

"In 1972, when I came here," he explains, "the enrollment was about 1800. This year we have over 4000 students, 3800 of whom are full-time."

The 1978 enrollment represents an increase of 200-250 over last year's student body, says Malloy.

"We can see certain areas of the state where much of our growth is coming from," he explained. "It is no longer just the people of Southeastern North Carolina. Many students are coming from the Piedmont—Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh. Of course they like the idea of living so close to the beach."

"We have become more well-known in the past few years," he continued. "Our sports program has undoubtedly contributed to that. Moving into NCAA Division I has really helped put the school on the map."

"Several of our academic departments have gained quite a reputation. Of course the biological sciences, which includes the marine lab, is the big one. Our Department of Economics and Business is also very good, as is our Education Department," said Malloy.

"Our Art Department, which Staff Photo by Neal Huntley is fairly new, is also gaining prominence. I think it will really blossom," he added. "We are more and more able to compete with big schools like Carolina or State. There are not many things that the big schools can do that we can't," stated Malloy. "Academically I think we are just as good; we're just on a smaller scale."

"There are also some advantages that we have over bigger schools," he continued. "Because we are smaller, we have much closer ties between students and administration."

"I keep sort of an 'open-door' policy here in my office," said

Malloy. "Any student that wants to see me can just walk right in. I'd say that even the Chancellor feels the same way."

"I'll bet you won't find it that way at Carolina or State," he added.

A difficult job for the college is keeping the building program up with the pace of student growth.

"We just opened a new dorm this year, but we still had 300 more students who couldn't get a room on campus. Another dorm will be opened by next year. But we've practically outgrown that one already," Malloy explained.

Authority has been granted, however, to plan two more dorms, a new cafeteria and possibly a new student union as well.

"We don't want to go too fast," warned Malloy. "We're trying to provide decent facilities, yet keep student costs low. And that's pretty tricky," he said.

"Kids will be shopping around more for a school that suits them," said Malloy. "Because of UNCW's attractive location, inexpensive costs and facilities on a par with bigger schools, we anticipate the school will do as well or better than most."

Legislators' attitudes of supremacy forecast danger for SGA

From the appearance of attitudes expressed by many members of the Student Legislature at its first meeting last week, there is a dangerous theory growing within that body which says that the Legislature is the supreme authority in almost all matters of student government and student activities. This theory is dangerous not only for students involved in activities which must deal with the Legislature, but in the end it could be dangerous for student government here as a whole.

The legislators' attitudes were expressed in part action, part talk. The action involved campus radio station WLOZ and a proposal to allow a senior business seminar group to serve as a consulting agency to the station for business matters. Few would debate the merit of the plan itself--WLOZ could use some help in its business affairs and the seminar's advice would not be binding policies for the station's management to follow.

The problem comes with the way the Legislature handled the proposal. WLOZ officials were not represented effectively or consulted appropriately before the Legislature made the decision to authorize the project. The Legislature has no business making such decisions about any campus organization without first approaching the organization's leaders.

We wonder why the business seminar even felt it necessary to approach the Legislature about the matter. WLOZ management is the only group who should have approved or rejected the proposal.

This particular project is not objectionable in itself because, by its design, it is really harmless to the station's operations. The eyebrows are raised because of the precedent the Legislature's action may set. Are we to assume that legislators will start making operational policies for all groups that receive SGA funds?

What are even more disturbing about the Legislature's attitude are the sentiments expressed at the meeting. Vice-president Francis DeLuca seemed to sum it up most directly: "The radio station likes to think that (they have the final authority) but in the end we (the Legislature) control the money . . . We are the final deciders."

No one has challenged the Legislature's authority to disperse SGA funds, and if they did so it would be useless. That power is specifically spelled out in the SGA constitution.

But the tool that SGA has used to check expenditures of funds after they are allocated has been the power to freeze funds of any group. That is an implied power which is not spelled out in the constitution, although one that raises few questions of legitimacy.

The problem enters when legislators use this power as an inappropriate license to interfere in the internal decisions of a campus group. As long as there is not evidence of significant mismanagement or misapplication of funds, the Legislature has no right to interject in an organization's operations.

The most significant danger that this situation presents is for the SGA itself. Right now, it enjoys more power to determine what happens with student activities money than any other student government in the UNC system. If the administration decides that the Student Legislature is abusing this privilege, it can diminish that authority as it sees fit.

The decision concerning WLOZ this week was an unwarranted abuse of the Legislature's power. If such continues and grows, administrative reduction of that power is perhaps the only course available to check that abuse.

Administration Officials deserve credit for acting on complaints

Improvements in campus food service have been a concern of UNCW students for the past several years. Complaints have been lodged at university and food service administrators alike with little in the way of positive response. That is, until this year.

Over the summer, the university contracted with a new food service firm, Professional Food Service Management. Since that time, major changes have been made in the service provided to on-campus students as part of their residence contract and other students, faculty and staff who chose to take advantage of the university cafeteria.

The improvements have included a re-shaping of the cafeteria staff whose attitude toward students was too often as if they were doing a big favor for those they served. Physical improvements are also to be noted with new interior designs adding a more pleasant atmosphere for diners.

The quality of food served has also reportedly improved, and the promise of such special touches as "theme dinners" will be a significant addition to the food service.

At first glance, one would be likely to congratulate the new food service managers for all the needed improvements they have brought with them. But doing that alone, one would omit many people who have also pushed for the changes--behind the scenes.

These people, of course, are university administrators who are charged with overseeing food service on campus. Many of the changes in the cafeteria are directly due to specifications laid down by university officials when they began their research for a new food service contractor.

These administration officials, so often accused of turning a deaf ear on student needs and complaints, can deservedly be recognized for their response to this important student concern. In this instance, it appears that student opinions have been heard and action has been taken which has led to improvement. Students can't ask for more than that.

Competency tests are not the solution to widespread problems in state's education

The statewide high school competency test, which grew out of Governor Jim Hunt's commitment to improving the level of instruction in North Carolina's public school system, has raised protests from those who claim it is "culturally biased," most notably minority groups. Although in this case those protests have little validity, there is a danger in requiring passage of the test by all who view the test as a cure-all for widespread problems within the state's secondary education system.

In the past decade and a half, the state paid more attention to its university system than public high schools, allowing them to fall behind in quality. While schools throughout the nation drifted toward career-oriented curriculums then experienced a "back-to-basics" movement, the rural and relatively poor school systems which dominate North Carolina, especially the East, remained largely stagnant.

When the wave of integration forced on stubbornly segregationist communities hit the state, the schools greeted it with little more than a "make-the-best-of-it" attitude. Other forces left their marks too: student-parent apathy, discipline problems and new moral attitudes, among the most widespread.

The biggest irony of the state's public education system is seen in comparison with the state's university system. UNC is a nationwide leader in many academic fields and the potential growth of the 16-campus university system is enormous. The state legislature's commitment to UNC remains firm; witness the recent appropriation of millions of dollars to begin the process of obtaining a veterinary school at N.C. State. (In that particular case, the money would have been better spent elsewhere.)

Jim Hunt ran successfully for governor in 1976 largely on a pledge to upgrade the state's educational system. The competency test is a part of his administration's overall plan, as are commitments to reduce the student-teacher ratio and improve reading instruction.

The disparity among the large, wealthy school districts and the small, poorer districts within the state is not a myth.

The quality of students' educations depend almost entirely on the happenstance of place of birth.

Probably the most innovative--and potentially successful--parts of Hunt's program is the recently announced "equalization" fund which would direct state funds to those poorer school districts to help them keep pace with larger systems. This signals a broadened role for the state in education, usually considered a local province.

But past experience has proven that the state needs to step in more than it has. More than 40 of the state's 145 or so local school districts still do not provide a teacher salary supplement that would help attract better qualified teachers. The state cannot, of course, provide such supplements; I only mention this as an illustration of the disparity in the state's school systems.

The problem with many of the poorer school districts has been their failure to recognize the real problems within their schools. They have funded new, modern buildings while ignoring the instructional programs that they offer. They have asked teachers to become babysitters while encouraging them to use "social promotion" as a means of keeping class size to normal levels.

Parents, teachers and, especially, students are now showing their disgust.

Education is seldom a creative process anymore; it's more of an endurance to most.

Competency tests have been hailed by critics of the school system as the answer to all the woes. Students will no longer get a diploma if they can't master the very basic skills needed to survive in the world, they say.

But the competency test is in effect attacking the problem backwards. After the student has gone through the educational system, a measure is made of what that student has gained from the twelve years. By that time, it's too late to effectively correct the problems or make up for what was missed.

If the state is going to administer these tests, it must accept the bulk of responsibility for those that don't measure up because, in most cases, it will be the failure of the schools which lead to the failure of the students.

Overall, however, competency tests are needed. Any student who cannot perform the basic skills that are a part of the test should not be awarded a diploma which tells the world that he/she can.

The state has to face up to its past negligence and accept its responsibility to provide remedial education to students who fail the test. Remedial education at this stage may likely prove unsuccessful; but it's not likely that a diploma will prove very valuable either.

Student government elections set

The Student Government Association Elections Commission has set Thursday and Friday, Sept. 21--22, for freshman class and legislative elections. To be filled are the positions of president and vice-president of the freshman class, two freshman class senators, and seven student body representatives-at-large.

Unlike years past, all students will participate in the fall elections as the seven representatives-at-large will be voted on by the entire student body. Only freshmen will vote in their class elections.

Other class officers and legislators, as well as the student body president, vice-president, attorney general, and chief justice, were elected in the March general election. All elected officials serve from the time of their election until

All regular full-time freshmen are eligible to file for the four freshman positions and all regular full-time students are eligible to file for the seven legislative positions. A petition for office must be completed by all candidates who wish to have their names appear on the ballot.

Legislature holds first meeting; officials call for activism

by Bobby Parker

SGA President Wayne Dunlap and Vice-president Francis DeLuca both called for a more active role for student government this year at the first meeting of the Student Legislature Thursday night.

Dunlap, encouraging SGA officials and students as a whole to "actively protest" when they disagree with official decisions, said that he hopes to be "moving in a different direction in student government this year."

SGA, Dunlap said, should "work in more of a business-like manner" than in previous years. He said that the legislators should be more involved with committee work rather than attending to all SGA business at weekly Legislature meetings.

Dunlap cited the need for more student activism as what he considered the major concern of SGA officials this year. He said that increased activism would involve "more numbers" of students and that the "place to start that activity is within the SGA."

"We should go through the proper channels . . ." Dunlap continued, "but if something isn't right and students as a whole feel it isn't right . . . then I feel it's the responsibility of student government to take action."

Vice-president DeLuca echoed Dunlap's call for a more active student government and said that the most effective way to represent students is to get "new voices" working through SGA.

The year's first legislative meeting was devoted largely to a proposal from a business class to act as a consulting firm to campus radio station WLOZ and a discussion of the proposed University Program Board.

The Legislature approved the request of Dr. Steve Harper's senior business seminar class to consult with the management of WLOZ in matters of operation, budgeting and long-range planning. The group's suggestions will not be binding of the station's management.

Senior President Patricia Blanton, who introduced the resolution to approve the project, said that the group will not interfere in programming or personnel matters of the station.

Station representative Chris Mann said, however, that he did not think the station's staff would "react very favorably" to the Legislature's decision. He said that WLOZ already has a consulting firm which specializes in legal and operational consultations for broadcasters and that the proposal might "put restrictions" on the station's management.

Several legislators said that the station "couldn't lose" with the arrangement because the services would be provided free of charge and the station management could ignore the group's advice if it chose to do so. The proposal was approved without opposition.

The discussion of the proposed program board is an extension of debate from last spring after which the Legislature decided to put $45,000 of SGA funds aside until specific plans for the set-up of the board can be worked out.

President Dunlap said Thursday night that he wished to "get programming out of the (legislature)" so that it could address "issues of more concern to students."

Representative Jon Faili expressed concern that the board would take control of funds spent on programming out of the Legislature's hands. As currently proposed, the board would get a lump sum from the Legislature and disperse it among various program groups, including concert, fine arts, lecture, homecoming, and student union committees.

Faili said that Legislature representatives and programming committee members should get together and devise a "solid plan of action" which would take "a little bit or compromise" from both groups.

A meeting was scheduled for Monday afternoon to discuss the program board. Meanwhile, the Legislature allocated $1000 of the frozen program funds to the executive fund to cover emergency program expenses.

In other legislative action, President Dunlap nominated Nancy Reagan to be SGA

treasurer. She was approved by the Legislature and presented a budget report setting total expected SGA revenue for the year at $111,490.57. Allocations thus far total $110,639, leaving $851.57 in unencumbered funds.

Unencumbered funds are significantly lower than at the beginning of last year when the total was several thousand dollars.

Vice-president DeLuca made two nominations to the Student Court, Jim Sardi and Joe Thompson, who were approved without opposition.

A request for $1500 from the Football Club for equipment purchases was referred to the Finance Committee.

Absent from the meeting were legislators Chuck Black, Ray Blackburn, Susan Hardison, Dan Osborne, and Tammy Lancaster. The Legislature will meet this Thursday at 7 p.m. in room 227 of the Chemistry-Physics Building. All interested persons are urged to attend, SGA officials stated.

Time catches up with National Student Association in disputes

by Bill Sonn

(CPS) -- Every once in a while, time catches up to the National Student Association. NSA, the Washington, D.C.-based organization that calls itself the representative of the American student body, has periodically suffered major internal disruptions that reflect issues and attitudes emerging on campus. In the mid-sixties, some members tried to move NSA into more anti-war and civil rights activism. In 1971, some wanted it to spend more time lobbying in Congress on those issues. And in those cases, the dissidents lost. Sometimes they left to form their own organizations. Thus were Students for a Democratic Society, the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, Young Americans for Freedom, and the National Student Lobby born.

Something similar happened at the 1978 NSA convention in Boulder. Even as NSA and the National Student Lobby voted, in the spirit of unity, to merge into something called the United States Student Association (USSA), upheaval touched virtually every floor vote.

The disruption seemed to reflect not only the emerging power of schools in the Sun Belt states, but the apparently growing conservatism of the American student body.

Specifically the dissidents who called themselves the Reform Caucus at the convention protested that USSA, and NSA and NSL before it, had emphasized "social issues" like affirmative action, abortion rights, and the J.P. Stevens boycott at the expense of "educational issues" like financial aid and the nature of the proposed U.S. Department of Education; not accurately represented student opinion because the majority of the board of directors was appointed, not elected, by the convention; and not accurately represented student opinion because wealthy schools could afford to send more delegates to conventions than some larger, but poorer, schools.

The Reform Caucus was soundly defeated on all those points. But the defeats, ceded floor co-chair Chip Berlet, might have had more to do with caucus members inability to master convention procedures than with actual voting strength.

The reformers, significantly enough, drew most of their support from Sun Belt States like California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, and North Carolina. True to pattern, they left the convention grumbling about seceding from USSA and starting a new and different organization.

Among the moderate reformers was Mike Blackstone, who was eventually elected to the USSA board from the University of Alabama. After the convention, he told Alabama's Crimson and White that "right now I just don't know how worthwhile belonging to (USSA) is." Jeb Hensarling of Texas A&M and Bob Richey of Louisiana State said they were definitely taking their schools out of the organization. The Colorado delegation left even before the final gavel, saying it would not tolerate a proposed USSA investigation into its affirmative action policies.

Peter Young, president of Associated Students at Cal State-Sacramento, had been empowered to take all California state schools out of USSA if the organization didn't approve proxy voting. Proxy voting would, Young figured, give his state system a full convention floor voice without spending the hundreds of dollars necessary to bring an entire California delegation on the issue.

Young, alone among the reformers, actually won a compromise on the issue. USSA still prohibits proxy voting, but will henceforth give California votes extra weight. Yet Young saw it as a hollow victory.

"I've still got a lot of problems with" the compromise. California, he said after the convention, might secede anyway. Perhaps with an eye toward forming a new organization, he wrote a post-convention letter to the reformers thanking them for their support.

Other reformers are moving faster. Southeastern Conference student body presidents, for example, will meet in Athens, Ga., on October 14 to discuss what to do about membership in NSA.

Jeb Hensarling of Texas A&M insisted that "This isn't an ideological split. It's about what kind of organization this is going to be." Yet Hensarling's own complaints about USSA's fiscal management, and the reformers opposition to spending funds in pursuit of "social issues" led many to perceive the reformers as a wholly conservative force.

Individually, the reformers didn't seem ideologically united. Hensarling, for one, describes himself as a "Ford Republican." LSU's Richey is a Reaganite, while Peter Young passed out Jerry Brown buttons at the convention.

Their unity instead was founded on a conservative view of organizational issues. They generally agreed that the organization was being distorted by its emphasis on social issues. They also objected to the ways the group arrived at positions on social issues.

In a typical case, LSU's Richey recalled he "saw red" when he got an organization position paper on the Bakke case. "Here they were opposing Bakke, and telling congressmen they were speaking for me. Hell, they never even asked me."

The decision to oppose Allan Bakke's admission to medical school, it turns out, was made by the board. But the board, says Hensarling, isn't representative of USSA members. About 40 percent are appointed as "at-large members," usually chosen from headquarters staff. Another 20 percent are also appointed and represent various special interest groups like the Third World Caucus and the Women's Caucus. The remaining 40 percent of the board members are elected at the conventions.

Yoga offered in short course

"Yoga: An Added Dimension to Living" will be offered as a non-credit short course at UNCW beginning Sept. 19.

Mary L. Humphreys, who has both baccalaureate and masters degrees and six years of public and private instruction in yoga, will teach the course which meets on Tuesdays from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Sept. 19 through Nov. 7 in room 119 Trask Coliseum.

Cost of the 16-hours of instruction is $26 which must be remitted to the Office of Continuing Education at UNCW, room 119 Hoggard Hall, on or before Sept. 12.

Described as the world's oldest and most respected system of physical conditioning, yoga also serves as an effective mind/body technique.

A non-competitive activity, yoga allows each practitioner to proceed at his or her own pace and within his or her range of capabilities. Students will be taught postures for improving muscle tone, increasing flexibility and circulation, stimulating nerves and endocrine glands, equalizing weight, and controlling breathing.

Each week of the eight-week series will be devoted to one of these topics: Youth and Flexibility, Health, Deep Relaxation, Nutrition, Revitalization, Breath Control, Meditation, and Philosophy and Workshop.

Semester withdrawal dates set by administration

The following dates for withdrawal have been determined and will apply during the Fall Semester 1978. A student may withdraw from the university or from any course during the period of Aug. 30 - Sept. 6, without having the course entered on his record.

Students who officially drop an individual class or classes or withdraw from the university from Thursday, Sept. 7, through Tuesday, Nov. 14, will have a grade of withdrawal passing or withdraw failing entered on their record. A grade of WF does count as hours attempted and consequently will affect the grade point average.

Any student who finds it necessary to withdraw from the University must give written notice of his intention to the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. A student who fails to give notice of his intention to withdraw will receive a grade of F in all courses.

Students withdrawing from an individual class or classes or from the university during the time period beginning on Wednesday, Nov. 15, and ending Tuesday, Dec. 19, will have a grade of F recorded for each withdrawal.

But Plyler also believes the program will receive some "special consideration" relating to the findings of a thorough, eight-month feasibility study which was conducted last year and the consistent, outstanding performances on state nursing exams by UNCW graduates.

If the program is approved, UNCW will be able to build on what it has and strengthen the current two-year program while organizing the new four-year program. If it is rejected the alternatives are to retain the current program or phase it out in order to attain a baccalaureate program.

In the nursing profession a baccalaureate degree is more sophisticated and of a different quality than the associate degree which UNCW currently offers. In terms of education it would impart more depth and breadth about the nursing profession to the students and prepare them for roles an associate degree nurse theoretically is not qualified to hold.

It would, in short, provide more general background and greater concentration in specialized areas of nursing. The baccalaureate degree also inherently contains more status than does the associate degree.

Last year's feasibility study was conducted according to the guidelines set up by the National League for Nurses and included the five-county southeastern North Carolina Area Health Education Center area. The questions raised ranged from what would be the impact on the community and its health needs in terms of its demographic and social characteristics to how could it provide for the future health care in the area.

To determine the possible impact questionnaires were given to doctors, directors of all institutions providing associate nursing degrees in eastern North Carolina, students, nurses and administrators to poll their opinions on the future of health care and the benefits of a baccalaureate program at UNCW.

After a review by a 22-member steering committee composed of doctors, nurses, faculty and persons from the community, recommendations to approve the program along with the committee's findings were sent to the Board of Trustees for further revision.

Speed reading course to be offered

Speed reading, a non-credit short course, is again being offered by the Office of Continuing Education. This course will cover such topics as: how to pre-read; how to improve speed; paragraph analysis; skipping and skimming; questioning; and words, phrases and sentences.

Special reading problems will also be explored such as concentration and memory; study; note-taking and tests; research; newspapers and magazines.

and Tuesday evenings from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. through Oct. 24.

Cost for both the entire 24 hours of instruction and a basic text will be only $65.00. All inquiries and/or registration information should be received by the Office of Continuing Education, room 119 Hoggard Hall (telephone 791-4330 ext. 238) by Sept. 8. Cancellations and refunds will not be allowed after Sept. 12.

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Rowing club strokes ahead

The UNCW Rowing Club is recruiting for men and women's crews for the 1978-79 competitive season. Any student, male or female, is welcome to join with no experience necessary. This year is especially important because of the formation of a Women's Crew at UNC-by-the-sea. All women are especially urged to attend.

An organizational meeting for new members will be held on Wednesday, Sept. 13 at 4:30 p.m. in the Business Building, Room 103. A slide presentation on the UNCW Crew's Team will be shown. Upcoming races and various projects will also be discussed. Fall season begins with learning the basic fundamentals and the terminology of rowing in both classroom and on-the-water sessions. For experienced oarsmen and new members who have mastered the above techniques, the fall is a time for physical conditioning and "smoothing out" the finer points of rowing. Also during this time, two fiberglass molds will be made for use as practice shells to supplement the racing shell. A new Trailer will also be built for traveling to races.

Spring season is the competitive intercollegiate season.

Members practice on-the-water at least 5 days a week. Regattas (races) are usually 2,000 to 10,000 meters long at speeds of 12 knots. This year the UNCW Crew will be competing against such teams as UNC-Chapel Hill, Citadel, University of Tennessee, University of Virginia, University of Alabama, Rollins College, and the University of Tampa and many others.

If you can not attend, please contact Rich Haislip (Room 309, Galloway Hall), president of the UNCW Rowing Club or Dr. John Anderson, coach of the men's crew, in the Business Building (Ext. 303).

Soccer squad downs Warren Wilson 5-1

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

There was only one thing hotter than the temperature Saturday afternoon and that was the Seahawk soccer team.

Playing before a small, but enthusiastic crowd, the Hawks opened the 1978 soccer season with a convincing 5-1 victory over highly-regarded Warren Wilson. UNCW dominated play the entire game, applying constant pressure on the Warren Wilson goal.

The first half developed into a scoreless struggle, until the midway point. Then, constant Seahawk pressure paid off as Gil Castilla scored twice in less than two minutes on assists by Eddie Brock and Chi Chi Mercado. That closed out the first half scoring with UNCW taking a 2-0 lead at the break.

Warren Wilson rallied back in the second half when Stephen Gill scored a goal at the 28:57 mark. 2-1 was as close as the Owls would get. The Hawks scored on a penalty kick by Mercado at 26:16 to take a 3-1 lead. Then, at the 24:06 mark, Ted Kort scored with an assist from Ed Donahue to make it 4-1. Castilla closed out the UNCW scoring with his third goal of the game with 8 minutes remaining.

UNCW totally dominated the game. The Hawks offensive pressure resulted in 25 shots-on-goal while good defense allowed the visitors only 7 shots. UNCW also had 8 corner kicks to 2 for Warren Wilson.

Gil Castilla, last year's leading scorer, led the Hawks with three goals and seemed to be everywhere the ball was.

Commenting on the Seahawk victory, goalie Charlie Ingold remarked, "I thought we played together really well in our first game." In addition, Ingold said that Warren Wilson's players seemed to tire as the match progressed.

The next match for the Seahawks will be an important one. Wednesday, the team travels to Chapel Hill to take on the Tar Heels. Last year, the Hawks defeated Carolina 6-3 at Wilmington. It was an important victory because the Heels had one of the top-rated soccer teams in the South. UNCW hopes for a similar outcome in the Wednesday match.

Coach Lane, looking ahead to the Carolina game, said he felt that it would be a tough, physical match, with the Heels "keying on Castilla."

McClure volunteers coaching skill for Football Club

by Kirk House
Staff Writer

What happens to those all-star college football players when their playing days are over? Well, one of them is living here in Wilmington, and he's helping out this year with the UNC-W football club.

Bryan McClure, former ECU quarterback and member of the Miami Dolphins, leaves his banking job every day at 5:00 and is out on the UNC-W athletic field, volunteering his time as an assistant coach for the club.

A native of Charlotte, N.C., McClure played at Meyers Park High School, leading them to a state championship.

After graduating in 1964, he had the choice of playing at several big universities, including Clemson and Alabama. His two older brothers had played at Clemson, so he was naturally drawn there.

Then he visited a cousin of his in Greenville, who was playing for ECU. At that time, ECU was building its football program under Clarence Stasovich. McClure could be the "big fish in a little pond" at ECU. Besides, he liked the girl/boy ratio - about 3:1 - and the "partying campus" of East Carolina. So it was off to Greenville.

In 1968 McClure signed with the Miami Dolphins. He worked out with them in spring and summer, and played in several exhibition games. Then a severe injury left his leg broken in three places. He had to remain in a cast for nine months, and his football-playing days were over.

He returned to ECU and got a Master's degree in Urban and Regional Planning, then began a job here in Wilmington with the Redevelopment Commission in 1972. The following year he took a job at Cooperative Savings & Loan, where he currently works as a loan officer and appraiser.

Football is still in his blood, though. He helped organize the Pop Warner Football League in Wilmington (sort of like a Little League for football). This past summer, through some business transactions, he met Don Corey, who was to be this year's coach of the football club. The talk got around to football, which didn't take very long, and pretty soon McClure had agreed to help out with the school club.

"There's really a lot of enthusiasm in this ball club," says McClure about the UNC-W team. "That's what I'm glad to see. I'm impressed with these kids - with their enthusiasm, their talent. We've got talent here that you wouldn't believe. There are several players who made all-conference in high school... one guy who can do the 100 in 9.4, another who can do it in 9.6."

"There is no telling what we could do if the school would (See McClure, page 8)

Seahawks see-saw to defeat

by Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

In what started out to be a one-sided contest, the UNC-W Central Piedmont football game turned out to be one of the most exciting games for the UNC-W Seahawks. There was action from the opening second with the Seahawks trying an outside kick and recovering it at the Central Piedmont 45 yard line. It wasn't long before Central Piedmont intercepted a Doug Browning pass that was returned to the Seahawk 19. The Seahawk defense, however, playing a tough game in the trenches failed to let Central Piedmont advance the ball. This resulted in a field goal try by the Charlotte team, but, this excursion proved to be of no avail. Central Piedmont later had the ball two more times within the Seahawk 20, but the devil dog defense (a name given to the Seahawk defense) proved to be as tough as the pre-game publicity reported it to be.

The Seahawk defense halted another Central Piedmont drive deep in Seahawk territory on a Ricky Clemmons interception. With the ball on the Seahawk 6 yard line, quarterback Doug Browning's pass was intercepted at the 10 and ran in for a touchdown by Central Piedmont. The extra point was good with the score 7-0 with 6 minutes left in the first quarter.

An exchange of punts left Central Piedmont with the ball on the Seahawk 45. Central Piedmont's flanker, Herbert Washington, got loose and was spotted in the end zone by Quarterback Lawrence Campbell, where he received a 45 yard bomb for a touchdown. The extra point failed with the score 13-0 Central Piedmont leading. Late in the first quarter Central Piedmont intercepted another Seahawk pass at the 15 and returned it for a touchdown. The extra point failed. The score was now 19-0 in favor of Central Piedmont.

The second quarter seemed to be a replay of the first quarter. The Seahawks failed to advance the ball on their first possession in the second quarter, so the punting unit came in. With the ball on the 50 yard line, C.P. Quarterback Campbell went back to pass, once more looking for his favorite receiver Herbert Washington. Campbell found the flanker heading for the flag where he lofted a sparrow to the waiting hands of Washington. The extra point failed and now the score was 25-0 in favor of Central Piedmont. Late in the second quarter, after the Seahawk defense was penalized for a late hit, C.P. quarterback Lawrence Campbell rolled left from his own sixteen and fled into the end zone for C.P.'s fifth touchdown. The extra point kick was good and the half ended with the score C.P. 32, UNC-W 0.

The second half opened with Darrell Franks at quarterback for the Seahawks. With the ball on the Seahawk 25 after the kickoff, the Seahawk high-octane offense came to life. On the first play from scrimmage, Franks threw a 30 yard pass to Paul Wood, a sticky-fingered Junior split end out of New Bern, advancing the ball to the C.P. 45 yard line. On the very next play, Clifton "the outlaw" Thomas burst off tackle for 30 more yards advancing the ball to the 15. With bronco fullback Dave Morehead churning up yardage inside and Thomas going outside, the Seahawks advanced the ball to the C.P. two yard line where Morehead finally went in to score untouched. With a good two point conversion the score went to 32-8.

Central Piedmont was unable to do anything following the kick off because of a stubborn Seahawk defense. C.P. punted with the ball ending up on the Seahawk 30 yard line. After a fullback power play, Frank rolled left where he spotted Thomas on the 37 yard line where, the sprinter took the ball to the C.P. 18 for a 62 yd. gain. The speedster Thomas then took the first down handoff and with some super blocking went off tackle for 18 yards and a score. The extra try failed with the score C.P. 32, UNC-W 14.

With the Seahawk offense now in high gear, the defense became even more brilliant when safety Mark "mad dog" Doll picked up a Campbell fumble on the Seahawk 39 yard line and scored on a 61 yard line fumble recovery run. The two-point conversion try failed and now the score was 32-20. The third quarter ended with the Seahawks scoring 20 points in that quarter.

The fourth quarter opened with an impotent offense by the Central Piedmont team and a fired-up team from Wilmington. Action took place early in the fourth quarter with Clemmons getting his second interception of the day deep in C.P. territory. With the ball on the C.P. 8 yd. line, fullback Dave Morehead went up the middle to the 4 yd. line. However, a penalty moved the ball back to the 19 yard line. On third and goal at the 19, Franks hit Wood on what appeared to be a touchdown but was called back because of an illegal man down field. The Seahawk offense lost the ball on downs but later intercepted a C.P. pass on the Seahawk 43 yard line. Franks then found Wood again streaking down the side line where they combined for a 57 yard bomb. The two point conversion try failed leaving the score C.P. 32, UNC-W 26. With time running out the Seahawks had one more go at it when the defense recovered a fumble with 1 minute remaining. Franks, however, looking for his tight end on a pass play threw where a C.P. defensive back stepped in and intercepted thus ending the Seahawk threat. The final score C.P. 32, UNC-W 26. The game was marred somewhat by questionable calls one of which was the ejection of defensive standout tackle Melvin Toot.

Outlaws emerged from local scene

The story of the Outlaws is a prime example of the benefits of a strong local music scene. Florida can claim to have spawned what could possibly be considered the three best southern rock bands — Allman Brothers, Lynyrd Skynyrd, and the Outlaws. All three bands grew to greatness because they transcended the limitations of regional music to appeal to an international audience.

The Outlaws are originally from the Tampa Bay Area of Florida, an area with a diverse audience that is exposed regularly to the best in contemporary music.

There are many striking parallels between the careers of Outlaws and Heather's Harvey Arnold which made the pairing natural. Both bands got their start on the usual bar-dance circuit. Both bands had the ability to stamp their own identity on songs lifting them above the average local group.

Constant touring and playing live in clubs tightened their sound and also built up a strong regional following. But all this took years to achieve.

Nine years ago I had a chance to see the Outlaws in the early stages of their career. At the time they were still playing opening slots in clubs for the Allman Brothers. It was immediately obvious that the band had a lot of promise. At the time they were doing a cross section of original and cover versions of other artists. Their sound was a melting pot of rhythm and blues, folk-rock and British invasion. Although the sound was not as mature as the crisp tightness that is their trademark now, the interesting blend of influences to create something unique had begun.

In 1974 they were signed by Clive Davis for Arista Records.

The first album contained the hit "There Goes Another Love Song" and the FM classic "Green Grass and High Tide." It was this song that sent the critics raving. The interesting interplay of three lead guitars creating melodic textures interspersed with blistering guitar work that never loses its energy lead rock critic Frank Johnson to compare it to "Stairway to Heaven." The overall effect is sound that could be called the Eagles meet Lynyrd Skynyrd.

Reduced student admission is only $5.00 and $5.50. Tickets are available at the University Bookstore beginning Thursday, Sept. 14.

The UNC-W football club operates right now at a club status. It is not a school-funded, varsity sport at the intercollegiate level. McClure feels, however, that the team has the potential to play in NCAA Division III.

As a club, all the team's expenses are paid for by the players themselves. McClure estimated that each player has probably over $100.00 invested in equipment. Add to that such costs as traveling expenses, and playing becomes not only a question of talent but one of finances.

The team has no facilities such as blocking sleds or dummies. A set of goalposts was recently donated to the club so that they can host their home games on the UNC-W athletic field.

Games are scheduled with other clubs from Central Piedmont Community College, Robbins College, and even schools like N.C. State and Carolina, which have similar clubs for non-varsity players.

Last year the club made its debut with a 6-6 season. In its second year, the team hopes to do even better.

"We've got the potential that, if the school would really get behind us, we could beat anybody in NCAA Division III within two years," says McClure.

With an outlay of $100,000, which is really peanuts compared to what some schools spend on football, McClure says UNC-W could lay the framework for a varsity program, using only the talent and coaching staff they have right now.

He would like to see the school just buy some playing equipment, put up some bleachers, and pay traveling expenses. Hiring a full-time coach could even come later, he suggested (McClure and the other coaches receive no salary). "For $15,000, you could hire a top assistant—I mean a top assistant—from a Big Four School," stated McClure. "After a couple years' recruiting, the school would have a super program."

"It wouldn't take much to get started, though," said McClure. "All the school needs to provide is an arena and the facilities."

"But this is the time to get started. This is the time to start building traditions, to start building rivalries," he continued. "You have to start somewhere."

"You know," said McClure, "there are two ways to build a school's reputation. One is to be fifty years old, and UNC-W is far from that. The other is through an outstanding sports program."

"This would mean a lot for the school," he continued. "No sport today has the prestige of football. It would add to the school's program. It would increase school spirit, both with students and with alumni."

What are the chances of UNC-W having such a program? "I think there are good chances," says McClure. "The Board of Trustees was supposed to have conducted a feasibility study on the subject, but it got dropped through some misunderstanding. I think we can convince them to take it back up, though. The players do want it, and I think most of the students do too."

'Who'll Stop the Rain:' From scag to riches

The movie industry has found a fishing hole with the subject of the Vietnam conflict. Just this year, they have pulled out a real beauty in the movie "Coming Home." But as luck would have it, they had to throw back some carp: "Heroes," which was a little heavy on the bathos, and "The Boys in Company C," which floundered on the deck for a while before it died. "Who'll Stop the Rain," based on the Robert Stone novel Dog Soldiers, is a brown trout; that is to say, worth catching but nothing to brag about.

It all starts when a war reporter, played by Michael Moriarty (Eric Dorf in television's "Holocaust"), turns into a heroin smuggler to combat his ever-increasing feelings of helplessness and paranoia due to the pointless violence of the war. His reason for turning smuggler is really the result of a specific incident when American flyers bombed elephants so that they could not be used as pachyderms for the Viet Cong. Says Moriarty, "In a world where elephants are pursued by flying men, you naturally want to get high."

The two kilos of un-cut heroin are sent stateside under the protective wing of Moriarty's good friend and ex-marine, Ray Hicks (Nick "The Deep" Nolte). There, Nolte and Moriarty's wife (Tuesday Weld) will sell it for about twenty times the original investment.

But someone else wants the scag. Some experienced drug-thugs in the states have been alerted to the arrival of the heroin (guess by whom?) and they try to scare Nolte into selling for nothing.

A chase ensues across the Southwest as the experienced dealers take on the inexperienced dealers. Nolte proves to be the brains and brawn of the operation, using his soldier's sense and power acquired in Vietnam. What else can you expect of a Marine that reads Nietzsche? On the other hand, Moriarty turns out to be a jellyfish, not because of the war, but because he was your basic pencil-neck to start with.

Nolte gives an effective performance as the tough soldier-of-fortune. He exudes a calm strength throughout the movie that contrasts nicely with the high-strung character Weld portrays. Moriarty's baby-face pulls through again, becoming a kind of ever-changing mosaic made up of elements of fear, and derivatives thereof. It is interesting to see the horrors of Vietnam as they affect Moriarty. The director, Carl Reisz ("The Loves of Isadora"), uses the easily shook-up character of Moriarty to convey terror without an extreme use of blood and guts. So the result is that the audience feels the same fear but without the typical convention of bloodbath.

There is not much preaching about the immorality of war or senseless death. What you do get is a strong feeling that the war created a void in each of the character's lives, so that this heroin becomes the nucleus of their existence.

"Who'll Stop the Rain" is now playing at New Centre Cinema.

APO holds biggest rush

The brothers of Alpha Phi Omega would like to thank everyone who turned out for their rush last Friday night. It was one of the biggest rush parties ever, APO members reported.

Many prospective pledges may have been hampered by the large crowd in their attempts to contact the pledge-master about their interest. Because of this, the deadline for pledging will be extended until Sept. 18.

On that night, the brotherhood will be voting on pledges and the ritual ceremony will be performed later that week.

Prospective pledges should contact Tommy Long (pledge-master) in Belk 112 or call 799-7557 before 5:00 on Sept. 18.

For the rest of the semester, all brotherhood meetings will be held at 7:30 in C-114, every Monday night.

'Weekend fever' hits UNCW students seven nights a week

by Ray Warren

The afternoon arrives. Labs are over. The sonorous voice of Professor Nytol is no more. Suddenly the minds of UNCW students are empty of algebraic formulas and English adverbs. Weekend fever reigns. Whether it is actually a weekend night is irrelevant. Seahawks (or at least some of them) will party any night of the week.

Those interested in flashing lights, undeniably danceable music and omnipresent action slow dry their hair, don dresses or slacks and dress shirts, and head for one of the discos popular with students.

The Four Winds Disco can be found at the overpass north of the university on Market Street. Located in a building which has undergone several reincarnations, it is now operated by new owners, Craig Johnson and Tom Brown. Live entertainment is provided one to two nights a week. Two nights a month feature beach music. A cover is never charged except when there is live entertainment.

One unique feature of the Four Winds is a fifty-dollar door prize which is awarded each Friday night. The winner is selected by drawing his or her membership card number.

The light show at the Four Winds is relatively simple, but adequate. There is a mirror ball, strobe and some colored lights. The decor consists of a warm and neat-looking natural wood panelling. Three levels insure an intimate mood, but good view for all seats. There are no pinball games to ruin the atmosphere by injecting a "beer hall" mentality.

Boom Boom's Disco is packed each weekend with gyrating young people who are there to enjoy a spectacular light show. The club features numerous mirror balls, a lighted wall, strobes and assorted rotating "cop lights." Sometimes a bubble machine adds to the atmosphere, and each weekend dancers swirl in an exciting dense fog.

Manager Rick Stough claims to have the only mascot among local discos. Boom Boom, the monkey, lives at the club with a beautiful parrot and exotic tarantulas. All three lend atmosphere to the proceedings.

The games include pool and pinball, as well as free backgammon and chess. All games are separated from the dance area, though still visible from it.

The Woodshed is the oldest of Wilmington's major discos. Recent improvements have resulted in a larger and lighted dance floor. Various light effects are amplified by the extensive use of mirrors on walls and columns. The club is otherwise bathed in the soft luminous glow of candlelight.

Games at the Woodshed are visible from the dance floor but confined to a single corner. Long known for its beach music, the Woodshed has begun, according to manager Bob Beam, to "mix its music up" and take on a more typical disco appearance.

Membership at all three clubs is good for one year. The Four Winds and Boom Boom's charge $5.00. The Woodshed requires $10.00 from its members. Guests may accompany members at Boom Boom's and Four Winds. At the Woodshed each person must buy their own card, though guest cards (good for one night) are available for $2.00.

Boom Boom's never allows jeans of t-shirts and pushes the slogan "dress to impress." The Woodshed prohibits jeans on weekends and t-shirts at all times. Four Winds will tolerate "dress jeans," but does not allow t-shirts.

All three permit brown bagging. At Boom Boom's one's bottle must be surrendered to the bartender who mixes drinks. This also prevents theft of one's liquor. At Four Winds the bottle remains with the patron. The Woodshed also allows a patron to keep their bottle, but claims to be the only place including lemons, limes and cherries in their set-ups "for extra class."

The Olympia at Wrightsville Beach

All three clubs have weekend waitresses. Boom Boom's wear tuxedo uniforms while the Woodshed girls wear smart green dresses.

State A.B.C. laws being so tough (and enforcers so arbitrary) we have been unable to get beer price information from club owners. We did learn, however, that Boom Boom's features 10 cents draft before 11 p.m. on Tuesday nights and a cover-all ($2.50 for beer and/or set-ups) on Thursdays. The Woodshed has 25 cents beer on Tuesday night and free beer for women on Wednesday. Four Winds reportedly runs similar specials, but we haven't been able to find out which nights.

Cover charges vary. Ladies get in free at the Woodshed on Wednesday and at Boom Boom's on Tuesday and Wednesday. The Four Winds never has a cover for disco. Live entertainment commands from $2.00 to $5.00 or more. Weekend cover at Boom Boom's is about $2.00. At the Woodshed it is $2.00 for guys and $1.00 for women.

Those who would rather drink and talk or drink and romance away from the disco scene can also find several opportunities away from the disco.

The Crest at Wrightsville Beach features live rock bands Thursday through Sunday. Not a flashy place, the Crest nonetheless is packed on most weekends with lovers of non-disco rock. Beer only is served (no set-ups). Ladies are free on Thursday. On Friday and Saturday there is a $2.00 cover charge.

Next door to the Crest is a 19th century-type saloon called Olympia. The unique decor includes a working model train which travels above the patrons. Pinball and foosball are available in the back room. Each Wednesday night features a bluegrass or folk band. No cover is charged, but the hat is passed. On weekends one should come early to get a table.

Beer and wine are featured at the Pony Express. The "Pony" also features deli sandwiches and an Old West atmosphere. There is occasionally entertainment, but never a cover. Located at 4001 Wrightsville Avenue, this is a favorite place for "bull sessions" and other important conversations among college students.

Other favorite night places (which we were not able to contact) include the Three Penny Gallery in the Cotton Exchange (downtown Wilmington), the Patio next to Hardee's on College Drive, and Wit's End and the Palm Room at Wrightsville Beach. The Three Penny Gallery features occasional entertainment and a pub-like atmosphere (including darts). The Patio has games and proximity to campus. Wit's End is known primarily as a game center and a place to wander in and out of at the beach. The Palm Room specializes in beach music and sandwiches and attracts a slightly older crowd than the others.

Wherever one chooses to spend the evening, he or she is likely to find friends and classmates. On any night a fair percentage of the UNCW student body will be out partying or dancing. After all, that's what living by the sea seems to be all about . . . weekend fever seven days a week.

Contraception: Key to responsible sexuality

by Ray Warren

Many students enter college as virgins. Some graduate in that condition. Whether or not a student chooses to engage in sexual activity depends on a variety of variables, but an intelligent choice requires knowledge of all the ramifications involved, including unplanned pregnancy. For far too many UNCW students, consideration of this problem comes only after preventive measures can be of no use.

Some students are married. For them, unplanned pregnancy may or may not present a problem. Other students have strong religious convictions that preclude pre-marital sex. A large number of students (perhaps a majority), however, will have sexual relations outside of the marriage relationship. These students almost universally lack the resources and maturity to become either instant marriage partners or single par-and unnecessary abortions can be prevented by the responsible use of contraceptives. Several methods of birth control are very effective and easily obtainable in Wilmington.

Birth control pills, possibly the most popular form of contraception, are available from several sources. Private physicians are one alternative. Those not desiring to go that route, however, have several other options.

Open House (10th and Grace Streets) operates a clinic from 7-11 p.m. on Thursdays. The clinic offers an examination for pills only (not diaphragms or IUDs) and there is no charge. The client must, however, pay for her prescription.

Another free clinic is offered by the New Hanover County Health Department. Those interested should telephone 763-2931 for an appointment. Both day and night hours are available.

tween the hours of 8:30-11:00 a.m. on the first Monday of each month. Those who desire an appointment should call 763-1164.

The reported dangers of the "pill" are a matter of controversy. Generally, however, this concern has been for women over 40. In any case, the danger of pill-induced illness is quite small and the health risks of pregnancy or abortion are far more serious.

Since the pill works by suppressing ovulation, missing only one day may lead to ovulation and destroy its effectiveness. If one day is missed another method should be used until the beginning of a new menstrual cycle. The woman should continue, however, to take her daily pill in the interim.

Diaphragms, which block sperm out of the uterus, are available from private physicians. They are designed to fit the individual, so one cannot "borrow" a friend's. Without the spermicidal jelly, Linda Janinski (UNCW's family nurse practitioner) warns that they are "not to be trusted at all." Janinski also says that the diaphragm must be put in place only a few hours before intercourse and cannot be worn all day. After intercourse it should not be removed for several hours to insure its effectiveness.

Condoms are available at many local stores. Kroger and

K-Mart are the closest outlets to the campus. Most drug stores also carry them. The shy can obtain them from several local service station ment and/or destroying sperm.

Interuterine devices (IUDs) are not recommended for those women who have not restrooms (including the '76 and Shell stations at the corner of College Road and Oleander Drive).

Used with foam, the condom is one of the most effective means of contraception. Says Janinski, "Most of our lives women accept the responsibility, when actually the method third on the list (of effectiveness) is one the man can control."

Foam alone is less effective than foam and condom, but still of appreciable effectiveness. Foam is available at the same places (except service stations) which sell condoms. Janinski reminds users that the foam must be applied before each act of intercourse. Suppositories and creams are not as effective as foam. All work by retarding the movement totally developed. Also, they tend to cause problems for those who have never been pregnant. They must be inserted by a private physician.

Rhythm is unreliable and only for those for whom pregnancy is an acceptable possibility. Withdrawal is not very effective due to a man's ability to secrete sperm prior to ejaculation. According to Janinski, taking a chance is never wise.

"It is not uncommon for people to come in here (the health center) pregnant and say 'I can't believe it... it only happened one time!'" In Janinski's words however, "that's all it takes."

Those who think they may have become pregnant can find out free from the Student (See Contraceptives, page 14)

'Sgt. Pepper' a tribute to Beatles

English musicians have been on the American music scene strongly since the Beatles broke in the late 60's. "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" was the title of one of their biggest hits released in June 1967.

This summer the "Sgt. Pepper's" lp once more appeared on the record racks in its original form to accompany the soundtrack of the movie of the same name.

The primary performers on the soundtrack are the group Pete Dinklage and British Peter Frampton. Teamed together this has got to be one of the greatest remakes ever to hit the charts.

One of the best cuts by the new team is "She Came in Through the Bathroom Window" and of course "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band." Not all of the Beatles hits are performed by the newly formed group. The Bee Gees do "Nowhere Man" and also with the help of Paul Nicholas of "Heaven on the Seventh Floor" fame, they perform the title cut. Robin Gibb also makes one of the cuts solo with "Oh Darling!" Peter Frampton, performing "The Long and Winding Road," shows strong talent.

A new name appears on the lp. Sandy Farina who sings "Here Comes the Sun," has dined the song like a pro.

Appearing on the album are two people who usually are not connected with lp's. One such person is comedian Steve Martin who does "Maxwell's Silver Hammer" which is along the same line as his recent "King Tut." George Burns does a great job with "Fixing the Hole" and accompanying Frampton and the Bee Gees with "Being For the Benefit of Mr. Kite."

Guest performers from the movie also appear on the soundtrack doing Beatles hits such as "Got to Get You into My Life" (Earth, Wind and Fire), "Get Back" (Billy Preston), "Because" (Alice Cooper), and "Come Together" (Aerosmith).

The double album is certainly a great tribute to one of the best groups ever to hit the record charts--the Beatles--who remained on the top of the charts until their break-up.

FELLOWSHIPS

Science foundation offers fellowships

The National Research Council will again advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's National Needs post-doctoral fellowships. Panels of scientists and engineers appointed by the research council will evaluate applications of all candidates. Final selection of fellows will be made by the foundation, with awards to be announced in February 1979.

Approximately 130 National Needs post-doctoral fellowships will be awarded for research and study on scientific problems related to national needs in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, as well as in interdisciplinary areas. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, nor in history, social work, or public health.

Application may be made by persons who will have earned by the beginning of their fellowship tenures a doctoral degree in one of the fields of science listed above or have had research training and experience equivalent to that represented by a Ph.D. degree in one of those fields, and who will have held the doctorate for no more than five years as of Nov. 3, 1978. All applicants must be citizens of the United States and will be judged on the basis of ability.

The basic stipend for post-doctoral fellows is $1000 per month; a limited travel allowance is also provided. In addition, the National Science Foundation will provide the fellowship institution, upon its request, with a cost-of-education allowance on behalf of the fellow to assist the institution in meeting the cost of tuition and fees, and in providing the fellow with space, supplies, and equipment. Fellows are also provided a special allowance of $300 to aid in defraying costs associated with their research. No dependency allowance is available.

The deadline date for the submission of applications is Nov. 3, 1978. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

Graduate fellowship candidates sought

The National Research Council will again advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of graduate fellowships. Panels of eminent scientists and engineers appointed by the National Research Council will evaluate qualifications of applicants. Final selection of fellows will be made by the foundation, with awards to be announced in March 1979.

Initial NSF graduate fellowship awards are intended for students at or near the beginning of their graduate study. Eligibility is limited to those individuals who, as of the time of application, have not completed post-baccalaureate study in excess of 18 quarter hours or 12 semester hours, or equivalent, in any field of science, engineering, social science, or mathematics. Subject to the availability of funds, new fellowships awarded in the spring of 1979 will be for periods of three years, the second and third years contingent on certification to the foundation by the fellowship institution of the student's satisfactory progress toward an advanced degree in science.

These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education or business fields, in history or social work, for work leading to medical, dental, law or public health degrees, or for study in joint science-professional degree programs. Applicants must be citizens of the United States, and will be judged on the basis of ability. The annual stipend for graduate fellows will be $3900 for a twelve-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

Applicants will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test aptitude and scientific achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on Dec. 9, 1978, at designated centers throughout the United States and in certain foreign countries.

The deadline date for the submission of applications for NSF Graduate Fellowships is Nov. 30, 1978. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

Minority awards granted

The Committee on Institutional Cooperation has established two fellowship programs designed to increase the representation of minority group members among those who hold doctorates in the social sciences and the humanities.

Funded by grants from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation that total more than $1 million, the program will provide 25 two-year fellowships in the social sciences and 10 in the humanities for the 1979-80 academic year.

The Committee on Institutional Cooperation (CIC) is the academic consortium of 11 Midwestern universities—the Big Ten universities and the University of Chicago. Recipients of the fellowships may use them at any one of the eleven CIC universities, provided they are accepted for admission to graduate study.

The fellowships provide full tuition plus a stipend of $4000 for each of two academic years. Two additional years of support will be provided by the doctoral candidate's institution as long as normal progress towards the Ph.D. is made.

Anyone who has or will receive a bachelor's degree by September 1979 is eligible to apply for the 1979 competition. Graduate students may also apply.

The deadline for application is Jan. 15, 1979, although students are urged to apply as early as possible in the fall. A one-step application procedure combines application for the fellowship with application for admission to any of the CIC universities on a single form.

Anyone desiring detailed information about either fellowship program should write to: CIC Minorities Fellowships Program, Kirkwood Hall III, Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana 47401.

Associateships awarded

Applications are now being accepted for the National Research Council's Associateship Programs for 1979. These programs provide scientists and engineers opportunities for postdoctoral research in fields of atmospheric and earth sciences, chemistry, engineering, environmental sciences, life sciences, mathematics, physics, and space sciences.

Awardees conduct research on problems of their choice in selected federal research laboratories at approximately 65 United States. The programs are open to recent recipients of the doctorate and, in many cases, to senior investigators also. Some programs are open to non-U.S. citizens.

Approximately 250 new awards will be made on a competitive basis in 1979. The basic stipend (subject to income tax) will be $18,000 for recent recipients of the doctorate. Higher stipends are awarded to senior investigators. The awards include relocation grants and funds for limited professional travel during tenure.

Applications must be made to the NRC and must be postmarked by Jan. 15, 1979. Results will be announced in the spring.

Application materials and detailed information about specific opportunities for research are available from the Associateship Office, JH 608-D1, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418, (202) 389-6554.

Minority graduate service identifies opportunities for education

Many minority students, entering their junior or senior years of college or already possessing undergraduate degrees, may be thinking about continuing their education in graduate school.

If so, Educational Testing Service (ETS) and the Graduate Record Examinations Board can help identify opportunities for advanced study.

Through the Minority Graduate Student Locator Service, developed by ETS and offered by the GRE board, college juniors, seniors and graduates who are members of racial and ethnic minorities in the United States can make their intentions known to graduate schools seeking such applicants. There is no cost to students for this service.

information bulletin. It is the same form used to register for the Graduate Record Examinations. The GRE are comprehensive aptitude and advanced tests used in the admissions process by many of the nation's graduate schools. Students need not take the GRE to use the locator service.

The information bulletin explains all students must know to participate in the service. Copies of the bulletin can be obtained at most colleges or by writing to MGSL, Box 2615, Princeton, N.J. 08541.

To take part in the locator service, students describe themselves by answering a series of questions on the registration form that ask for ethnic background, undergraduate major, intended graduate major and other information about educational experience and objectives. This information is placed in the locator service file and made available upon request to participating graduate schools. GRE scores are not included in the locator service file.

Each graduate school establishes its own criteria for identifying students from the locator service file based on ethnic background, expected major field of study, degree objective and state of residence. Students who use the locator service and meet the criteria set by a particular school will have their names automatically submitted to that school.

Students who want to make information available to graduate schools three times during the academic year must have their registration forms in by Sept. 22. A student who misses that deadline and has the form in by Nov. 6 will be able to participate twice. Graduate schools will correspond with those students in whom they are interested to inform them of the procedures to follow in applying for admission.

Because of the interest among graduate schools throughout the nation in attracting qualified minority students, it is likely that a student's name will be sent to a number of institutions. Because a graduate school may not wish to contact all students whose names it receives, students are not informed of the identity of those institutions to which their names have been forwarded.

The locator service is not an application to graduate school or for financial assistance and does not constitute a guarantee of admission or financial aid. It is designed only to supplement a student's own efforts to locate and seek admission to a suitable graduate program and to find resources for financial assistance.

Information students supply for the locator service file is treated confidentially and is released only to participating graduate school and scholarship programs.

Last year, more than 21,000 students made use of the locator service, and student information was provided to more than 120 graduate schools around the country.

The GRE and the MGSL are administered by ETS under policies determined by the GRE board, an independent board affiliated with the Association of Graduate Schools and the Council of Graduate Schools in the U.S.

Women sought for crew team

Last June 15-18, the National Women's Rowing Championships were held on Seattle's Green Lake under the sponsorship of the National Women's Rowing Association. Over 60 schools and clubs were represented by some 800 oarswomen! It was indeed a spectacular event and a sure sign that women's rowing has arrived.

Women's rowing was started at Wellesley College in 1875, and over a century later, the sport was given a substantial impetus by its inclusion for the first time in the Olympics at Montreal in 1976. This year, both a sculling and a sweep team was sent to the European championships in August in Denmark, and to the World Championships in New Zealand.

In North Carolina, women's crews have been launched at both UNC-Chapel Hill and at Duke University. Elsewhere in the South, Tennessee, Tampa, FIT, FTU, and others have joined the fleet. It's time for UNCW to be represented. This fall the Rowing Club is actively recruiting for its women's crew with an eye toward competition next spring in the second annual Azalea Festival Regatta. If you are interested in competing on the women's crew, call Dr. John Anderson at Extension 303 or see him at Bear Hall, room 105. The Rowing Club's "Welcome Aboard" meeting for all new members will be held this Wednesday, September 13 at 5 p.m. in Bear Hall, Room 103.

Monday, Sept. 18

The UNCW Circle K Club will hold its next meeting at 7:30 p.m. in room 221 of the Chemistry Building. Special entertainment is being planned for this meeting. Circle K is a coed service club and any interested person is welcome to join.

For all those interested in joining the Gymnastics Club, the first meeting will be at 7 p.m. in the back of Hanover Gym. For more information see Ms. Kraft in the P. E. Department.

Tuesday, Sept. 19

Phi Beta Lambda will hold its organizational meeting in room B-111 at 2:30 p.m.

NOTES

The Omega Psi Phi fraternity is now accepting candidates for the Lampodae Club. An interest club will be established prior to membership into the Lampodae Club.

All interested persons should contact either Doug White or Paul Hardison.

Any student interested in participating in a non-credit physical fitness class should contact Mr. Mel Gibson in the Department of Physical Education. The class will meet Monday through Thursday at 3:30 p.m. beginning September 18 and ending October 12.

SNCAE is holding a membership drive in King Hall. The club is open to all education majors. For $7.50 members receive three education journals, $250.00 liability insurance for field work and many other benefits. For more information, stop by the education office in King Hall.

Phi Beta Lambda (professional business fraternity) would like all business students and new freshmen considering business majors to attend the first organizational meeting of the year. The meeting will be held in B-111 on Tuesday,

The Seahawk/September 13, 1978/17

Sept. 19 at 2:30 p.m. This is an important meeting, so please try to attend. Also, bring your ideas on projects or social activities that you would like Phi Beta Lambda to participate in during the upcoming months.

Forum, the student journal of marine sciences, is looking for students who are interested in learning how to write and edit scientific papers, prepare graphs and illustrations, or work on a scientific journal. A staff meeting will be held on Thursday, Sept. 14, at 4 p.m. in room 234 of the Marine Science Building. Any interested student is more than welcome to attend. Experience is not necessary.

The UNCW Sailing Club will attend several out-of-town regattas this year at Clemson, Carolina and Duke. Anyone interested in sailing, racing, fellowship or all three are welcome. First meeting is Thursday, Sept. 14, at 6:30 p.m. in Hoggard 103.

Sorority representatives meet

Representatives from five national women's fraternities will be on campus this Wednesday to help UNCW women answer questions about sorority membership for themselves. Brochures, pamphlets and slide shows will be used to clarify the goals of the various groups and to explain the benefits and responsibilities of sorority membership.

In addition, there will be ample time for those who attend to ask questions. The turnout at this informal gathering will be used as an indication of sorority interest at the university.

Sororities sending representatives include Delta Sigma Theta, whose Theta Iota chapter was re-established here this spring after an absence of some years; Phi Mu and Zeta Tau Alpha, both of which had chapters here in the late 1960's and early 1970's; Alpha Kappa Alpha and Delta Zeta, who desire to establish new chapters on this campus.

Coordinated by the Office of Student Activities, this informal meeting will be held in the fifth and sixth floor lobbies of Galloway Residence Hall on Sept. 13 from 7 to 9 p.m. Interested women are encouraged to attend.

Business seminar students to serve as consultants to WLOZ

by Bobby Parker

A senior marketing-management seminar group under the direction of business professor Stephen Harper will serve as consulting agency for campus radio station WLOZ this semester as a result of approval given the venture by the Student Legislature Thursday night. The consulting will be the senior project for Harper's class, and students in the seminar will advise WLOZ management on organization, budgeting and planning.

The seminar participants will not, however, be involved with programming or personnel matters of the station's operations.

Paul Dennison, a member of the seminar group, told the Legislature that the business students wanted to assist the station in long-range planning, over a five to ten-year period; long and short term budget priorities; and in organizational matters such as compiling job descriptions for WLOZ staff positions.

Senior class President Patricia Blanton, who made the motion to approve the project, said in an interview that the station "can't lose from listening" to the seminar students, noting that the advice that station management receives can be accepted or rejected by the station.

Blanton said that the station's managers should retain full control of programming and technical decisions, but, pointing to past organizational problems, she added that the station could use help "in the business end of it."

WLOZ station manager Steve Hess, interviewed Sunday, said that he had not yet been officially notified of the Legislature's decision but he had been informed of it through a station staff member who attended Thursday's meeting.

Hess said that the matter was "handled very badly" because the Legislature failed to contact the station's management before making its decision. Some legislators had suggested Thursday that the decision be postponed until WLOZ representatives could be consulted, but members of the seminar group said that they needed to know whether or not the project was approved before Tuesday, Sept. 12.

Hess said, however, that "there can be a lot of good come out" of the project for WLOZ.

"I don't mind at all that they're coming in because they're coming in to help," Hess said.

Hess stated that "ultimately, (the legislators) do have . . . the power to cut off money" for the station and, thus, would have the final authority in the station's operations.

But Hess said that some legislators may have acted under the impression that past organizational problems experienced by the station are still prevalent.

"We're on the ground (and) we're on the move," Hess said, noting that 32 persons attended the most recent staff meeting compared to last year when less than 15 staff members showed up at the largest staff meeting.

Hess said that the Legislature's action had been "all of a sudden" and that station representatives should have been included in the decision process.

Senior President Blanton, a business major who had consulted with Dr. Harper about the project before Thursday's meeting, said that the reason the seminar group went before the Legislature instead of to WLOZ was that the group was "afraid the radio station wouldn't like it."

Chris Mann, the only member of WLOZ's staff present at the legislative meeting, told legislators that he felt station staff members would "not react very favorably" to the project. Mann said that the staff would feel that the action would "put restrictions on us."

Mann told the legislators that WLOZ is already paying a consulting firm from Philadelphia which specializes in legal and operational consultation with broadcasters.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap told the Legislature that a committee should be appointed to investigate WLOZ's "problems" and to set guidelines for the station's operations. Dunlap said that there is "certainly evidence of mismanagement as far as business operations" of the station.

SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca said Thursday that the legislature is "the final deciders" for radio station policy.

"The radio station likes to think that (they have final authority) but in the end we control the money," DeLuca stated.

Representative Jon Fail proposed an amendment to the resolution to stipulate that the seminar group report its progress to the Legislature regularly. The resolution, as amended, passed without opposition.

Program board brings long-needed improvements to campus

With the adoption of a plan to incorporate student programming through a university program committee, UNCW moves into a new era for campus entertainment which will be a unified effort to provide the best that the resources of the student body here can support. The idea that programming should be a cooperative venture that involves long-range planning and many points of view is long overdue on this campus.

For many years, programming has been handled by various SGA committees who have been responsible for only one phase of campus entertainment. Concerts have been the province of a concert committee, lectures that of a lecture committee, dances of a dance committee and so forth. Often, conflicts have arisen as a result of this method—for instance, a movie is scheduled on the night of a lecture or concert.

Another major problem with the old method has been that each committee has aimed at pleasing a general audience with programs that appeal to the broadest audience. This has resulted in few efforts to provide programming for minority audiences—not only racial and ethnic minorities but cultural minorities as well.

The program board, by design, will coordinate the planning of entertainment by bringing together those people who know best the concept of programming. Because these people will be viewing the program schedule as a long-range plan to provide a comprehensive program which covers a semester, students will find that their money is being better spent on the type of entertainment that more students will be taking part in.

The regrettable aspect of this program committee is the time it took SGA officials to agree on a plan of implementation. The concept was first proposed last spring, largely on the advocacy of Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene, and the SGA approved the idea while freezing nearly half of this year's budget ($45,800—not an unusual figure for a year's programming) over the summer until an "acceptable" outline of the program board could be worked out.

THIS NEWSPAPER'S OPINION

What the Student Legislature failed to do was to carry the plan from there. No planning was done over the summer by SGA officials, with the exception of President Wayne Dunlap who worked with Assistant Director Greene on some basic elements of the board.

When the Legislature resumed regular meetings this year, concern was expressed about the role of officials of the Student Activities Office, namely Greene and Director Linda Moore. Various legislators described Greene and Moore's attempts as a "power grab" to take programming out of the hands of SGA and under control of their office. Those concerns were overstated, unrealistic and probably sentimental ramblings of rebels without a cause.

If the Legislature had been truly concerned about the role of Student Activities officials and also providing a functional program board, they would have taken more initiative in the planning of the program committee. Instead, they relied on Student Activities officials to devise an outline while at the same time expressing the desire to keep control away from these very officials.

The delays that occurred can not be corrected now because it is already too late to implement the provisions of the board for this semester. At least, however, we now have a concrete proposal for programming that, if allowed to run its natural course without Legislature of Student Activities officials interfering unnecessarily, will provide the UNCW student body with much better programming during the years to come.

There's plenty to do on campus; just use a little imagination

by Robert S. Brown
Staff Writer

It's only the fourth week of the school year and already I've heard snorts and grunts from students complaining that there is nothing to do on campus. I heard one freshman actually say, "There's nothing to do on this campus." Then another one asked me, "When do things liven up around here?"

Of course I was shocked by his attitude and told him I hadn't heard of any promised resurrection in the near future but if he played his cards right he might win a free membership to the Friday afternoon Silent Majority Grateful Dead Club.

With that happy news on his mind he heaved a gigantic sigh and continued kicking a pine cone across the front lawn while calling it "mother." I thought to myself, "Myself, you know, he's one of those suicidal whackos on the brink of desperation. You ought to help that boy." So I dashed into action and when I was by his side I told him, "If things get rough you can always have a good conversation with one of the fire hydrants on campus." He thanked me quickly and continued on his way.

I was already feeling better for having done my good deed for the day and kept trucking on toward the cafeteria until I met still another freshman who obviously had already heard about the great listening powers of fire hydrants. I asked her if she had a problem and she explained that this was her first time away from home and that she was bored.

"... and then there was Ellen. She had this sneaker fetish that just wouldn't quit..."

I told her my heart bled for her and we became fast enemies.

As I devoured a hamburger and a large coke I hoped that I wouldn't be sick for the rest of the day. And as I read the latest edition of the Seahawk I realized that the freshmen just didn't know where to find the hot spots of frivolity.

The cafeteria is one of the best spots for this. What is one thing that everybody needs that reminds them of their animal origins and brings them closer together? Food. Certainly food is essential for life. If everyone complaining about how dead it is on campus would eat a friend to liven the day, this situation might change.

If enough people did this—it might start a trend and save thousands of dollars of student activities fees and leave the power hungry senators with nothing to do but suck on their pencils.

Another hot spot is the traffic office. Why, just last week I witnessed a bizarre incident that was well worth the daily vigils I had begun between classes.

An upper classman came raving through the door waving five parking tickets he had received in the past year. "I'm not gonna pay this and if you think I am, you're cra-a-zy!" he burred as his face reddened, for effect.

"What's the trouble?" honked Miss Congeniality as she squatted behind her desk without looking up.

"I paid my $25 for a parking sticker and just because I put it in my rear window instead of on my right rear bumper I got a ticket the officer even wrote down that I had a sticker What more do you want?" wheezed the distraught student.

"We want your money," snickered the friendly secretary. And she continued, "You know, we've got to enforce this law. If we give you a break we'd have to do the same for everybody else and we couldn't make any money doing that, could we?"

"I don't care what you do," growled the student, "but you're not getting my money. I won't pay it."

"But the law must be enforced," purred Miss Congeniality as she pulled out her service revolver and shot the surprised student right between the eyes.

It's amazing how vivid that event is in my memory and I'll never forget the laugh that Miss C. and I had about it that whole afternoon.

Another fun spot is the greenhouse where you can go watch the flowers grow and maybe learn something about gymnosperms at the same time.

And if you're looking for something real exciting to do you can always (in daylight hours) watch the Weather-vane on top of Hoggard Hall change direction.

So I don't want to hear anybody complaining anymore about our campus. There's plenty of things to do if you just use your imagination.

VIEWPOINT

by Ray Warren

The most influential force in American society isn't big business (as liberals fear) or big labor (as some conservatives fear) or even the devil's emissaries (as some preachers fear). The one force that directs American policy is the press elite.

The press elite should not be confused with the press in general. By common usage, the press includes all newspapers, magazines, two-bit tracts and the broadcast media. The press elite, on the other hand, consists of less than a dozen organizations. These include the major broadcast networks; newspaper news services such as A.P., U.P.I., the Times, and the Washington Post; and three major newsmagazines.

The monopolistic power of this elite can be illustrated using Wilmington as an example. All local sources of national news are controlled by that group. Radio and television news is a product of the national network and the Star News gets an overwhelming portion of its non-local news from news services.

As one must realize, the first amendment ideal of a land of an independent and competitive press is unrealized.

What we learn of national events is determined, in large part, by a handful of executives and editors.

The press elite is remarkably monolithic in its political orientation. It, and its "me too" imitators like the Raleigh News and Observer, are invariably socialistic, inclined to secular humanism, and well to the left of the political center. Outright censorship is a rare but occasionally used weapon of the press elite. The news services manifested their hostility to the pro-life movement by partially (or in NBC's case totally) blacking out coverage of a "March for Life" which drew over 80,000 people. A similar March for the ERA (which the elite supports), on the other hand, was lavishly covered. The difference in treatment had nothing to do with the importance of the issues or the sharpness of public disagreement. The sole criteria for coverage was agreement with those who control the flow of information.

Abortion is by no means the only issue manipulated by the press elite, but it does prove highly illustrative. For instance, notice how the antagonists are identified. Those favoring legal abortion are almost always called by the favorable term "pro-choice" (instead of pro-abortion), while those favoring protection for the unborn are negatively labelled anti-abortion (rather than the preferred "pro life").

Selective censorship is another favorite trick to discredit viewpoints unpopular with the barons of information. Most people are unaware that the president of the Right-to-Life Committee for the past two years was a black Methodist (female) surgeon or that the percentage of Protestants opposing abortion is not significantly different than the percentage of Catholics. The media leaders want to portray the debate as a sectarian cleavage and facts that contradict that view are simply not reported. Likewise, the non-ideological character of the abortion debate is camouflaged by ignoring the pro-life contribution of liberals such as Jesse Jackson, Senator Mark Hatfield and Dick Gregory.

The powerful versatility of the English language is perhaps the press elite's greatest tool. Code words which characterize their mentality are easily recognizable. For instance, "social justice" is undefined (at best a matter of opinion), but liberals are always said to be seeking it, while conservatives are portrayed as thwarting it. When they speak of "special interests," you can bet that this negative connotation does not refer to liberal sacred cows like big labor, but to somebody seeking to do just what newspapers must do (make the free market work).

Ideologue is a term reserved for committed conservatives. Opinionated liberals are called men of principle. Conservatives are smeared by adjectives like "ultra" (what makes Ronald Reagan an "ultra"-conservative?? Ultra by whose standards?). We've been indoctrinated to abhor extremes, so labeling one as "ultra" is a serious attack. Yet we meekly accept the media's right to define the political center.

As a final warning, one should beware of the old "guilt by association" trick. For instance, only an infantismal portion of the women opposed to ERA' or "lesbian rights" belong to the Klan or John Birch' Society. Yet these groups are almost always mentioned in describing the opposition to those cherished goals of the press elite. Of course, one should not condemn these women because the Klan agrees with them anymore than one should condemn advocates of brotherhood because the communists claim to support brotherly love. The Klan's involvement in the issue is, in short, irrelevant and inconsequential. Mentioning it, however, hurts the Klan's unwilling allies and, not surprisingly, hurts the credibility of those opposed to the press elite.

The solution to the problem of unfair news reporting is not (God forbid) government intervention. The market for ideas, like any free market, will work only so long as we, the consumers, demand a better product. Whatever our eventual ideological orientation, responsible decisions require unbiased information uncolored and unabridged by editors determined to think for us.

Looking out for biased identifying terms, becoming aware of guilt by association, and protesting the censorship of important events can do much to alter the situation. The greatest way to improve our own citizenship skills, however, is to remember that what everybody "knows" to be true may by only what they were allowed to know. Not questioning such "consensus" makes us no better than all those Germans who never questioned what they "knew" about the holocaust until their Nation was destroyed and six million people died.

Short of stature, high in hopes

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

Once upon a college campus there lived a young girl, short of stature and high of hopes for attaining a respectable education. There co-existed on this same campus a weekly newspaper, engineered and nursed along by a few wild-eyed writers. Being a trifle bug-eyed anyway, our aspiring Lois Lane decided to join the staff of this renowned newspaper.

If only there were enough daylight hours for us poor beginning freshmen! For several days our hopeful staffer wandered around in a haze of schedule conflicts, unable to find five minutes to spare. Such is the fate of naive freshmen who fling themselves at the feet of a bored, cynical advisor. By the time our heroine had dragged herself down the hall of every building on campus and/or had hysterics in the office of every administrative bigwig, it was three weeks into first semester. Almost certainly it was too late to join the newspaper staff.

Hope does spring eternal, or maybe fools just try harder—who can say for sure? At any rate, one afternoon this hopeful reporter was living up to her freshman image by indulging in a pastime known as Hanging Out at the Pub. Suddenly (right in the middle of a rousing game of foosball) she heard the sound of sobbing. Anyone who has ever worked on a newspaper can identify that sound.

Abandoning the foosball table (a silly sport for a someday Erma Bombeck) our girl Friday whizzed up the stairs and through a large door. Sure enough her trained ears had been correct. This was Seahawk Country! And yes, it was deadline day. Members of the staff were engaged in various pursuits such as grinding their teeth, wailing brokenly at the ceiling and staring vacantly at past-due photo assignments.

Our heroine was almost smothered by a sudden feeling of belonging. She strolled in and picked up a back issue of the Seahawk, feeling certain that someday, somehow, her name would appear in print . . . if only in the obituaries, under the heading "Students who sacrificed their sanity . . . and all for the Seahawk."

Wet Willie the most purely 'southern' of 70's emerging groups

On September 2, just a little over two weeks ago, 12,500 patrons in Lenox, Massachusetts paid $7.50 and $8.50 a ticket to see the Outlaws and Bill Chino perform in a sold out concert. Everyone agreed that they had gotten their money's worth, but imagine how they would have felt if they had seen Outlaws, Wet Willie and Louisiana's Le Roux for two to three dollars less per ticket - a much better show at a much better price.

Wet Willie could be labeled as being the most purely "southern" of all the groups to emerge from that section during the 70's. Their musical roots and heritage are crystal clear and easily defined. The sound is pure R and B drawing inspiration from Little Richard, Otis Redding, Wilson Pickett, Clarence Carter and other black performers of the 50's and 60's. Listening to such songs as "Keep On Smiling," "Country Side of Life," "Dixie Rock," "Make You Feel Love Again," and "Street Corner Serenade," it's easy to feel the simple infectious rhythms that pervade the songs; the harmonies on the albums leave a person with the feeling that they had just stepped out of a small southern gospel-oriented church that cover the Mobile, Alabama, Bible belt countryside. But make no mistake about it, this band can wait. They paid their dues in front of countless road-bar audiences, gradually developing into one of the best live bands around today.

The two founding members of Wet Willie are brothers Jimmy and Jack Hall. Jimmy plays saxophone and harmonica and sings lead. Always has. Jack plays bass and sings harmony. Always has. Their musical styles and personalities form the basis of Wet Willie.

The six musicians comprising Wet Willie evolved from classic musical backgrounds. Most everything grew up in a musical family, played in school and local bands, or sang in church. The music they grew up with was rock n' roll, blues, gospel and soul.

Jimmy and Jack grew up in the suburbs of Mobile, Alabama, with an early awareness of the area's musical heritage. Both had played in a number of local bands, including a group called Fox. Following a move to Macon, Georgia, in the early seventies, Fox renamed themselves Wet Willie and released their debut LP of the same name through Capricorn Records.

Marshall Smith (guitars/vocals) also grew up in Mobile. Marshall played with Jack and Jimmy in the late sixties. Following a two-and-a-half year Army career, which included an eight-month stint playing and singing on a USO tour of northern Asia, Marshall returned to the Gulf Coast and met T.K. Lively, later to become Wet Willie's drummer. Marshall and T.K. put together a horn band, Piranha, which is still honking. Marshall kept in touch with "the Willies" and occasionally sat in with them before permanently rejoining his old friends in March '77.

When Mike Duke (keyboard/vocals) joined the Wet Willie family almost three years ago, the group had already recorded one of Mike's songs

Wet Willie

("Trust In The Lord"). Mike was a veteran of a number of local groups (including one with Charlie Hayward, bass wizard of The Charlie Daniels Band) when he took a break to write and made the decision to join "the Willies."

T.K. Lively (percussion) grew up in the Maryland countryside and received his first set of drums for Christmas at age six. Although he had played in a twelve-man show band in high school, he did not become serious about music until after he joined the Air Force and was stationed in Fort Walton Beach, Florida. Except for a year in Viet Nam, T.K. played with the same group, The Total Sound, throughout his Air Force years.

Saturday concert features Heatwave, band of international scene

One of the most refreshing new bands to emerge on the international pop scene in 1977 was Heatwave, the 7-piece group whose debut American single, "Boogie Night," was one of only three singles to be certified platinum (2 million records sold) in the United States by the RIAA over the course of the year. Significantly, "Boogie Nights" was the only one of those three platinum singles to be written by the act who performed it. Moreover, Heatwave's success didn't stop with that record, as their debut album, "Too Hot to Handle," has since been certified double-platinum (2 million units sold) in the U.S. by the RIAA.

Most recently (late-March, 1978) it was learned that the second single picked from that LP, namely "Always and Forever," had climaxed its dramatic top 20-pop/top 5-R&B chart run with RIAA gold certification (1 million records sold) in the U.S.—that announcement coming just days before the release of Heatwave's long-awaited second album, "Central Heating."

Ordinarily, such "overnight success" might be greeted with the kind of skepticism usually reserved for the sensationalistic novelty bands who dominate the disco-pop-R&B scene, and are frequently never heard from again. Heatwave stands quite apart from the rest, however, in that their roots stretch across two continents, and span nearly a decade's evolution. So anyone with a notion that selling 5 million-plus records in America is a cinch had better check again.

Heatwave's leader and founder is Johnnie Wilder, Jr., a dynamic singer who has overseen every step of the band's career. A native of Dayton, Ohio, Johnnie's family includes five brothers, one of whom, Keith, has been the second lead vocalist of Heatwave since his joining the lineup in late 1975. Johnnie's own youthful experiences in Dayton were divided between the acapella doo-wop group he sang with at age ten, the Ivy Leaguers, where he got his first television exposure, and unforgettable singing and dancing roles in such school productions as "The King and I." Later on in Chaminade High School, he gained a reputation as a rigorous competitor whose singing won his share of regional awards with the school choir, as well as critical attention in amateur productions of "Music Man" and "Bye Bye Birdie."

After attending Central State University in Wilberforce for a year, Johnnie enlisted in the Army, and was shipped out to "StratCom" headquarters in Heidelberg, West Germany, at the beginning of 1969. To point a finger at Heatwave's earliest origins, it would be the Cashmeres, a 5-man acapella vocal group that Johnnie organized to sing at service clubs on weekends. Soon he met a group of German musicians calling themselves the Soul Sessions, and they were able to achieve a sound emulating the Chi-Lites, Temptations, etc.

Before the end of 1972 Heatwave was on the road, establishing themselves throughout the Continent, and going through the inevitable changes experienced by every rock band. When they found themselves without a bassman for a date in Switzerland, along came Mario Mantese, an adventurous traveler who fit right in. Born in Madrid, but raised in Biel, Switzerland, since age 5, Mario was playing bass at 14 and gigging in his vels across the Continent, and the times he spent living in such exotic locales as Tangiers and North Africa, Mario is also proud of his diversity, having played in R&B, rock and jazz groups. Just prior to joining Heatwave, he'd spent three years in a fusion band known as Press Low; followed by a brief two month stint in a Spanish club band, the Apollos.

About four months after Mario joined, Johnnie placed an advertisement in "Melody Maker" seeking a keyboard player. After some 25 replies were narrowed down to a couple, one of those was Rod Temperton, an Englishman living in Worms, just twenty miles from Heidelberg on the Rhine River. A native of Grimsby, Lincolnshire, he'd stated out on drums at age 8, and was in and out of several local bands over the next four years. He was a schoolmate of Terry Wincott and John Gladwin and together the three comprised the group Dimples for several years, until Rod was 15. When Rod's best friend, a drummer much better than he, started a band a year later, Rod switched to organ.

In the summer, 1973, after long years of working together, Tommy Harris' untimely departure back home to the U.S. left Heatwave in the curious position of having to use a session drummer for shows. By then, Heatwave had gone through some changes: Johnnie, after years of working with female second lead singers—a couple of whom had come from brother Keith's Hawthorne Express show-band back home in Dayton—decided to front the group on his own; thus Johnnie Wilder and the Chicago Heatwave was born, later tightened to the Chicago Heatwave.

It was that lineup that was playing the Astoria Club in Basel, Switzerland, just after a group known as Samantha & Topman had played there, and split up. S&T's drummer had been Ernest "Bilbo" Berger, an expatriate Czechoslovakian with a stateless passport and a hunger to show Johnnie just how good a drummer he was.

But the young Czech's story, we understand, is far from over. Born in a small town near the Hungarian border, he taught himself to play drums at age 8, when he started with his siblings in the Berger Brothers. The group lasted four years, and then after four years away from playing, he put together a Beatles-style group at 16, called the Spectors.

With the arrival of Heatwave in America for their premiere tour of this country, which kicked off in Texas over the third weekend in March, 1978, statesiders are seeing and hearing a band with some heavy dues-paying years under its belt.

Johnnie Wilder, Keith Wilder, Mario Mantese, Rod Temperton, Bilbo Berger, Roy Carter, and Billy Jones—together in Heatwave as their second album, "Central Heating", again produced by Barry Blue, begins its reign on the charts. Preceding the LP's release is a single, "The Groove Line," sure to become Heatwave's third smash on these shores

Seahawks stun heels

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

History repeated itself last Wednesday, as the UNCW soccer team defeated North Carolina 4-1, in a match played at Chapel Hill. It marked the second time in as many years that the Seahawks have defeated the highly-regarded Tar Heels.

The Seahawks took a 2-1 first half lead on goals by Ted Kort and Gil Castilla. Eddie Brock scored at the 7:00 mark to make it 3-1 and Chi Chi Mercado closed out the scoring with 4:00 left on a penalty kick. Most of the UNCW goals came on break-aways in what was termed an extremely "rough" match. Carolina's lone goal came on a chip shot in the first half.

Although the Tar Heels out-shot the Seahawks, 15-10, goalie Charlie Ingold collected 10 saves.

The victory was very important for UNCW. Prior to the contest, the Tar Heels were ranked Number 5 in the South, while UNCW stood at Number 11. The Seahawks will undoubtedly move up in the rankings as a result of the triumph.

"It was a big win for our program," said UNCW soccer coach Calvin Lane. "It came on the road against a fine team and it proves we have the potential to be an outstanding team this season."

UNCW continues to play on the road this week. Saturday, the Seahawks face Rollins and on Monday, the team squares off against Stetson in Florida.

Outlook bright for women's tennis season

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW women's team opens the 1978 season this Friday amid hopes for a much better year. An improved schedule and some new faces could hold the key.

This season's schedule features 13 matches; 7 away and 6 at home. In addition to the fall matches, there are two definite spring matches with Methodist and St. Mary's and possibly two matches with USC-Conway. UNC and ECU were dropped from the schedule this season. Among the toughest opponents for the Seahawk women are Methodist and St. Mary's.

The skill level of the players is much better this year than in the past, according to Coach Jane Batson. Only 7 women went out for the team, with all but two of last year's squad returning. Two freshmen from Jacksonville, Conchie Gemboys and Gi Gi Trelinski, are expected to make important contributions to this year's team. Both girls reached the semifinals in the state high school tournament last year.

Challenge matches have not gotten into full swing, but a tennis ladder (lineup) is shaping up. Gi Gi Trelinski is

UNCW sports are on the rise

by Cheryl Robinson
Sports Editor

Taking over George Benedict's reign on the Seahawk is the hardest thing I've ever done next to writing this column. There are several reasons for this, one being I don't know a thing about "The Son of Star Wars," one of George's favorite characters. Another reason is, I am a freshman so I don't know very much about UNCW's previous athletics. However, from what I've heard this year it seems UNCW sports are on the rise.

All women's sports, with the exception of tennis, are moving up into Division II this year, which means they will be competing with tougher and more experienced teams. Another plus for women's athletics is the addition of a new women's volleyball coach, Judy Peel.

One thing that needs improvement is student support. This means not just going to basketball games but soccer, football, tennis and all other sports games.

All of UNCW's athletes are representing the students and faculty members at UNCW. They spend time practicing and preparing themselves for this, and the least we can do is go out and show them their efforts are appreciated.

The football club proved their ability in a close contest with the New River Marines.

Seahawks slide by New River

by Derrick Anderson
Staff Writer

The UNCW Seahawks won their home opening football contest against the New River Marines by a score of 14-12 Sunday. For the second week in a row the Seahawks recovered an opening on-side kick after losing the coin toss. The Seahawks recovered the kick at the Marine 48 yard line. Several offensive plays later the Seahawks turned the ball over to the Marines on the Marine 20 yard line.

The Seahawks got revenge on a Bill Morris interception which placed the ball on the Marine 20 yard line. On the first offensive play following the interception, quarterback Darrell Franks hit flanker Sylvester Bryant on the Marine 45 yard line and from there the flanker took the ball to the Marine two. From there Franks lofted a two yard aerial to split end Paul Wood. The two-point conversion was good and the Seahawks led 8-0.

The Seahawks' other score came on an electrifying 30 yard run by Clifton "the Outlaw" Thomas.

The defense playing its usual tough game shut out the Marines in the first half. Along with Morris, interceptions by Smiley Burnett and Steve Underwood prevented the Marine offense from scoring. The Marines did manage two late second half touchdowns, but the Seahawk defense was like rubber: it bended but it did not break. A tearful blow was thrust upon the defense, however, when defensive captain Mark "Mad Dog" Doll was sidelined with a broken leg. Doll will be out for an indefinite period of time.

Coach Don Corey's Seahawks next contest at home Saturday at 2 p.m. against number-one rated Appalachian State.

will probably play Number 1 singles, with the rest of the positions too close to speculate on. In the doubles, Treilinski and Gemboys will play Number 1, Reaves and Canter at Number 2, and Kalevas and Sorenson at Number 3.

This past weekend, several of the girls participated in an invitational tournament at Campbell. Treilinski, Gemboys, Canter and Reaves all played in the tournament. The doubles team of Treilinski-gemboys reached the semifinals before losing a close match, 6-2, 6-7, 6-7. Treilinski also reached the semis in singles.

This week the Seahawks will open the season at home Friday against Campbell. The match is scheduled for 3 p.m. at Empie Park. On Monday, the team travels to Wilson to face Atlantic Christian.

"We're optimistic about the season," commented Coach Batson, as she anxiously looked toward the season's opener.

Recital to feature violist Ann Woodward and pianist Michael Zenge

On Sunday, Sept. 24, the Creative Arts Department will present a recital by guest artists Ann Woodward, viola, and Michael Zenge, piano. The recital will be held in the King Auditorium at 4 p.m. The public is invited and admission is free.

All compositions on the program are by 20th century composers. It will include two sonatas for viola and piano, one written in 1975 by the contemporary Russian composer Dimitri Shostakovich and the other written in 1922 by Paul Hindemith. The program will also include "Pastoral for Viola and Piano" (1940) by the American composer Elliott Carter and "Elegy: Peace for Dawn" for viola and tape written in 1970 by North Carolina composer Roger Hannay.

Dr. Woodward, accompanied by Mr. Zenge, will present her solo debut in New York City at Carnegie Recital Hall on October 16. The program is made up of 20th century works including the world premiere performance of "Partita for Solo Viola" by the award-winning Minnesota composer.

Phillip Rhodes.

Dr. Woodward has appeared in solo and ensemble performance and as soloist with orchestra in various locations in the East, Southeast and Midwest, and has received enthusiastic critical acclaim. She has played in New York City and in Europe and will continue to tour professionally. Recently, she participated in the debut of the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

The artist has completed her second season as a member of the Eastern Music Festival Chamber Players and Orchestra in Greensboro and has returned for her eleventh year as violist with the North Carolina String Quartet, in residence at UNC-Chapel Hill. She is chairman of string instruction at the university where her husband, Dr. Howard Smither, is director of graduate studies in music.

A first recipient of the doctor of musical arts degree from Yale University, where she studied with David Schwartz, her other principal teacher had been Max Aronoff at Curtis Institute. Dr. Woodward has received grants in the past for her work with her principal teachers, as well as for master classes with Bruno Giuranna, Nadia Boulanger and Pierre Pasquier.

Michael Zenge is a native Missourian who took his musical training at the Oberlin College Conservatory of Music and at the University of Illinois. He also studied one year at the Adademie Mozarteum, Salzburg, Austria, and a year at the Hochschule fur Musik, Munich, Germany, as a Fulbright scholar. His major teachers have included Emil Danenberg, Howard Karp, Gilbert Schuchter, Erik Thenbergh and Erik Werba. He has performed both as soloist and accompanist in Berlin, Salzburg, Munich, and over the Bavarian State Radio network, as well as in New York and in the Midwest and southeastern United States. Since 1966 he has been on the faculty of UNC-Chapel Hill where he teaches piano, keyboard literature and interpretation of German art song.

Motion picture completed

Noted wildlife photographer Jack Dermid, a native of Charlotte, has completed production of a 27-minute sound and color motion picture, "The Living Coast," depicting the beauty, diversity of life and ecology of North Carolina's coastal areas.

Written and photographed by Dermid, an associate professor of biology at UNCW, the film was produced as a foundation program for the North Carolina Marine Resources Center with facilities at Manteo, Bogue Banks and Fort Fisher and was funded by a grant from the Coastal Plains Regional Commission.

The film is being distributed by the N. C. Office of Marine Affairs, 417 North Blount Street, Raleigh, N. C. 27603, and is available to interested groups at no charge other than return postage.

"The Living Coast," filmed entirely along the coast of North Carolina, depicts coastal areas as natural biological communities where a great diversity of plants and animals thrive. As the film unfolds it becomes clear that an order exists and will continue to exist unless man disrupts biological processes through pollution, destruction of marshes and unwise development.

The film, simply written yet scientifically accurate, is suitable for all age groups and was designed to encourage individuals to learn more about coastal regions and coastal environments and to protect and use them wisely.

"The Living Coast" is Dermid's second film. His first, "Wildlife Babies," was named the best nature film of the year in 1966 by the Outdoor Writers Association of America. A well-qualified critic remarked, "The film is of Disney quality without the Hollywood sentimentality that is usually infused in productions of this type."

A former editor and photographer of Wildlife in North Carolina magazine, Dermid is co-author of The World of the Wood Duck. His wildlife photographs have been used to illustrate a number of books and magazines, among them The Audubon Illustrated Handbook of American Birds for which he supplied the jacket photograph and 13 others; Wild Sanctuaries, Our National Wildlife Refuges--A Heritage Restored, 13 photographs; and Birds in Our Lives, 37 photographs.

O. Henry stories are second film

A mini-anthology of O. Henry's short stories will be the second movie of the English Club's series, Films From Literature.

Including "Gift of the Magi," "The Cup and the Anthem," "The Clarion Call," "Ransom of Red Chief," and "Last Leaf," "Full House" lasts 117 minutes. "Full House" produced in 1952 and starring Charles Laughton, Marilyn Monroe, Anne Baxter and Richard Widmark, can be seen at 7:30 tonight in the Randall Library Auditorium.

Admission is free to all university students and the general public.

ENTERTAINMENT

'Monty Python' presented in Kenan

The UNCW Fine Arts Committee will present the hilarious movie "Monty Python Meets Beyond the Fringe" at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium on Tuesday, Sept. 26.

"Monty Python are the funniest people in town." That seemed to be the consensus of the opinion in Cannes as a new film, "Monty Python Meets Beyond the Fringe," was being shown in the Marche.

Beyond the Fringe were the first wave of the new English comedy. Jonathan Miller, Allan Bennett, Peter Cook and Dudley Moore enjoyed tremendous success with their Beyond the Fringe stage show and records. Now they meet Monty Python.

After their recent successful spinoff film Jaggerbwocky, which featured only two of the group, fans are now to look forward to seeing the entire Python team reunited: John Cleese, Michael Palin, Graham Chapman, Carol Cleveland, Terry Gilliam and Terry Jones.

Critics have already declared the Pythons to be better than their usual hilarious selves, as one scathingly funny bit follows another.

Python's impact has been phenomenal. From "And Now For Something Completely Different" to "The Holy Grail," Python's irreverent and zany treatment of just about everything has left audiences gasping with laughter all over the world.

This will mark the third movie shown by the Fine Arts Committee this semester. Season tickets are still available at the box office in Kenan Auditorium; $5 for students and $6 for non-students.

Individual admission to a single movie is 50 cents with presentation of I.D. card or $1 for non-students.

work, Bradford feels she gained some good experience with practical systems work.

"I learned a lot of things that can't be taught in the classroom," Bradford commented. "And the experience will definitely look good on my record."

Both Jackson and Bradford viewed their internships as a positive experience. "It was well worth it; I would do it again," said Bradford.

Living in the Washington area was an experience in itself, added Jackson. "I got to see how the big-wigs work. I learned what a 3-martini lunch is.... The social life there is something else."

Other intern students didn't travel as far as Washington, but were still quite enthusiastic about their summer. Helen Hazelton, a junior in biology, worked for the state government in Raleigh. Her job was with the Natural Resources Department, where she helped put together the N.C. Water Resources Baseline, a research document that references all water projects in North Carolina.

"I would recommend the intern program for almost everyone," said Hazelton. "I enjoyed it a lot."

"I learned a lot just about state government," she continued. "You hear a lot about inefficiency in state government, but it's not entirely true.

There is a lot of red tape, yes, but a lot of it is necessary," she said.

Hazelton said her summer experience has also helped her in her choice of studies. "I found out I want to take some engineering courses," she said. "I can see that they would be a great asset in my future career."

Learning how to work in an office situation and how to deal with people was another benefit of the program, added Hazelton. And, of course, the pay is good. "Where else can you get $3.12 an hour for a desk job, just over the summer?" she noted.

If you are interested in the summer intern program, you should contact the Career Planning Office in the Pub. Although most students give little thought to their career until spring of their senior year, the experience gained from a summer internship can make a big difference when that great day of reckoning - Graduation Day - arrives.

Pie in the sky

Films

One thing this movie has going for it is the incredibly beautiful location in which it was shot. The verdant countryside of Devon, England, is certainly easy on the eyes. So are the steeplechases. The variation of color and constant motion completely eliminate any possibility of boredom. There is even some suspense when Tatum goes lame in a very important event.

Anthony Hopkins, who plays the Olympic coach-trainer, gives the only performance of any substance. He plays a wittily ironic character with a never-ending supply of self-directed humor. Hopkins is directly responsible for any touch of class in this movie. Tatum, well Tatum has as much variety as the soundtrack of Equus (if there is one-which there isn't).

International Velvet is playing at the Long Leaf Cinema.

James Tilton is a junior majoring in English. He will be reviewing films weekly in the Seahawk this year.

Louisiana's Le Roux is on its way to the top

RECORDS

Who would have ever thought a group named after a French term for a gravy base used in gumbo would be one of the newest ingredients on the music scene. Louisiana's Le Roux, which incorporates into their name and songs the southern background, has impressed many with their hit "New Orleans Ladies." The song tells of the respectability of the town's women as they "sashay" from Bourbon Street to Esplanade.

Another song on Louisiana's Le Roux which relates to the band's roots is "Take a Ride on the Riverboat" which opens the album. The song reflects the historic showboat that drifts down the delta in search of a "Brand new queen."

Le Roux has toured with Gatemouth Brown, and the bass player, Leon Medica (who also produced the album) backs the Dirt Band.

The band's exceptional harmony is capped off by the group's lead singer/songwriter, Jeff Pollard. (The band was formerly the Jeff Pollard Band.) Pollard's guitar and the band's ability to play many instruments also reflects the band's origin with their variety of music. Two styles included in the album are jazz cuts ("Take a Ride on a Riverboat" and "Snake Eyes") and soul songs ("Love Abductor" and "Slowburn").

The most impressive unreleased cut on the album is the final song "I Can't Do One More Two Step" which is one of the rock rockers on the lp. The song reflects the way people are now waiting for the weekend to let go at the disco and how some let go so much they can hardly "do one more two step."

If you wondered what ever happened to the versatile band, don't give up hope-Le Roux is on its way.

Sports explosion brings growth in cheerleading program

by Ray Warren

Features Editor

The last few years have witnessed a sports explosion at UNCW. Soccer continues to grow in popularity, the basketball team is now playing top-notch Division I opponents and the football team has finally brought that rite of fall to our campus. These three spectator sports (along with tennis, cross-country, baseball, volleyball, swimming, rowing and surfing) have been very instrumental in publicizing UNCW to perspective students and benefactors.

A major element of such a growing sports program is student and community enthusiasm. Such enthusiasm is the major goal of the UNCW cheerleaders.

Cheerleading at UNCW has come a long way in the last few years. Two years ago the squad consisted of only five dedicated women. Last year, however, ten women and seven men welcomed a capacity crowd to the opening of Trask Coliseum.

This year's squad was selected at tryouts a little over a week ago. Nearly 30 people tried out, but only eight women and two men were selected. Exactly half of the squad are returning from last year. Of the remaining five, all but one have had experience in high school or at other colleges.

Pat Bowker, a sophomore veteran of last year's squad, will serve as head cheerleader. She'll be able to rely on the experience of fellow sophomores Judy Stevens, Lisa Everhart, Pat Monahan, and Lee Miller, all of whom cheered the Seahawks to victory last year.

The five new cheerleaders are all freshmen. Annette Nye can call on five years of cheerleading experience, most recently at Lumberton High School. Linda Lueck was a cheerleader and head majorette at New Hanover High School. A transfer student, Terry Alward has cheered for eight years, including one season at Cape Fear Tech. Marianne Collier, with six years experience, comes from Whiteville High School.

Kevin Sills, one of the two men on the squad (along with Lee Miller) is a newcomer to cheerleading. He, nonetheless, has had little problem mastering the necessary skills.

This includes (as for all male cheerleaders) being able to lift, support and coordinate movements with a female partner.

Kevin says he decided to try out because he "always wanted to." "A lot of us guys tried to get a squad going in high school, but it just didn't work out. I figured I'd give it a shot in college."

Already seen at soccer and football games, this year's cheerleaders have several activities planned for this year. They'll be selling candy bars to raise money to get uniforms for basketball season. To increase spirit, they plan to meet with fraternity leaders to plan pep rallies and work on group cheers. In the words of Judy Stevens, "We'd really like to involve fraternities more this year." Also, they plan to coordinate their activities more closely with an expanded pep band. The squad will attend "as many away games as possible," but the exact number will depend on the Athletic Department which has taken responsibility for cheerleader funding.

This year's cheerleaders are Pat Monahan, Judy Stevens, Pat Bowker, Lisa Everhart, Kevin Sills, Lee Miller, Marianne Collier, Linda Lueck, Terry Alward, and Annette Nye.

Ms. Jane Batson is serving as advisor for the squad again this year. Since a few more men may be added to the squad, interested males should see her. The requirements are enough strength to lift a partner, some aptitude in gymnastics and (as with all cheerleaders) the ability to practice several hours a week and still yell like heck on game day.

Lee Miller has his hands full with Pat Monahan and Annette Nye.

Sorority members pleased with response

The members of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority are pleased with the response shown at the informal gathering in Galloway on Wednesday, September 13, according to a representative of the sorority.

Alpha Kappa Alpha is the world's oldest college-based sorority founded by black women. In its earliest years, it became a symbol of the aspirations of able young women to develop their full potential in an atmosphere of fellowship and mutual stimulation to excellence. This tradition of achievement in its members in college and community chapters is still being maintained.

The purpose of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority is to cultivate and encourage high scholastic and ethical standards, to promote unity and friendship among college women, to study and help alleviate problems concerning girls and women, to maintain a progressive interest in college life, and to be of service to all mankind.

On Sept. 24 at 4 p.m. at 1315 Queen Street, Alpha Kappa Alpha will hold a cheese and wine sip. Any young women interested in this sorority should come out and meet the members of the local chapter, or contact Doretha Stone in the Nursing Department, Hoggard 219.

SGA investigations sought

by Bobby Parker

Editor

SGA President Wayne Dunlap called for committee investigations into spending of student fee moneys and proposed faculty evaluations at the regular meeting of the Student Legislature last Thursday.

"Something needs to be said about how student fees are being spent around here," Dunlap told the legislators. Dunlap said that he would like to see an investigation of "where our priorities are" in allocating student fee funds.

The president specifically mentioned spending of fees within the athletic program. He said that an accounting of "where the money is coming from" and "where and how money is spent" in the Athletic Department should be made.

In calling for action of the issue of faculty evaluations sponsored by SGA, Dunlap revived an issue which had been debated last year when such evaluations were given approval from the Legislature. As yet, no action has been taken on the matter by SGA.

Representative Jon Faili presented the proposal for a program committee which was worked out in a meeting between SGA officials and Student Activities Assistant Director Jon Greene last week. Faili said that the programming committee will act as a coordinating committee but that the Legislature "retains power to allocate money."

Junior Vice-president Jack Allen said that he was "really disappointed in how the program board has been handled." Allen said that delays in planning the board had hindered programming efforts on campus this semester.

But President Dunlap said that the Legislature should "realize that we are responsible" for the delays. "It was the Senate who put this thing off until this year," Dunlap said.

(A more detailed account of the program board plans appears elsewhere on this page.)

In other Legislature action, the charter of the UNCW Rugby Club was approved without opposition and a $2000 allocation was made for the Fine Arts Committee to cover immediate expenses.

Two seats are now vacant in the Senior class delegation. Senior senators Richard Long and Tammy Lancaster have resigned their positions. Any full-time senior may fill either position by accumulating 50 signatures from eligible senior voters and presenting a petition to the SGA.

Absent from last week's meeting were Larry Pilos, Karin Whaley, Mark Beamblossom and Derrick Anderson. The next meeting is Thursday night at 7:30 in C218.

Club plans activities

The Chemistry Club held their first meeting Sept. 7 to plan activities for the coming year. It is not too late for anyone interested in the club and/or in affiliating with the American Chemical Society to do so.

For this purpose, Sunday, Oct. 24, from 3-5 p.m. at Dr. Louis Adcock's house (209 W. Blackbeard) the Chemistry Club is sponsoring an Open House for all chemistry majors and interested students. We will try to stress the importance of affiliation with the A.C.S., what it is and what they have to offer. For the rest of the semester, the club will meet every Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. in C-114.

Chemistry Club members are out now hustling t-shirts imprinted "Chemists Do It Periodically." These can be purchased from any member of the club or from C-206 (Dr. Adcock's office). The cost is $3.75 each.

Sorority representatives will return for meeting

On Sept. 13, representatives from several women's sororities were on campus to see if there was any interest among women students for starting a new chapter at UNCW.

As a result of that meeting a representative from Zeta Tau Alpha has been asked to return to the campus to answer any questions about the sorority or its membership. This meeting will be held on Sept. 21 at 9 p.m. in the Pub.

Easy courses may be reason why Johnny can't read

CPS)...There's been a lot of talk about "Why Johnny Can't Read" in this country, and most students, if they could write, would probably wonder, "Who cares? All we want are classes that will give us a higher GPA." There are, indeed, plenty of easy classes around.

The University of Texas, for example, offers a course called Ed Psych 310, which is dedicated to showing entering freshmen how to get by at the school.

You can learn to fly for six credits at North Dakota State University, and you can become a belly dancer for credit at Cal State-Sacramento. American University in Washington, D.C., offered a $631 summer course called "The Train in American Culture." Students boarded a train and spent six weeks riding it to Baltimore, Chicago, San Francisco and other places. In essence, it was a summer vacation for credit.

Northern Missouri State University has raised the academic hurdle to its purest form, offering a course in disco dancing.

But, then again, Miami Dade Community College has a course called "Understanding and Enjoying Football." Students can learn about veers and 3-4 defenses. The Monday night class, according to the school catalogue, breaks in time for students to watch Monday Night Football on TV.

Such examples of fundamental learning experiences do, it's true, lack in subtlety. Here, then, is a catalogue that could be a dream for the serious connoisseur of easy courses:

CHILDREN'S LITERATURE

A comprehension of works by some of the sissiest authors to ever lift a pen. Attempts to answer the question: "Was Grimm a fairy?" Miller's superb Anthology of Ancient Heroes will be used, and students who concentrate mostly on the pictures will be severely penalized come quiz time.

METEOROLOGY 3

The nature and structure of clouds, condensation and what keeps the damn things in the air so long. The evolution of clouds is examined from precipitation to measles to adolescence and beyond. Laboratory work will consist of creating your own miniature cloud and then trying to make it heel.

THEOLOGY SEMINAR

A group discussion on topics related to the question: "Is there a God, and if so, why doesn't He pick up His mail?" A God versus Devil debate will feature the actual presence of the two superpowers themselves, and the sky above the football field will be reserved for this occasion. A special panel on exorcism will probe the nagging dilemma of what to do when you believe you're being possessed by a salesman.

ASTRONOMY 1

Formal introduction (first tea to be held this Thursday) to all the constellations in the Milky Way. Explanation of how the planets got where they are, and why they haven't left. Selected topics (such as why we revolve around the sun rather than an enormous pomegranate) will also be treated in some depth. (Not open to former astronauts.)

HISTORY OF ANIMATION

A survey of the cartoon in its present form. Special attention will be focused on Walt Disney's fetish for seeing baby hamsters in the nude, and the relevance this had to do with the making of "Snow White." A special discussion sessions will be formed to determine the possible ramifications stemming from the recent disclosure that Bullwinkle the Moose has become emotionally involved with the Pink Panther.

SPORTS IN AMERICAN LIFE

Prerequisite: Engineering 110. The concept of sports in modern-day society, emphasizing the interrelationship between coaches, players, and their mascots. Will investigate the theory of why teams wearing green and yellow uniforms always choke under pressure.

EDITOR'S NOTE: John Wood is with the Department of Microbiology and Immunology at UCLA.

Poetry contest entries accepted

Made possible by the North Carolina Junior Sorosis, the University Poetry Contest will be held from Sept. 22 to Oct. 20. Any student currently enrolled in three semester hours or more at UNCW may submit up to three poems; no specific length is required.

Cash awards are as follows: $50 for first place, $30 for second, and $20 for third. Two honorable mentions will also be given. All recipients of cash awards and honorable mentions will be selected by a panel of judges yet to be announced. Winners of the University Poetry Contest will be made known during a reception in Kenan Hall on Thursday, Oct. 26.

All poems submitted should be typed or printed legibly on appropriate paper not containing the author's name. Submissions must be left with the English Department secretary on the second floor of Kenan Hall where pre-printed forms identifying the author with the poem(s) can be completed. All students should take advantage of this excellent opportunity to be creative and, at the same time, earn some extra money.

Atlantis solicits student prose, poetry and art

The university literary magazine, Atlantis, is now accepting original prose, poetry and art for the fall issue. General submissions should be turned in to the Department of English Office, room 302 of Kenan Hall, no later than 5 p.m., Oct. 20.

Because of its previous success in stimulating interest, the Atlantis cover contest is being held to determine the work which best represents the concepts of the Atlantis.

Art not chosen for the cover is considered for publication inside the magazine. Original photography and art for the cover contest are being accepted in the English Office until 5 p.m., Oct. 20. Material for the contest should be accompanied by a paper telling the artist's name, address and phone number to insure the return of all submissions.

The first meeting of the Atlantis staff will be held in the Seahawk Office located on the second floor of the Pub Monday, Sept. 25, at 3 p.m.

All interested persons are urged to attend this organizational meeting. If you are unable to attend, or if you would like more information contact: Richard Long (editor-in-chief, 256-9286); Patricia Blanton (associate editor, 343-8385); Lea McDaniel (prose editor, 791-5846); Bobbi Padgett (poetry editor, 791-8136); or Sharon Fly (art editor, 686-0722).

SGA conference hosted by UNCW

by Bobby Parker
Editor

The UNCW Student Government Association was host this weekend to a meeting of the North Carolina Association of Student Governments (NCASG) which includes the student governments of the 16 universities of the UNC system. Ten of the schools sent representatives to the meeting.

According to Wayne Dunlap, president of UNCW SGA, the purpose of NCASG is to bring student leaders together to discuss "problems and situations of concern to all students" in the UNC system. Dunlap said that there are "some situations in which we can come together and work for all students" and this, he continued, is the main function of NCASG.

The group met for several hours Saturday in both general and committee sessions. Among the topics discussed were affirmative action, programming and relationships between student leaders and university officials.

Elson L. Floyd, president of student government at Fayetteville State University, urged the group to look into the affirmative action policies of UNC as a whole and of each individual institution. Floyd said that attention should be paid to this matter by NCASG because the state of North Carolina had earned a bad reputation among universities nationwide in matters pertaining to race relations.

NCASG President Ralph Wilkerson, president of the student body of UNC-Greensboro, said that the organization should first review the affirmative action policies of the individual schools before taking a position. Wilkerson indicated that action could be taken at the next meeting of NCASG.

Several members of the group discussed the possibility of setting up a system of block programming which would enable universities to schedule programs cooperatively to save money. The idea would work on the premise that a series of programs could be scheduled at individual campuses while obtaining tie-in rates.

Considerable attention was given to the relationship of each student leader to the (See Conference, page 2)

Six percent turn out for SGA elections

by Bobby Parker
Editor

A low-key campaign for student government elections produced a turnout of approximately 6 percent last week as the freshman class elected officers, and seven representatives-at-large were chosen by the student body as a whole.

Only 239 of the approximately 4000 eligible voters cast ballots in the election. Of this total, 149 were freshman voters and 90 were other students.

The turnout is approximately half of the 11 percent who cast ballots in the last SGA election, held last spring to elect executive, legislative and judicial officials. The voting percentage has traditionally been higher in the spring than fall.

Wes Armstrong, Donna R. Dickens, and Karin Weise led the field of 11 candidates who had filed for seven representative-at-large seats in the Student Legislature. Armstrong collected 132 votes while Dickens and Weise received 131 each.

Others elected for at-large positions are Joseph Scott Paradis (122), Dawn Drum (118), Jack G. Carter (114), and Bob Loomis (111). Candidates who failed to garner enough support to win election are Charlie Suppler (100), Floyd Thomas (97), Douglas R. Browne (88), and Guy Robert Pushee (83). In addition, there were write-ins of one or more votes each for 28 students.

In freshman class elections, John Owens captured the class presidency with 74 votes. His closest opponent, Steve Griffin, received 51 votes while a third candidate, Kevin Sills, won 24 votes.

The race for freshman class vice-president was the most hotly contested race on the ballot as Lisa Cook edged Mark Hawley by a 68-63 margin. A third candidate, Butch Phelps, received 7 votes.

Cathy Robinson and Ricky Gunter won two freshman class senator positions by comfortable margins. Robinson led four candidates with 92 votes while Gunter was elected with 80 votes. Bryan Scott Burton and Scott Woolens trailed with 37 and 36 votes, respectively.

Each newly elected officer will assume a seat in the Student Legislature immediately. Other class officers and eight additional representatives-at-large were elected in spring elections last year.

The elections were held last Thursday and Friday and the winners were certified Friday night.

Dr. Hunter appointed to position

Dr. Jairy C. Hunter, Jr., has been appointed Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs. He assumed his duties on Sept. 15.

A native of Lancaster, South Carolina, Dr. Hunter for the past year has been vice-president for business and administration at Broward Community College in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, the third largest of 28 community colleges in the Florida state system. As chief business officer of the multi-campus institution, Dr. Hunter administered a $20 million operating budget.

From 1972 to 1977 he served Appalachian State University in various capacities, including director of housing, adjunct professor, college of education; chairman for institutional studies and long range planning, director of the community college cooperative program, and director of student support services.

Dr. Hunter received his B.S. degree in business administration and finance cum laude, his M.A. in student personnel administration, and his M.B.A. in business administration and economics from Appalachian. He received the Ph.D. in educational administration from Duke University in 1977.

He has published a number of articles in professional journals and has four books awaiting publication. His civic interests include the Kiwanis Club, Watauga County Girl Scout Building Program, the United Fund, the Masons, coaching little league football and baseball, the Watauga County Educational Workshop Committee for High School Dropouts, the Watauga and Appalachian State University Emergency Disaster Team, the Ft. Lauderdale Chamber of Commerce, and committees of the First Baptist Church in Boone and Coral Springs, Fl.

State's public television should remain in university system

Some officials in Governor Jim Hunt's administration have recently begun moves to relocate North Carolina's public television network out of the university system and under another separate state government agency. UNC President William Friday has opposed the plan saying that it could lead to political domination of public television in the state.

The reason behind the move, proponents say, is that the UNC-TV network could receive more funds if it applied directly to state budget officials without going through the university. If the university retains control, they add, the television system must compete with other university programs which would probably mean a reduction in the UNC-TV budget year after year.

But more important than the funding aspect is the danger that the television network would become the dominion of whoever happens to be in political power at the time.

The funding problems can be solved if state government officials really have a concern for applying appropriate financing to UNC-TV. There is no reason that the legislature can not provide sufficient support while the network remains within the university.

Funding for UNC-TV is already far behind other states. This year, the network received $2.9 million compared to $4 million in Nebraska, $6.5 million in Pennsylvania and $9 million in South Carolina. And it might be pointed out that this state's southern neighbor has one of the most successful public TV networks in the nation.

Another criticism that has been levelled at UNC-TV is that it carries too much on its programming schedule that is received from the national government's Public Broadcasting Service. This, the critics say, eliminates program time which could be filled by original material produced by UNC-TV.

This reasoning completely overlooks the fact of the discrepancy in funding of North Carolina's system with those of other states.

Outside of the complaints about funding, there has been little said about the operations of the network as a part of UNC. That is because, considering the resources, the network has served the people of the state well. Within the last few years, there has been a substantial improvement in the broadcasting signal enabling UNC-TV programs to reach more of the state's people. The network also serves as an increasingly important complement to the state's school system.

The suggestion that UNC-TV be moved into a separate government agency will do nothing to improve its operations. Only increased monetary support can do that.

What the move would do, however, is increase the possibility that the system could fall into mismanagement by politically-oriented bureaucrats. Of course, university officials are also part of the state political structure. But with North Carolina public TV as part of the university, the UNC system serves as an important buffer zone between broadcasting professionals doing what they know best and political appointees extending their grasp a little bit further.

chancellors, trustees and other administration officials of their institutions. Delegates from Western Carolina, including NCASG secretary Phillip Cates, told other representatives of a specific conflict with WCU's chancellor involving the closing of a campus park formerly used by students. The chancellor closed the park several years ago due to security problems and alleged immoral acts occurring at the park.

Representatives from other campuses suggested that WCU students appeal to their alumni association, indicating their own success in working with alumni on their campus.

UNCW's Dunlap instigated a discussion of grading policies at the individual institutions, noting the wide differences in some school regulations. Dunlap noted that UNCW has no pass/fail options. He also pointed out the UNC-Chapel Hill now grades with "plus" and "minus" marks as well as the traditional grades.

Dunlap said in an interview after the meeting that he feels the most important benefit of NCASG is "getting together and talking to other people (who are) dealing with the same situations that I deal with."

He expressed some disappointment in this meeting because the group "held off on things" that should have been acted on. He noted that discussion on a proposal to allow student representation on the UNC Board of Governors had been postponed until the group's next meeting. There is currently no student representative on the B.O.G., but some universities permit representation on their board of trustees.

Dunlap said that a problem for NCASG in past years had been lack of serious participation by some of the schools. In its last meeting there were only seven schools represented. The group meets monthly.

Dunlap said that NCASG has not been dominated by the larger universities and added that the smaller schools have perhaps more to gain from membership. Smaller schools can participate on an equal basis with the large schools, he pointed out.

Dunlap said that issues that will likely come up for NCASG in the future concern establishing rapport among various groups of student leaders such as newspaper editors, program officials and student government officers; visitation policies at individual universities; and student representation on faculty tenure and promotion committees.

The schools represented this weekend were Appalachian State, Fayetteville State, N.C. A. & T., N.C. Central, Pembroke State, UNC-Chapel Hill, UNC-Greensboro, Western Carolina, Winston-Salem State and UNCW.

NCASG will meet next in Chapel Hill on October 22.

Test kit helps detect paraquat-tainted marijuana

By MARSHA WRIGHT
Campus Digest News Service

Paraquat-tainted marijuana, once a hot issue to many Americans, seems to be drawing less attention and concern among pot smokers. The destructive effects of this lung-damaging herbicide, which initially produced panic in marijuana users, is now a cause greeted with indifference.

In March, Joseph Califano, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, announced the findings of federal tests on paraquat. Heavy users of contaminated marijuana may develop fibrosis, an irreversible lung disease. And even less frequent smokers may expect some measurable damage to their lungs.

Dr. Daniel Hurst, University of Missouri associate professor of medicine, says fibrosis or "a scarring of the lung, like a healed cut," occurs when paraquat is ingested or inhaled. The lung stiffens and normal functioning (or the ability of the lungs to transfer oxygen and release carbon dioxide) is impaired.

Paraquat "test kits" have been designed to help detect herbicide on marijuana. These kits could help resolve some of the confusion for smokers, but they have been almost universally unreliable, according to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta. They do not work on small amounts of marijuana and some of the kit's chemicals can explode if improperly mixed.

The Marijuana Research Institute at the University of Mississippi has come up with what appears to be the first really effective paraquat test kit. Dr. Mahmoud Elshoh developed the kit which is being distributed by Landis Laboratories of Pennsylvania.

Ty Warren, spokesman for the research institute, explained that the FDA has not yet decided if the product will need their approval. Also, the impetus to distribute the kits quickly has been lost because of a lack of public interest and declining press coverage.

The University of Mississippi kit costs $12.95 and the test takes about one hour to administer. Four solutions—said to be safe—are used. There are 24 steps to follow, but the instructions are explicit.

Constitutional amendment for D. C. representation is issue of people

The proposed constitutional amendment which would give Congressional representation to the District of Columbia has created another wave of national debate. Coupled with the yet unratified Equal Rights Amendment, these are fundamental constitutional decisions to be made in the next several years which will have major impact on the federal government.

There is hardly any question that the D.C. amendment is a fundamental change in the original provisions of the Constitution. As set down in the Constitution and intended by its framers, the district is the exclusive province of the Congress.

The purpose of this solution is obvious. As an immediate concern for the authors of the Constitution, if avoided interstate rivalry. Bidding for the capital would have been similar to today's bidding for the Olympics. As a long-term concern, it eliminated the possibility of conflicts of interest. One state would have had jurisdiction over the capital of the entire nation.

But the situations of the 18th century and today are significantly different. The District of Columbia now has a population which exceeds that of several states. Yet these states have at least two senators and one representative to represent them in the national legislature, while the district has only one non-voting delegate to the House.

The last time that a constitutional question was addressed to the district was in 1960. In that year, Congress passed an amendment granting voting rights to D.C.'s citizens in presidential elections. The distinction was still asserted, however, that the district is not a state and would not be represented as a state. And it was specified that the district's electoral vote (which, for a state, equals its total of senators and congressmen) would not exceed that of the least populous state.

Were the district to be represented on the same basis as a state—two senators and representatives proportional to its population—it would have a Congressional delegation of four (two representatives, two senators). That would be one more electoral vote and representative than seven states.

The main reason that the proposal has run into opposition in some states is that many people have viewed it as a "black" issue. That is, because approximately 95 percent of the District of Columbia's residents are black, the senators and representatives they would elect will almost assuredly be black. That would be an important breakthrough, especially in the Senate where Massachusetts' Edward Brooke remains the only black member.

But people have looked at this issue from the "Black" angle with the wrong ideas from both ends of the spectrum. Bigots have seen it as a struggle to keep blacks out of the Senate, and blacks, such as Georgia's Julian Bond, have indicated a willingness to use the district's Senate seats as an implement of blacks nationally.

What the debate should be centered on is the question of representation for people. It is wrong to deny a citizen of the U.S. representation in Congress simply because he/she lives within the city limits of the capital city. It would also be wrong for blacks outside the city to use the district's legislative seats as a tool for their own political ambitions.

Both views distort the positive intent of providing proper and just participation by the people of Washington in the affairs of their national government. The foregone conclusion that the amendment will give us two black senators is merely an extra benefit that passage of the amendment would provide.

(Even if passage did bring a mass migration of black politicians to the capital, we could only win. How else could a Julian Bond or Barbara Jordan get into the Senate, where they both belong?)

Some observers have come up with what they consider a viable compromise. That is, to give the district representation in the House, but not the Senate.

This, they say, would be more in line with the original intent of the Constitution because while representatives were supposed to represent people, senators were supposed to represent states. And, since D.C. is by no means a state, it should therefore not have senators.

Proponents of this idea are, however, fooling only themselves. Senators no more represent state governments than any member of Congress. They all represent people, and that's what each of them would tell you if they were asked.

Fighting the flab: Is anybody else out there hungry?

by Julie Russ

Staff Writer

Isn't anybody out there hungry besides me? My knees feel like jelly and my stomach is shrieking with outrage. "Feed me!" it whimpers greedily, but I spurn yet another caloric temptation. By now every girl knows what I am talking about, and every guy is certain of my mental incompetence. Today I joined the millions of Americans in the fight against flab. I am on a Diet and let me tell you, I think I'd opt for appendicitis instead.

Oh, I could ramble on at length about the awful gripping spasms that twist my stomach, about the terrible light-headed feeling that makes me leer like a drunkard...I could describe all the gnawing sensations that make dieting so difficult, but who can feel sympathy for someone who ate lunch ten minutes ago? But what a lunch! I chomped my ravenous way through two whole carrot sticks and inhaled a teaspoon of raisins in about seven seconds.

And that's it until dinner-time. Then—oh joyous thought—I can munch wildly through three pieces of celery and gum and ounce of cream cheese into oblivion. And (gasp!) I may even treat myself to three ounces of broiled chicken boob-er, breast. It shouldn't be too hard to fall asleep after a banquet like that, but just before I slip into the malnourished coma I must remember to take my diet wafer that supplies my starving system with all those lovely vitamins, minerals and proteins.

The high point of this whole program is at breakfast when I have the opportunity to observe my brother wolfing down oatmeal laced with sugar (drool...) and at least four pieces of bacon (slobber...)

along with several slices of cinnamon toast (I'm going to faint...) washed down with three glasses of chocolate milk (I'm going to kill him, God, this just isn't fair!).

And the worst part is yet to come. That's when he rises from the table, stretches his slim, muscled bod and smiles smugly at my tortured face. "Gee," he observes profoundly, "are you on a diet or something?" He eyes my bran muffin and skim milk sadly. "I sure am glad I don't hafta worry about getting hefty," he sneers cheerfully... and then ducked when I pitched my little paper-back caloriecounter straight at his skinny rear.

Someday, oh someday... when my ribs are not only visible but countable...when my hipbones precede me around the corner...when Tab is just an unpleasant taste in the back of my memory... that's when I'll pull out my time-honored recipe for caramel fudge and chow down!

SGA charters available

All organizations wishing to be chartered by the Student Government Association for the 1978-79 academic year must submit a constitution to the SGA office. Constitutions should contain such information as: Article I, Name of Organization; Article II, Purpose of Organization; Article III, Membership of organization (including a written affirmation of openness to full membership and participation in the organization by members of the student body without regard to race, religion, national origin, handicap, or veteran status, and, except where specifically exempted by law, sex—e.g., social fraternities and sororities); Article IV, Officers and elections (an attached list should include the names and addresses of major officers of the organization). Optional articles may be included with respect to activities, scheduled activities, etc. Where applicable, include the faculty advisor's name.

Organizations wishing to use UNCW property for meetings, athletic events or the name UNCW must submit a charter for approval by the Charter Committee and the Student Legislature. No organization or club may submit a request for funding unless such a charter has been approved.

Election corruption raising its head

Election corruption again raised its ugly head as UNCW students went to the polls last week.

No, one candidate did not break into the campaign headquarters of an opponent. No, an illegal campaign contribution was not uncovered in a Mexican bank account. And, no, a candidate was not caught soliciting votes from the third floor, Galloway, precinct after visitation hours.

The election scandal stems from last spring's campaign when a ghost candidate, namely Phil Zapruono, received 31 percent of the votes in a two-way race for student attorney general. Later, it was revealed that a group of zealous journalists, in pursuit of documentation of the universal truth that no one really cares about SGA elections, had created Zapruono, complete with political background and handsome photo.

Well, by now you have guessed that Zapruono again received recognition in this fall's elections. But Phil's political fortunes seem to be dwindling: he only received one vote this time, for representative-at-large.

Zapruono's downfall can probably be explained in the fact that his name did not appear on the ballot this time; he was a write-in candidate. And one might also assume that those who voted for Zapruono last year were actually voting against his opponent, Glen Downs (the eventual winner).

Whatever the case, it doesn't appear that Phil Zapruono was alone as an electoral creation. One might also doubt the existence of such candidates as Paul Bimbo, Dan Skrobolowski and, last but not least, Nebo. These three also collected write-in votes.

But the problems of SGA elections officials appear not to be candidates who fail to materialize. In light of the less-than-6 percent turnout, the big problem seems to be voters who fail to materialize.

Writing center offers aid in composition

Students who may have difficulty in their writing should take advantage of the services of the Writing Center. The Writing Center's service is provided without charge by the English Department. All UNCW students are welcome to use the Writing Center, regardless of whether they are enrolled in (or have passed) a composition course.

The center offers individual tutoring and counseling in all types of writing. Students may drop by the Writing Center at any time but if they attend regularly they will usually notice quicker results. During their visits, students write and discuss their writing with an instructor. The center's staff helps them with the process of invention, organization, copyreading, and revision, and also with the mechanics of punctuation and syntax. The Writing Center is staffed by three English faculty members, Richard Veit, Margaret Parish and Lil Brannon, and by two student tutors, Theresa Rhinehart and Richard Long.

Our temporary location this semester is the conference room within the library smoking lounge (second floor). The librarians will be happy to direct first-time visitors to the center. Hours are as follows: Monday - Thursday: 9:30 a.m.

- 2:00 p.m.; Monday Evening: 5:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m.; and Thursday Evening: 6:00 p.m. - 8:00 p.m. New students are welcome at any time.

Legislature addresses safety

In its first two meetings of the school year, the Student Legislature has given attention to several items involving campus safety. Legislative resolutions are generally sent to the Student Affairs Office and other parties concerned with the particular topic of the resolution.

Among the items handled is the advocacy of providing parking spaces for motorcycles. The Legislature suggested that car spaces be divided into three spaces allotted to motorcycles and that blocks be placed in these spaces to prevent damage to the parking lot surface by cycle stands.

The Legislature has also passed a resolution requesting that a sidewalk be built along the road to the Marine Science Building. In a separate resolution, the Legislature went on record in favor of adequate lighting between the Marine Science Building and parking lots in that area.

Other topics addressed by the Legislature include use of the pool facilities of Trask Coliseum.

Legislature to require financial reports from funded organizations

By Bobby Parker

Editor

The Student Legislature passed a resolution that would require all SGA-funded organizations to submit written and oral financial reports to the Legislature on a monthly basis. The proposal was approved by a split vote on a motion by Representative Jon Faill.

Faill said that the Legislature should be monitoring spending of SGA funds by the individual groups "as they spend them" rather than when a problem or question arises.

But Representative Scott Bragg said that having each organization come before the Legislature every month would cause legislators to spend "most of our time listening to how they're spending money" rather than giving time to other issues.

Representative Jim Gudwin said the reports would be a "waste of time." Other legislators suggested that the reports be submitted to the SGA office where they could be examined by anyone interested.

Faill, however, expressed doubts that many legislators would actually go by the SGA office to review the reports.

SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca pointed out that funded organizations are already required, as stated in the SGA to submit written financial reports to the SGA office each month.

The Legislature passed a similar motion last February, but funded organizations (except standing committees) have neglected to make the monthly reports thus far.

In his reports to the Legislature, SGA President Wayne Dunlap urged the appointment of a committee to investigate student government-backed faculty evaluations. The matter was referred to the Investigative Committee for further action.

SGA Attorney General Glen Downs reported for the Finance Committee which recommended a reallocation to the Football Club of $1240. The club had requested $1500.

Downs said that the funds would be used for officials at home games, travel expenses, field lime and other equipment.

Downs said that the Finance Committee had been told by Football Club representatives that last year's coach, Frank Zerbino, had taken $80 of club funds and some of the club's equipment. Zerbino has since graduated and now coaches a club team in Jacksonville.

Downs also revealed that the club had run into financial problems because equipment had been purchased earlier this year outside of the state purchasing system, which is used for all major SGA purchases. The club had also maintained an outside account consisting of donations received from sources other than the university, a factor which also led to financial problems.

About $400 will be raised for the club through membership dues, Downs also stated.

In other legislative business, Vice-president DeLuca requested volunteers to help Attorney General Downs in compiling a code of SGA laws and regulations.

DeLuca also reminded the Legislature that it must appoint three justices to the Student Court. Two justices have been appointed by DeLuca, the chief justice was elected and President Dunlap has yet to appoint another two members of the court. Any student interested in serving on the court should contact a legislator or the SGA office.

One legislative position, senior class senator, remains open at this time. Contrary to earlier reports, senior Senator Tammy Lancaster has not resigned her position.

Absent from the meeting were legislators Dan Osborne, John Wiley, Jack Allen and Brad Williams. The next meeting of the Legislature is Thursday night at 7 p.m. in room C218.

Marshall scholars selected

The Marshall Scholarship program, established in 1953 by the government of the United Kingdom, will offer 30 scholarships in 1979 for a specific course of study at a British university to qualified American students. A Marshall scholar exemplifies the aims and outlook of American General George C. Marshall who instituted the European Recovery Program (known as the Marshall Plan) at the end of World War II to help in the rebuilding of European nations devastated by the war.

In appointing Marshall scholars the selectors look for distinction of intellect and character as evidenced both by their scholastic attainments and by their other activities and achievements. Preference will be given to candidates who combine high academic ability with the capacity to play an active part in the United Kingdom university which they choose to attend.

These scholarships have a tenure of two academic years for the study of any subject leading to the award of a British university degree. Both men and women are eligible.

Twenty awards will be made on a regional basis, and ten will be awarded at large. Applications are first reviewed by a regional committee in each of five regions of the United States, and the most promising candidates are referred to an advisory council in Washington, presided over by the British ambassador to the United States. A final list of applicants is then forwarded to the Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission in London.

The scholarship provides a personal allowance, payment of tuition, a grant of books, and fares to and from Britain. Applications must be made for the 1979 awards before October 28, 1978.

The Marshall Scholarship program serves as an expression of British gratitude for the economic assistance provided under the Marshall Plan. The purpose of the program is to enable citizens of the U.S. who are graduates of U.S. colleges and universities to study for a degree at a British university.

For more information about these scholarships, contact the Office of Career Planning and Placement in room 202 of the Student Services Building.

TIME OUT

by Cheryl Robinson
Sports Editor

The football club deserves to be commended, not so much for their record (they stand 1-2 now) as for the things they have devoted to representing UNCW. The coaches and players have given not only their time and effort, but many of them have spent over one hundred dollars on equipment and transportation to away games, and they still have seven games left to play.

The football team deserves acclaim. This past Saturday there were about two hundred spectators at the football game, not too good a turn out considering there are over 4000 students and faculty members at UNCW. Their next game is Sunday against Wake Forest. Every student and faculty member should show the club their efforts do not go unnoticed. The best way to accomplish this is by going to their games and proving to them UNCW is standing behind them.

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Club deserves acclaim

by Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

If one would venture out to Brooks Field on an autumn afternoon, one might see roughly 45-50 men engaging in the contact sport of football. The man responsible for football on the UNCW campus is Coach Don Corry. Corry a former athlete, played all three sports back at his high school in Oroville, California. Corry excelled in baseball hitting .348, well enough to earn him 3 scholarship offers for that sport. Corry opted for the military instead, and joined the U.S. Army after graduating from high school in 1968. After a tour in VietNam, Corry returned home where he enlisted in the reserves and played basketball at Butte Junior College in California.

Corry came to Wilmington in 1971 where he played one year of baseball for Coach Bill Brooks. After the '71 season Corry re-enlisted in the Army, and in 1972 was commissioned a second lieutenant. Corry coached at Fort Bragg where he took his unit team to the Fort Bragg championship playoff.

Corry's credentials are even more impressive when one considers the fact that during his tour in Europe he coached unit teams in football and basketball to championships. One of the coaches Corry worked with while in Europe was Willie Pollard, a former Washington Redskins flanker.

Now with a family, Corry returned to Wilmington where he re-enrolled at UNCW. While taking courses during the summer, Corry met Bill Morris, a member of the football Seahawks. Morris asked Corry if he would be willing to be head coach of the football program. Corry consented, but only if he would be completely in charge, and that more discipline be put in the program. Corry also wanted more blacks for the squad (there was only one last year) and a more positive attitude on the players behalf. One of Corry's first moves was to employ a staff of personnel with football knowledge. Brian McClure, to name one, became one of Corry's aides. Corry was also skeptical of the Athletic department in its being receptive toward a football program.

Corry's military background is manifested in his coaching philosophy in that he believes that discipline is the key to a successful program. Corry insisted on three things from his players, cut down on the parting, work hard in practice and abide by the rules.

With seven games left on the football schedule Coach Corry believes that it is possible to win all seven. Injuries thus far have prevented the Seahawks from being 3 and 0 instead of the 1 and 2 record the squad now has. Another factor that Coach Corry believes might have an effect on the Seahawks' success is the student body. Coach Corry believes that student body support is needed to help make the football program successful. "The Student Government Association," says Corry "have been tremendous in their support of the football program at UNCW. The rest of the student body should follow the lead of the SGA."

Corry praises his entire 45 man squad as being a hard working and dedicated bunch of young athletes. Corry does however, single out Melvin Tootoo, Chris Nichols, Bill Morris, Steve Underwood, Ken Watson, and Mark "Mad dog" Doll as being truly outstanding defensive players.

Quarterbacks Darrell Franks and Doug Browning are also standout athletes. Steve Poulous is a stand out at offensive guard, he was an all conference selection in high school. Perhaps the most exciting player could be the 9.4 sprinter tailback, Clifton "the Outlaw" Thomas. Thomas racked up 170 yard rushing against number one Appalachian State. Corry says it was Thomas who has given him his biggest thrill to date. That thrill came on a 74 yard run against Appalachian State.

In all, Coach Corry is proud to be a part of UNCW football, and UNCW feels likewise.

Appy's nip Seahawks

by Derrick Anderson

Staff Writer

The injury ridden UNCW Seahawks lost 20-12 to number one ranked Appalachian State in football action played at Brooks field Saturday. The Seahawks' playing with a number of starters injured, most notably star quarterback Darrell Franks, fell prey in a hard fought contest to Appalachian State.

In the early going it looked as if the Seahawks were going to be in for a rough afternoon after an onside kick failed. Appalachian State then took over at the Seahawk 40 yard line. The Appys then drove the remaining distance for the score. The extra point was blocked and the score was 3-0 in favor of the Appys. The kickoff after the Appalachian State score saw Ken Watson return the ball to the Seahawk 28. From there Clifton "the Outlaw" Thomas scooted around left end to the Appys 31 yard line for a 41 yard gain. Fullback Dave Moorehead then ran for two consecutive first downs.

With the ball resting deep in Appy territory at the seven. Thomas went off tackle for the score. The extra point failed with the score tied 6 to 6.

Second quarter action saw Appalachian State put another score on the board on a 29 yard pass play. After receiving the following kickoff the Seahawks' were forced to punt. The Seahawks regained possession however, when Tinker Owens delivered an earthshaking tackle which forced a fumble. Defensive back Dale Fish recovered the ball on the Seahawk 39 yard line. With the ball resting on the 39 yard line it was "outlaw" action time again. The 9.4 sprinter took the handoff and started left. After seeing 4 Appy defenders there, Thomas reversed his movement back to the right where he out ran several Appalachian defenders for a 61 yard touchdown run. The extra point effort failed with the score tied 12-12.

The game turned into a defensive duel with Nichols, Morris, Tootoo, Borden and Company taking charge.

The winning touchdown came late in the fourth quarter after a series of penalties placed the ball deep in Seahawk territory on Appalachian State. Appalachian State, the number one ranked team, then scored on a one yard plunge. The Seahawks looked as if a comeback was in the making when split end Paul Wood made a series of great catches but an interception occurred, thus ending the scoring threat.

The Seahawk's next game is at home Sunday against Wake Forest at 2:00.

Soccer loses on the road

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW soccer team found the road to be an inhospitable place last week as the Hawks dropped consecutive matches to the Citadel and Rollins. The Seahawks are now 2-2 on the season.

In their first loss of the year, UNCW dropped a close 2-1 decision to the Citadel. Dennis Davis gave the Hawks a 1-0 halftime lead, when he scored eight minutes into the game on a Matt Wight assist. The Citadel, however, stormed back with two goals in a five minute span to take the victory.

Sunny Florida also gave the Hawks a cold reception as Rollins College handed UNCW their second straight loss, 5-2. Chi Chi Mercado scored after 9 minutes on an assist from Gil Castilla to make it 1-0 UNCW. Rollins rallied to tie the score at the half and then proceeded to dominate the second half with four more goals. Late in the game, Castilla scored a goal on an assist from Mercado.

Tomorrow, the Hawks will attempt to bounce back against Atlantic Christian in another road match.

Volleyball off to bad start

The UNCW women's volleyball team was defeated Friday by Guilford College. Playing the best three out of five, UNCW lost the first game 15-2, lost the second 15-6, came back and won the third 15-9 and lost the fourth 15-9 ending the match.

So far the volleyball team is 0-3. "They've been playing some tough teams," said John Justus, sports information director.

Besides Guilford, the UNCW team has met East Carolina and Louisburg.

The next volleyball match is Thursday at home, against Meredith.

Outlaws, Wet Willie, Le Roux to appear Sunday in Trask

The Outlaws will appear in concert in Trask Coliseum Sunday, Oct. 1, at 8 p.m. The concert is sponsored by the UNCW Concert Committee and will also feature as special guest stars Wet Willie and Louisiana's Le Roux.

Tickets are on sale in the University Bookstore at reduced student prices of $5.00 and $5.50. All seats are reserved.

The concert is being billed as a "welcome home" affair for Wilmington native Harvey Arnold, a member of the Outlaws.

Over the past year, there have been some changes in The Outlaws' line-up. The guitar front line has been beefed up by yet a third lead, with Freddie Salem stepping in for Henry Paul. Each of the trio of pickers has a distinct style and background.

Bassist Harvey Arnold made his Outlaw recording debut on "Hurry Sundown," contributing two songs and bringing more of a funky flavor to the band. And drummer David Dix, joining Monte Yoho, gives The Outlaws a hard-punching double-drumming assault.

The new sextet is heard in all its captured-live glory on "Bring 'Em Back Alive." It was recorded from September through November 1977 in Chicago, San Diego, Los Angeles and at a free outdoor concert in Bicentennial Park in Miami. Dedicated to their friends, the Lynrd Skynyrd band and crew, the four-sided package is tough, muscular rock and roll, an assemblage of some of the most well-loved Outlaw songs done in a rip-it-up style. All their best is on this set, material like "Freeborn Man," "Hurry Sundown," "Green Grass and High Tides," "There Goes Another Love Song," "Stick Around For Rock & Roll."

The Outlaws will be joined by Wet Willie and Louisiana's Le Roux this Sunday, Oct. 1, in Trask Coliseum. The UNCW Concert Committee is sponsoring the event. Tickets are on sale at the University Bookstore for $5.00 and $5.50 to UNCW students.

NIGHTS

The Pony Express, 4001 Wrightsville Avenue, will feature Pat and Steve Friday Nights, John Glover Saturday night and Open Mike on Sunday where area musicians can show off their talent. There's never any cover charge at the Pony Express.

Close Encounters Disco, 5704 Oleander Drive, will have disco this weekend. There's no cover charge and membership is $5.00 a couple for the year.

Four Winds, Market Street at the overpass, will feature High and Mighty Friday night and disco on Saturday. There will be a $2.00 cover charge Friday night.

The Three Penny Gallery, in the Cotton Exchange downtown will feature John Glover Friday night and more live entertainment Saturday night!

Boom-Boom's Disco, 5523 Oleander Drive will have DISCO all weekend long! Cover charge will be $2.00 for guys and $1.00 for girls.

'A Boy and His Dog' Shown Tuesday

The UNCW Fine Arts Committee will present the modern controversial film, "A Boy and His Dog", Tuesday, October 3, at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Bill Hagen of the San Diego Evening Tribune wrote "A Boy and His Dog" is a strange mixture of humor and disaster; it may well become a cult movie of science fiction followers. It is rough, of course, and the survival film against which others of its genre will inevitably be compared."

This kinky tale of survival in the year 2024 traces the exploits of Vic and his canine companion Blood in a dried-mud, post-atomic wilderness. Into this bizarre environment characterized by violence and savage intelligence, the duo is forced to hunt for food, armament and an occasional female.

An offbeat film that offers an incredibly hilarious and terrifying vision of a future earth, this first-rate, imaginative adventure is based on the award-winning novella by master science fiction writer Harlan Ellison.

"A Boy and His Dog" won the Hugo Award for best work of science fiction of the year in 1975. This 91 minute film is rated R and stars Don Johnson, Susanne Benton, Alvy Moore with a special appearance by Jason Robards.

This will mark the fifth movie shown by the Fine Arts Committee this semester. Admission will be by season ticket or non-students will be a dollar. UNCW students with I.D. cards fifty-cents.

Lecture to present 'Seduction'

Dr. Wilson Bryan Key will present a lecture on "Subliminal Seduction" on Monday at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. This is the first of two live presentations to be presented by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee.

Dr. Key, the author of two books on subliminal persuasion, "Subliminal Seduction" and "Media Sexploitation," has testified on this subject to a U.S. Senate subcommittee and the Federal Trade Commission. A former advertising man himself, Dr. Key has taught journalism and communications at several universities and has given courses and seminars on subliminal persuasion. He heads Media-probe, a public interest research company.

Dr. Key's main objection is to what he sees as an invasion of privacy. He resents the feeling you're being had when you don't know it. "Nothing can hurt you as long as you can decide whether to look at it or not. But this material goes into your brain at the speed of light . . . we think some of it stays in your brain for life."

Thirty-one billion dollars are spent on advertising in the U.S. each year. The problem, says Dr. Wilson Bryan Key, is that instead of straightforward, honest selling, the ads use cues and symbolism of which we are not consciously aware, usually relating to sex and death, to manipulate us, to seduce us into spending our money.

The average American sees 330,000 ads by age 18. What happens to someone who's been subliminally indoctrinated with this material? "I'm concerned about the kinds of value systems perpetrated by these ads," Key says.

Though most of us recognize that sex-blatant or subtle-sells products, it is becoming apparent that death sells them too—especially when they can be addictive, like cigarettes or alcoholic drinks. Nor is it just the advertising industry that uses subliminal manipulation. Dr. Key shows us how rock and pop music, and the movies, use these same hidden devices.

Many ads also contain archetypal symbols, which were first recorded by St. Augustine in the 5th century, said Dr. Key.

"We don't know exactly what makes them work, but they do seem to have unconscious meanings in any culture," he said. "For example, in a Calvert Blended Whiskey ad, the bottom of the glass is a volcano, which is a symbol of fertile soil, and in many religions, the origin of life. Above the volcano (on the left) there is a fish swimming in the whiskey, and a mouse is riding backwards on top of the fish. The fish symbolizes the diety in many religions, and a mouse is a manifestation of the devil."

"Above the water line are a skull and two scorpions, and a lizard, which symbolizes evil, is on the rim of the glass (at right center). In the ice cubes are a white mask, a shark, and a white bird in flight, symbolic of the carrying of the damned into the afterworld."

"This ad is a Pandora's Box of subliminal seduction, and I have no doubt that it worked very well. In another time, this ad might have ended up in a museum."

Subliminal seduction is not limited to magazine advertising, said Dr. Key.

"These techniques have been used in politics for 40 years," he said. "One political poster I examined had the word 'sex' written about 20 times on the candidate's face."

Subliminal techniques have also been found in television commercials, said Dr. Key, including one for Liquid Plumber.

"The commercial opens on a clogged-up sink," he said. "The housewife squirts the stuff into the sink, and the junk swirls and disappears. As this is happening, the letters s-e-x appear one by one in the bottom of the sink. Above the 'x' is a skull in a bubble, providing both sex and death in the same ad. All this happens in a total of only four seconds."

UNCW students will be admitted free upon presentation of their I.D. cards. Non-students will be charged a nominal fee of $2.00.

Death humor of 'End' doesn't work

Ideally, this movie should work. Burt Reynolds, star and director, has chosen a universal theme that all can identify with: death. However, he is not the first to explore this motif. Ingmar Bergman's "The Seventh Seal" deals with death in a serious tone, unlike "The End." The more recent movies of Woody Allen treat the subject of death with a neurotic humor that allows one to laugh nervously all the way to the grave. But in either case, the success of these two directors, Bergman and Allen, has depended upon their ability to fuse the elements of superstition and fear to mold a reality of death that we can relate to: humor. It never progresses past slapstick.

The story involves a real estate salesman (Burt Reynolds) who finds he has but a year to live due to an obscure toxic blood disease. An example of the humor: Reynolds asks the doctor, "Is this what Ali McGraw had in 'Love Story'?"

Since this character does have a tendency to over-react, he decides that a year to live is not worth it, considering what he'll be like in the last few stages of the disease. So he opts for suicide. There follows a funny scene in which Reynolds goes to his parents' home to get the downers needed for his suicide. They are a retired couple with an interesting life: the mother turns on Marlin Perkins' "Wild Kingdom" when her son arrives, and the father (Pat O'Brien), a paint-by-numbers zombie, is terribly upset because there is not enough variety in his painting. He says, "I've been painting number elevens all morning." This scene was a relief as it presented the first humor connected with reality and was not at all pretentious.

Reynolds fails at his suicide attempt and wakes up in a very bizarre psychiatric hospital. At this point, the movie picks up badly needed inertia. He meets a psychotic schizophrenic

Films

(Dom DeLuise) who blames his condition on the offensive nature of Polish jokes. He strangled his father because he was "so Polish." Even the hospital staff is in on persecuting DeLuise. Before They straightjacket him, they say, "Just think of it as a Polish dinner jacket." But Dom DeLuise wants to help Reynolds in successfully committing suicide, as that is what a true friend would do. They bumble through many attempts at self-destruction until Reynolds decides that he wants to live.

DeLuise is very good as a schizo. Many of the funny parts of this movie are due to his energy that seems almost chemically induced. But the attempted suicide scenes are boring, and not much different from the Three Stooges. Robbie Benson appears as a ribald young priest who is completely willing to turn a confessional into a two-way act. Sally Fields is another face which picks things up when they're dragging. She plays Reynolds' lover who tolerates all his oddities. Burt Reynolds has been better. His comic timing is very good, as can be seen in "Lucky Lady," but it is not that great in this movie. He has been much better.

This movie has picked a grim topic and attempted to make it funny. It can be done, but not in "The End." The genuinely amusing moments were completely unconnected with the subject of death, and those efforts at death humor were strained.

"The End" is now playing at the Oleander Cinema.

Little River is one of many foreign bands to exert influence

The United States has been influenced by many foreign groups such as the Beatles, the Bee Gees and Abba. One of the latest foreign groups is from Australia. The band is the Little River Band, who debuted in the States with their initial hit "Help is on its Way" and later "Happy Anniversary" both on their first album Diamantina Cocktail.

The lead singer and songwriter for the band, Glen

RECORDS

Shorrock, is formerly of the Twilights (who was Australia's answer to the Beatles in the 60's). Other members of the six man group include lead guitarists David Briggs and Beep Birtles, rhythm guitarist Graham Goble, bass George McArdle and drummer Derek Pellici.

After the Twilight breakup, Shorrock teamed up with Birtles and Goble whose band was named Mississippi. The men decided they wanted a different name that more people could identify with. While driving near Melbourne they saw an exit sign "Little River." After deciding there were many "Little River's", the sign became the band's name.

Little River Band's third release Sleeper Catcher, leans more towards easy listening than with Diamantina Cocktail.

The title and front cover depicts "Australia's National Game" which is illegal gambling carried on under wraps. The sleeper catcher is one who gathers up the money from the slow retrievers and is an accepted member of the game.

The "pop" cuts on the LP include "So Many Paths" and "Shut Down Turn Off" which has a dramatic ending. A song with as equally a dramatic beginning was "Fall from Paradise" which tells of God and his followers.

Two released cuts from the album include "Lady" and the hit "Reminiscing" of a couple who will marry and when they are old will just think of the past and their lives together.

I think we will be hearing a lot more about the Little River Band and their unique style of music.

Now, everybody's running

by Rav Warren
Features Editor

This is going to be another testimonial to the power of the gospel of running. Before you stop reading, however, be assured, this jogger is no fanatic. Two miles a day is sufficient for my needs, and "Runners World" will not be found on my bedside table. And God knows, I'll probably die without ever being tempted to try a marathon.

Non-runners are justifiably results of running are, the real mystique of the activity comes from its mental effects. "Fundamentalist" runners preach the benefits of their sport with such hyperbolic rhetoric that one might think they were selling patent medicine. Lofty phrases about deep spirituality and inner peace emanating from aching tendons fill today's literature.

Fortunately, it's not all holy to sell running products.

of mental fatigue leaves one feeling more energized than before the exercise.

Those wishing to begin running will be glad to learn that neither a great deal of time nor a large outlay of money is required. Once you work up to several miles a day, consideration should be given to purchasing a good pair of running shoes. To begin with, however, there is little harm in just using your sneakers, provided they give relatively good arch support and cushion for the heel. Cheap basketball sneakers without any significant padding should not be used as even slight pounding on hard pavement can cause shin splints or worse.

Socks should be absorbant free of holes (to prevent blisters) and preferably white.

Long distance runners prefer nylon shorts which hardly chafe at all. The short distance recreational runner, however, need only be concerned that his or her shorts allow freedom of movement. As the weather cools, warm-up suits (or sweat pants and shirts) are recommended. These cotton garments are well ventilated and prevent overheating as one warms up. By absorbing sweat, they also protect the runner from too rapid cooling after the exercise is completed. Non-cotton sweaters and jackets are not only bulky but dangerous, because they lack these properties. (Students are entitled to use sweat pants free from the gymnasium locker room.)

According to David Ross, who runs for the UNCW cross-country team, the most important thing for a novice runner to remember is to take it easy at first.

"Don't go out and try to set a world record the first day," he warns. Ross also recommends that one try to remain relaxed and loosen up while running. Before starting, he advises stretching exercises, such as standing up, crossing one's legs and touching the toes.

New joggers may experience pain in the side when they first begin to run. According to Ross, this is known as "the pain barrier."

"Keep running," he says, "and you'll get over it." Some people also claim to gain relief by actually concentrating on the pain.

So what of the faddists and fanatics? Will running a bit each day place one in that category? No, it won't. Nor should one be concerned if progress seems slow. Even if your beginning pace is abysmally slow (and your distance measured in yards) both physical and mental benefits will accrue as long as your heart is forced to work relatively hard for ten to fifteen minutes. If this occurs as little as three times a week the effect will be noticeable. As time passes, both pace and endurance will increase, but the critical measure will continue to be your own requirements for elevated exercise, rather than objective measures like time and distance. Eventually each person finds a distance and pace that fulfills his or her needs and leaves him or her satisfied.

If one has a medical problem such as diabetes, heart disease or significant obesity, a doctor should be consulted before any exercise program is started.

For most students, however, running merely represents a return to a lifestyle that predates the era of modern technology. Although we no longer must run from prehistoric beasts or rampaging savages to survive, our bodies need to have that activity to operate at maximum efficiency. Otherwise, the mental stresses of technological society will rob us of both happiness and health.

Having a regular schedule is important to maximize the benefits of running. Only thirty minutes a day is required, and as time progresses, most people come to look forward to that period of the day. Perhaps a few people will go on to be great marathoners. However, for the majority the pay-off isn't public, but personal.

In the words of David Ross, "the best reward is self-satisfaction. Nobody's gonna come up and say 'good for you'; you ran today," he adds, "but you really feel good about yourself." Amen.

LIVING BY THE SEA

resentful of the arrogance of so many zealous instant "experts" on the subject. As vexing as this "my legs are holier than thine" attitude is, however, the real benefits of running remain undisputed.

As we all learned in P.E. 101, running (jogging) increases the efficiency of coronary circulation (preventing heart attacks), increases the heart's efficiency (allowing it to work less while we rest), and may decrease the body's tendency to accumulate cholesterol in the arteries. Also, while running short distances, such as a mile or two, doesn't burn a huge number of calories, it can lead to weight loss if combined with only a moderate decrease in calorie intake. As beneficial as the physical

Although the exact mechanism is not understood, there is growing scientific evidence that running can be very useful in relieving mental stress. In fact, some psychologists and analysts have begun to use a program of running to treat mild forms of clinical depression.

In the personal experience of the Seahawk's feature editor (yours truly) running does help improve efficiency and reduce fatigue. Away from the sensory bombardment of radio, television and conversation, the mind is free to work in peace. Problems and commitments which had threatened to overwhelm, become quite easy to approach under the wonderful spell of oxygen deprivation. Quite often, the clearing away

UNCW student spends "Summer School" at Oxford university

by Kirk House
Staff Writer

To say that Rennie Richardson learned a lot in school last summer would be kind of an understatement. Richardson, a senior at UNCW was privileged to study at one of the most prestigious universities in the world, Oxford of England.

"You can't help but be stimulated in your studies by an experience like that," commented Richardson. "The beauty, the tradition and the history of Oxford are very vibrant and very much alive. The academic environment is really inspirational."

A philosophy major, Richardson took a course there in contemporary British philosophy. He was taught by well-known Oxford philosopher Brendan McLoughlin. In England, the education system is quite different from the American college. Students there study under a tutorial arrangement, one-to-one with their teachers. The student usually meets once a day with the teacher who guides the student in independent study. The one-to-one student-teacher arrangement naturally provides a very concentrated and intense study.

"My tutor pushed me very hard," said Richardson. "On our first day's meeting he assigned me two books to read and a paper to write within three days. During the whole 28 days, I read nine books and wrote four papers, all of which were defended orally."

Rennie Richardson

Although the student-teacher arrangement may seem more informal than a classroom setting, it is really not, according to Richardson.

"I wore a coat and tie every day," he said, which was quite a switch. His long hair created an identity problem because, he said, "I'm not into punk rock, for one thing." But the coat and tie helped him out, and it added to the atmosphere of serious study, said Richardson.

The overseas study program is conducted by UNC-Ashville in conjunction with N.C. State University. UNCW is not regularly involved with the program, but the school's philosophy department was able to make the necessary contacts for Richardson.

The UNCW department had prepared him pretty well for study at Oxford, Richardson feels.

"They've taught me to think critically, to examine various possibilities," he said. "For our size, I think UNCW has a good faculty."

Students in Britain are more advanced than Americans in many areas, though, he noted.

"They are much more versed in the classics; they still read Greek, for instance."

"The cultural resources are much more rich," Richardson continued. "There are ballets, concerts, theatrical performances - something going on almost every night. Over here we've got 'Laverne and Shirley.'"

The cost of Richardson's summer excursion was close to $2000. Of that, the actual cost of the study at Oxford - including tuition, room and board - was about $650. Most of the rest was spent hopping through Europe for another month, which Richardson did on his own.

"I was definitely enriched by the whole thing," he commented (and who wouldn't be?). "It's really unfortunate that more students don't participate in a program like this, because they probably could if they wanted to."

Southern New Hanover County has undiscovered treasures

by Ray Warren
Features Editor

Next time you find yourself with an empty weekend schedule and you're facing the threat of boredom, consider taking a trip to southern New Hanover County. The area south of Snow's Cut offers a number of opportunities for free (or cheap) diversion.

If you own (or can borrow) a tent, tarp or van, consider camping. At Carolina Beach State Park, up to four people can camp for only $3.50 per night. Additional persons (up to two per site) cost an extra .50 cents. Non-campers can enjoy nature trails and an exciting view of the Cape Fear River. Be warned, however, that the mosquitoes are vicious so repellent is a must.

Below Kure Beach is Fort Fisher. During the Civil War, this fort defended Wilmington from the "damn yankees." Today, even if you are a yankee, you'll be able to see the restored earthworks and monuments to the combatants.

A free museum features excellent artifacts and displays.

If you long for seascapes like the one that used to grace the opening of soap operas like "The Secret Storm," then you'll love the ocean side of the Fort Fisher area. Large rocks, placed here to halt beach erosion give the shore the spirit of coastal Maine. Unless the sea is unusually calm, the crashing surf should be quite a sight.

You don't have to be a marine biology major to enjoy the Marine Resources Center at Fort Fisher. One of three such centers, the one at Fort Fisher features interesting aquariums full of exotic sea life and other marine exhibits. Admission is, best of all, free!

Ever ridden a ferry? If not, now is your chance. The ferry trip to Southport is interesting enough to make it worth your while even if you take the next trip back to Fort Fisher. For a better adventure, though, why not take bicycles along and ride through the picturesque streets of Southport.

One of the state's prettier fishing towns, Southport is now the home of the former Frying Pan Shoals lightship. Also, there is a state-owned small boat harbor. If you decide to walk or bike through town don't miss the last ferry trip back to New Hanover County. If you do miss this last departure, you could face an awfully long bike ride or walk back to Wilmington via the downtown Cape Fear bridge.

Before leaving the ferry area, walk a few hundred yards from the ferry slip to "the rocks." This unique dam was built after the Civil War to close New Inlet and improve navigation on the Cape Fear. We've heard reports that one can walk along the crest of the dam all the way to Bald Head Island at low tide. Since we don't know the validity of that claim, anyone who makes the five-mile trek (and lives) should report to the Seahawk office at once. You'll be named our star investigative reporter for the week.

Take out your togas, gang, fraternities are coming back

(CPS)—Five years ago, 'going out for rush' was often tantamount to admitting membership in the Young Republicans or ROTC. But pledging is again becoming socially acceptable on American campuses. After an all-time low in the early seventies, memberships in fraternities and sororities are reaching rates of ten years ago and, at some schools, reaching new records.

"There are now 2.7 million fraternity members in the U.S. and Canada," bubbles Jack Anson, executive director of the National Inter-Fraternity Conference. "That's a total of 4700 chapters on 625 campuses. Back ten years ago, the average number of initiating members in a chapter was 49. In 1971-1972, it dropped to 34. Now we're back up to 46." For the Years to come, Anson expects "a far steeper increase."

At northern universities, an average of over 10 percent of the student body will pledge this year. There's a much enlarged pool of rushees, like 1977-79's record-breaking 50 percent jump at the University of Minnesota. In some southern universities, where membership barely dipped in the early seventies slump, as much as half the student body will pledge. At Duke University, for instance, 51 percent of the freshman men and over 40 percent of the women pledged in 1977-78. Overcrowding was so bad that 79 Duke women were turned away after signing bid cards.

Many attribute the increased Greek popularity not as much to changes within the Greek system, but changes in the students themselves. "The type of student attending college now is more like the student of the '50's and early '60's," relates Evelyn Bennett.

A former sorority woman, Bennett has observed Greeks for over 30 years as Pan-Hellenic secretary at the University of Texas-Austin. "Students tend to be more career-minded and are more willing to work within the system," she adds.

Larry Frank, former dean of men at the University of Texas, agrees. Students of the late sixties, he feels, viewed fraternities "in the same way as the big military-industrial complex; more establishment oriented, with members thought to be sons of the more affluent."

But now, as University of Colorado Chi Psi member Pat Quinlan puts it, "people turn their energies to themselves instead of the social things of the '60's. These (fraternities) are good places to be." A Delta Kappa Epsilon member put it more simply: "Students are looking for fun. Everything doesn't have to be serious anymore."

Morris announces competition

(Philip Morris). Philip Morris Incorporated has announced its tenth annual marketing communications competition for college students. The purpose of the competition is to provide students with a practical and realistic business project, bringing them into direct contact with the business community.

A $1000 grant will be awarded to the winning entries at both the undergraduate and graduate levels. Runners-up will receive $500 grants, and other finalists in the undergraduate and graduate categories will receive special merit awards. Entries may deal with any aspect of the broad areas of marketing communications related to Philip Morris Incorporated, its non-tobacco operating companies or any of its non-tobacco products.

Student chapters of professional societies, regular classes or ad hoc committees of no less than five students at the undergraduate level and no less than two at the graduate level under the counsel of full-time faculty members may submit proposals.

For additional information, please contact Marketing Communications Competition, Philip Morris Incorporated, 100 Park Avenue, New York, New York 10017.

UNCW considered for marine lab site

by Robert S. Brown
Staff Writer

UNCW is one of five universities nationally being considered by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration for the management of an underwater research lab.

The lab would be able to house four people for seven to ten days who would carry out research which could not be carried out on land. It would include a work area, a living area and a decompression chamber as essential compartments. Day missions would also take place when necessary. The facility would be located on the ocean floor in an area of hard sand and rocky bottom, two or three miles off Wrightsville Beach in 40 to 50 feet of water.

Research would be conducted on areas such as sand drifts, ocean rock formations, the status of commercial and reef fish populations, underwater environmental problems and the circulation in ocean currents.

It would also be used to familiarize divers in scuba techniques related to decompression and expose them to the experience of living in a marine habitat. Experiments dealing with the effect of different gas mixtures on habitat dwellers may also be part of the research carried on.

According to Dr. Gilbert W. Bane, director of UNCW marine sciences, the school has received a $5000 grant from N.O.A.A. to study the feasibility of an underwater habitat near Wilmington.

A report on the study is due at the end of January and by spring a decision should be made. If the results are positive, construction and location of the habitat would begin in late spring or early summer.

Dr. Bane is confident that the habitat will be approved for UNCW because it has become one of the leaders in the Southeast on marine studies. Other influencing factors are the respected reputations of many of the faculty members, the fact that this is a dynamic area for the geology and chemistry of the coastal zone and the availability of diving pool facilities.

Presently there is only one underwater lab on the mainland USA at San Diego, California, and one in the Virgin Islands managed by Fairleigh Dickinson University. The N.O.A.A. is planning to build four or five more on the mainland.

If the project is approved the multimillion dollar structure would be built by the N.O.A.A. The habitat would be managed by UNCW and used for research by the federal government and by scientists in North Carolina and other states.

Dr. Bane is also looking for projects offered by students that need funding.

MEETINGS

Wednesday, September 27

The UNCW Young Democrats will hold their first meeting of the year Wednesday at 4 p.m. in H227. All interested persons are encouraged to attend this meeting. Topics of discussion will include officers for the coming year, activities, meetings and participation in the fall campaign. Interested persons unable to attend may contact Bobby Parker, president at 392-0457.

The UNCW Rowing Club/Crew will hold a meeting in B103 at 4:30 p.m. Equipment and conditioning for the coming season will be discussed. All interested persons are welcome to attend.

Thursday, September 28

The Criminal Justice Majors Club will hold its first meeting for the fall semester of 1978, Thursday at 3 p.m. in H106. Plans for service activities and a cocktail for the upcoming year will be discussed. We feel like this club is a great opportunity for those studying in the field of criminal justice. Be there!

Monday, October 2

APO would like to remind the Brothers to remember the concert on October 1 and the Brotherhood meeting on October 2, at 7:30 in C114. Dues will be due by October 11.

NOTES

The Brothers of Alpha Phi Omega are pleased to announce the names of the Upsilon Pledge Class. The Pledges for the fall semester are: Donna Fisher, Meg Squires, Carol Fields, Heather Payne, Rynn Wooten, Ronnie Joyner, Carl James, Chris Mann, Jim Godwin, Del Clark, Allen Isenhour, Anne Lewis, Rich Watson, John Saunders and Jerry Corbett. The Brothers wish to congratulate these persons for being accepted into pledgehip. The pledge period started Sunday, September 24 and will run until November 12.

The Brothers will hold a raffle tonight (Wednesday, September 27) for 2 pairs of tickets to the Outlaws Concert, October 1. Tickets are 50 cents each and will be sold in all three dorms.

Sunday, September 24 the Chemistry Club held an open house at the home of Dr. Louis Adcock. We were pleased with the response by all the chemistry majors who dropped by. If anyone would like to affiliate with the ACS, who couldn't make it Sunday, they may still do so—there is no deadline for this. Also, we are still selling "Chemists Do it Periodically" T-shirts—Get yours now! They're only $3.75 and come in 4 colors (navy, red, green and lt. blue). Our next meeting will be Thursday, October 5 at 7:30 p.m. in C127.

The English Club is now meeting in the Patio (behind Hardee's) for Happy Hour every Thursday at 4 p.m. All students are invited to attend these meetings. This semester the English Club will sponsor several films, one poetry reading, a raffle for a keg of beer, and the traditional knock-down, drag-out, end-of-the-semester party. For more information contact Richard Long (256-9286) or Betty Salyer (799-6189).

Sigma Phi Nuthin would like to announce a rush party, Friday night, September 29. It will be held at the College Manor Clubhouse. Free beer for everyone!

Recruiting Visits

Recruiting visits of prospective employers are arranged on campus by the Career Planning and Placement Office. For more information about these visits, contact the office in room 202 of the Student Services Building.

Sign-up sheets for a recruiting visit are available beginning Monday mornings three weeks in advance of the visit. Students are urged to sign up early.

The following are recruiting visits scheduled for the fall:

NCSL attends meeting

The UNCW delegation to the North Carolina Student Legislature returned Sunday from an Interim Council meeting held in Salisbury, N.C., at Catawba College. Following a party Saturday evening, much legislative business was carried out Sunday morning and afternoon including committee meetings, reports and floor debate on rules and procedures for legislative operation.

Several members of the UNCW delegation were appointed to committees including Todd Fennell to the constitution committee, Wes Armstrong to the data bank committee and Ray Blackburn to the publicity committee. Last year's delegation chairperson, Jon Fail, is serving as the chairperson of the membership committee this year and current delegation chair Mark Beanblossom coordinated delegation activities.

John Ingram, candidate for the U.S. Senate, addressed the NCSL delegate speaking to various issues from national defense to new energy sources. Next month, Senator Jesse Helms will address the NCSL at the interim council meeting sponsored by the UNCW delegation on October 21.

Anyone interested in the practical aspects of political operations should investigate the activities of the North Carolina Student Legislature. Meetings of the UNCW delegation are open to all interested persons of any discipline and are held in study room 3 in Randall Library at 4:30 p.m. on Thursdays.

UNCW students, faculty participate in exploration of Russian lake

by Helen Hazelton
Associate Editor

Lake Baikal (pronounced By-kal) in Siberia is 500 miles long, 30 miles wide and about one mile deep, which makes it the world's deepest lake. It is a fresh water lake with clear, cold waters and a tall mountain range which literally drops right into the lake. It's an old lake (the world's oldest, in fact) and it has managed to let its inhabitants survive there for millions of years relatively undisturbed.

This beautiful lake was the setting for the first scientific expedition led by United States scientists. The leader of this historic expedition was Dr. Ralph Braur of the Institute of Marine Biomedical Research at Wrightsville Beach. He and three colleagues, Steve Wright, Jody Kaiser and Diane Nesbitt, spent approximately four weeks studying deepwater organisms in the lake.

According to Dr. Braur, the institute is conducting research on the mechanism by which salt is transported through the tissues of the body at relatively high pressures. He needed to study an organism which lived in very deep water. And because he was studying the mechanism by which salt is transferred, the organism could best be studied if it lived in fresh water. Lake Baikal was the answer.

Lake Baikal has deep, cold waters. Because it is cold, oxygen penetrates all the way to the bottom, and so organisms can live on the bottom of the lake. Of all the organisms that are found in the lake, 80 percent of them are not found anywhere else in the world. To a scientist, this is sheer paradise.

A small primitive crustacean proved to be the animal they were looking for. Galmardas (the scientific name) looks somewhat like a crayfish and ranges from one-half to three inches long. Forty percent of all the species of this genus are found in the lake.

Basically there were three major experiments:

1) What effect did the increased pressure have on these organisms from different depths;

2) What effect did the sodium balance have on these organisms. In deeper water, organisms lose salt. If this is true, would the organism stop losing salt if it is returned to its habitat at its original pressure? and,

3) Will this salt loss happen in all of the species of this particular organism?

As it has been recorded, there were consistent differences between the shallow and deep water crustacea. This in itself was a major breakthrough. It was the first concrete demonstration of the relationship between deep and shallow water organisms.

All of this sounds so scientific and time-consuming—and it was. It took Dr. Braur three years to get permission to study in Russia. Because this trip was not funded with government money (instead the National Geographic Society partially funded this trip). Dr. Braur had to follow the route through the United States Academy of Sciences and the Russian Academy of Sciences.

The biggest barrier to overcome was that of language. It is very hard to communicate with Russians through "a telegram in English," Braur said.

Finally, clearance came through ("official clearance came three days before plane time," he said chuckling) and on July 1, the four-membered crew set off for Russia with 2000 pounds of gear. Arriving at the lake a few days later, the US crew found the Russians to be warm, friendly and very willing to help. Braur and his crew were given facilities at the Limnological Institute on the lake, a 100-foot research ship with a Russian crew of five and a scientist/engineer to assist in the gathering of these organisms.

According to Steve Wright, Jody Kaiser and Diane Nesbitt, there was just as much to learn about Russian culture and their way of life as there was to learn from the capture and study of these crustacea. In talking with the three, it is discovered, and much to one's surprise, that Russian people are basically no different than Americans. Because we Americans are exposed to very little information concerning the Soviet Socialist Republic and its inhabitants, hearing any news from travelers makes one extremely curious. And by the same token, it was learned that Russians are extremely curious about us.

Because their government censors most news, a visit from an American brings a round of questions. According to Steve Wright, one student asked him why the Americans "wanted the neutron bomb." And young people have the idea that all Americans take drugs.

On the other hand, Russians are hungry for news from the western world. The Russian government, however, considers the western world to be a bad influence on the Russian people and they do not want Russian culture to be disturbed. For example, the young people of Russia long for American-made blue jeans.

Instead, theirs come from places like India and England. So, some young people paste the American flag or a symbol of the eagle on their back pockets. This is in no way political, says Jody Kaiser; it just means that they want other people to think that they have American-made blue jeans.

Goodwood to reopen soon

by Bobby Parker
Editor

The Goodwood Tavern, closed since June due to the relocation of several offices, will soon reopen as the offices are moved into their permanent locations. Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy announced the decision Monday, which is possible because other administrative offices currently in the student union will move back to Alderman Building this week.

The Goodwood has been occupied by the Counseling and Testing Office while renovations have been in progress in Alderman. Other offices placed in the union this summer were Financial Aid, moved to part of the former bookstore, and Career Planning and Placement, taking part of the Seahawk Office.

The Counseling Office is scheduled to receive permanent quarters in rooms formerly used by the bookstore. However, renovations to those rooms is not complete at this time.

Administration officials earlier had said that the Counseling Office would not be moved again until its permanent offices were ready. But the plans were changed, evidently to facilitate the reopening of the Goodwood.

The Career Planning Office had been scheduled to move last week, but was delayed due to painting being completed in its new offices. The office will be located in room 205 of Alderman, and officials say it will move this week.

The Financial Aid Office will be relocated in permanent space in room 110 of Alderman, formerly the Admissions Office. Financial Aid administrators will reportedly be moved today.

The Counseling Office will move into the room vacated by Financial Aid, which is next to the recreation room of the Pub. It will remain there until its permanent offices are ready.

Student Activities Director Linda Moore said that food service management had already been informed of the decision to vacate the Goodwood. She said that plans are being made to reopen the tavern "as soon as possible" but that additional staff must be hired, the rooms cleaned up and food ordered.

The Goodwood is operated by the same food service company which runs the cafeteria and snack bar. It offers food service to resident and non-resident students, as well as provides a place for coffee-house-type entertainment and other activities.

Meanwhile, as renovations to the second floor of Alderman are completed, offices in that building have been shuffled to move many business offices upstairs and Student Affairs offices downstairs. The moves are being made to comply with new federal regulations mandating accessibility of university offices to handicapped students.

The Student Affairs Office, which includes Vice-chancellor Malloy and the deans of students, has been separated into two offices. Malloy will soon be located in A-118 while the deans are in A-104.

Veteran's Affairs will be placed in A-205 with Career Planning. The Accounting and Purchasing Offices have moved upstairs to A-202 and A-216, respectively.

The Housing Office has moved from Belk Hall to A-201 along with the Contracts and (See Goodwood, page 6)

Veteran's official returns

by Roger Knight
Staff Writer

After being closed since June '71, the Office of Veteran's Affairs has been opened again. The federal grant to UNCW's separate office for veteran's affairs expired this summer leaving Tony Caulder, the vet coordinator, out of a job. It seems that UNCW doesn't have the necessary 10 percent veteran enrollment to receive federal money. But last February, Caulder applied to the government for a new grant, and it was approved and put into effect a couple of weeks ago. Caulder and the Veteran's Affairs office are now back in business.

The reason UNCW doesn't have enough veterans to qualify seems to be technical schools and community colleges in the area. Veterans would usually prefer a technical school-type institution where it is easier to apply some of the skills learned in the service.

UNCW does, however, have approximately 200 veterans in the V.C.I.P. (Veteran's Cost of Instruction Program) and they were placed under the jurisdiction of Dean of Students Ralph Parker. Parker added veteran's affairs to his other regular duties.

The veteran's coordinator must see to almost every aspect of a veteran's academic or financial affairs. The coordinator must fill out four forms, constantly screening the veteran about grade point average, schedule changes and credit hours. The Veteran's Office takes care of the financial problems and assures the veteran that everything is paid for.

Veterans may also receive help in getting jobs through the office. In fact, one or two work-study positions are available for veterans right now.

The jobs pay $2.65 an hour for full time veterans. Anyone interested in tutoring a veteran or veteran's dependent should contact Caulder. Tutors are paid $5.00 an hour.

What veterans qualify for the office's services? Anyone who went into the service prior to December 31, 1976, and stayed on active duty more than 180 days is eligible for V.A. benefits. Children of a deceased or 100 percent disabled veteran are also eligible.

There is no age limit. Once eligible, veterans has ten years to use their benefit. This means that the very day the ten years are up, the money runs out. So it is advisable to use the benefits as quickly as possible.

If you are a veteran or know of a veteran, contact Tony Caulder who is presently located in room 205 in Alderman Hall.

Fire threatens

A fire which began in the trash bin of East Residence Hall Sunday night around midnight caused only minor smoke damage. Nevertheless, dorm residents were treated to some excitement for a while

Band member's surgery cancels concert

By now only the campus hermit does not know the Outlaws' concert has been re-scheduled for Oct. 17. But there may be a few that don't know the reason behind the change--and it was a legitimate reason.

Earlier in the summer, guitarist Freddie Salem underwent surgery and had a kidney removed. A tour was started in September but it proved to be too much too soon. The doctor rightfully diagnosed another couple of weeks of rest. Ironically, this is the first date that the band has ever had to cancel--and it was done very reluctantly, though everyone was greatly relieved when a make-up date could be worked in on Oct. 17--two days after they play Duke.

The bill has had to change somewhat. Luckily, Wet Willie could make the change but Le Roux had a previous engagement. The Concert Committee is trying to re-schedule them for a future show. Singer-songwriter Paul Davis has been added. Davis is best known for a song, "I Go Crazy." He also has a new song "Sweet Life."

It should make for a very good show. Both the UNCW Concert Committee and the Outlaws regret the delay but trust that you will understand and hope to see you Oct. 17.

Dean's List changes deny opportunity for many full-time students

Near the end of the last academic year, quietly and without fanfare academic officials at this university changed the requirements for Dean's List honors. The new requirements, which went into effect this year, were intended to "make Dean's List more of an honor," but it appears that the administration went one step too far in their efforts.

The new requirements mandate that a student must maintain a 3.2 grade point average with no grade lower than a "B." Students also must be enrolled in 15 credit hours to be eligible for the Dean's List.

The old requirements were that a student maintain a 3.0 average with no grade lower than a "C" and be enrolled for 12 hours.

The first two stipulations of the new standards seem to be needed improvements in the honor system. It was previously the case that Dean's List was no longer an honor because the requirements were not strict and so many students made it. These changes reflect the growth of the university both in academic prestige and in student population.

But it is the last requirement that raises concern. The regulation for full-time student status remains 12 hours while the Dean's List requirement has been increased by three hours.

This means that there are many full-time students who will be unjustly deprived of the opportunity to make Dean's List. These students include seniors who have lightened their load for honors work, working students who are limited to fewer hours and non-traditional students who have family obligations to consider.

As usual, students were completely left out of the deliberations on these changes. It seems that when it comes to academic affairs, UNCW students are left out in the cold completely. It is doubtful that SGA officials will have much success as they investigate the changes and try to convince the administration to revise their decision.

The administration is likely to reach its goal of making the Dean's List more exclusive. But in the process, many full-time students will be denied the opportunity of aspiring to this academic honor. And that is unfair.

Zapruuno creators saluted by opponent

To the Editor:

As the Student Government Attorney General and former worthy opponent of "Phil Zapruuno" (against whom, I might add, I polled a formidable 67 percent in the last general election), I should like to make a few random comments concerning the re-emergence of Mr. Zapruuno as a force to be reckoned with at election time.

There are those which have suggested to me that I, in my official capacity as Attorney General, act to punish those individuals which create and perpetuate such legends as Mr. Zapruuno. Unfortunately, these ignorant, misguided souls have missed the entire point of college life. College is to serve as a catalyst to hunking as well as thought. Sadly, long gone are the days of poisoning the Chancellor's water supply (a thought which is not unpleasant to a great many of us), swallowing goldfish, and the proverbial panty raid. It is a sad fact of life to find that students are now copulating with administrative forces to see to it that any positive act of mischief is dismissed as blasphemy against the Holy Grail of by-the-book university living.

Therefore, to the creators and perpetrators of all the world's "Phil Zapruunos": I salute you. Because of you, life at this sleepy southeastern university has taken on an air of respectability. You have presented us all with a challenge--the challenge to be creative enough to come up with pranks which are worthy of someone calling him/herself "student", and the challenge to be broad-minded enough to accept the pranks as good clean fun, rather than a destructive force which merits administrative "peeing on your wheaties."

Frankly, I would be honored to run against "Phil Zapruuno" again, and maybe this time, I'll even vote for him.

Glen Downs
SGA Attorney General

'Camp David' brilliance missing in other foreign ventures of Carter

President Carter, as the Camp David Summit has shown, can be successful at international diplomacy. One is forced to wonder, however, how such brilliance can be so totally lacking in other areas of American foreign policy. In the shining light of Camp David, the cesspool that is America's African policy is made sickly more conspicuous.

In some cases, the two goals of American foreign policy are at odds and one must be compromised. Thus, in Iran our strategic goals prevent us from fully promoting human rights. Likewise, a moral commitment to Israel hampers our attempts to advance needed military alliances with the oil-rich Arabs.

The present situation in Rhodesia presents no such paradox. American policy is working counter to both our strategic interests and the advancement of human rights.

To understand the present situation, an important distinction must be made between the Rhodesia of last year and today's government in Salisbury. Today's regime is composed of a bi-racial executive council of three blacks and white prime minister Ian Smith. In December, elections will be held for a new Parliament in which blacks will hold a huge majority. The white minority will be guaranteed some seats to protect their rights, but they will no longer be the martyrs of the new nation which will be called Zimbabwe. In short, "majority rule" that much sought after goal, will become a reality.

Before the present regime came to power, the Rhodesian dispute was quite clear cut. The United States, quite rightly, supported those blacks within and outside of Rhodesia who were fighting for the right to participate in the political process. Now when that goal is within reach, however, it is in danger of being wrecked and this country is a major culprit.

Bishop Muzorewa and the other moderate black leaders placed their lives on the line to bring about a peaceful revolution in Zimbabwe. Two communist-inspired guerrilla leaders, despite invitations and pleadings, have thus far refused to join the government these moderate blacks helped to create.

Armed with money and weapons from Cuba and Russia, Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo have no reason to place themselves at the mercy of a free election. Both Marxists, they desire absolute power and one party rule for Zimbabwe and have said as much. Recently they flew to Ethiopia to celebrate a Marxist victory and confer with their mentor, Fidel Castro. Obviously it is not in our strategic interests to have a communist state established in the heart of Africa.

Aside from our own national interests, however, our present support of Nkomo and Mugabe is unconscionable from the viewpoint of advancing human rights. When we should be pressuring them to come to terms with the bi-racial government in Salisbury, we instead undermine that government by sanctions and withholding recognition.

Bishop Muzorewa, who long suffered for the cause of majority rule, came to this country to plead for recognition, but the Carter administration ignored him.

United Nations ambassador Andrew ("hoot and Mouth") Young still rails on about the need for majority rule, ignoring both the guerrillas' promise to create a dictatorship and the near absolute lack of democracy elsewhere in Africa. He flies into a rage when the Rhodesian army crosses into Tanzania to pursue communist terrorists, but he seems unable to speak when the guerrillas slaughter Rhodesians of both races.

Young, of course, could care less for the facts. A committed ideologue, he knows that the radical liberation rhetoric, no matter how unsubstantiated, sells well in the third world. So, he is praised in socialist capitals while Rhodesia bleeds.

President Carter, politician to the core, is too afraid of domestic black reaction to dismiss Young. His attitude, which should be taken as an insult by intelligent blacks, seems to be that he can't find a competent black person to replace Young. Therefore, he offends nobody by letting an incompetent opportunist dictate foreign policy.

At the pleading of Bishop Muzorewa and other Rhodesian blacks, senator Jesse Helms and several other senators have secured legislation to allow Carter to lift economic sanctions against Rhodesia and to recognize the Salisbury regime. He should do so immediately.

The choice in Africa today is not to support black against white or vice-versa. The choice is between a moderate black leadership dedicated to free elections and racial harmony or Marxist guerrillas bent on absolute power and revenge. There is no reason, moral or otherwise, to cast our lot with the latter.

The daily toll of terror and murder perpetuated by the so-called patriotic front is staggering. Yet despite the murder of government supporters of both races, the slaughter of priests, nuns, and missionaries, and the cold-blooded killing of the survivors of a guerrilla-caused air crash, Young continues to mouth platitudes and Carter to dawdle. As all hope for peace and real majority rule slowly dies, both men should consider what their actions will mean in the judgement of history.

If 500,000 whites and an equal number of blacks are slaughtered by the very guerrillas the United States supports, that judgement will be rightfully harsh. That is, after all, a lot of blood, even for the hands of two Americans who piously call themselves "born again" christians. May God save Bishop Muzorewa and the other people of Rhodesia from such hypocrisy, and America from responsibility.

the joys of dormitory life

College life can be a lot of fun. Even dorm life can be a thrill a minute (yeah, the kind of thrills that wake you up at three in the morning with an overwhelming urge to knock your giggling roomie in the head...hard). But seriously, folks, is dorm living all it's cracked up to be? I mean, is it worth it?

The truth is, yes, I have a confession to make. I live at home. I've never known the special communal joy that results from sharing your living quarters with another slob (or maybe fifty other slob, depending on how popular Your roommate is. I've never known the independence of casually coming in five minutes before sun-up, or leaving my bed unmade for seventeen weeks. Gee, it must be a barrel of fun, sharing the dizzy first days of college life with lots of other party-going whackers.

I think about all the wild 'n' crazy experiences I'm missing out on as I lie lazily in my bed at noon. I ponder the mysteries of coed living as I leave my clothes strewn all over my room, confident that dear old Mom will pick them up rather than leave them to rot. Just think of all the nostalgia I could be collecting! But no, I'll never feel the frustration of running out of bath towels, shampoo and hot water simultaneously. By this time I am feeling downright deprived as I struggle into my clean dry unwrinkled clothes.

Dormies know the satisfaction of surviving yet another cafeteria meal, while I am robbed of this queasily triumphant glow by the tasty reliability of Mom's cooking. No adventure here, I thought gloomily as I bite into a huge wedge of cheddar. "Couldn't you at least burn the bacon or something?" I snarled with my mouth full. Nobody answered. Mom was doing the laundry. Dad was mowing the grass. Where was the excitement that college was supposed to offer? In the dorms, that's where!

So there you have it...the Dormies versus the Locals. Dorm living means late-night rap sessions, camaraderie among the homesick freshmen, and parties at the drop (or should I say thud) of a keg. As for Home Living...well, there must be some advantages, but so far they remain pretty obscure.

Chess club organized

The Wilmington Tele-Cheese Club is now being organized. It offers local chess enthusiasts a convenient alternative to over-the-board games. Chess games are played between club members via telephone using either descriptive, algebraic or correspondence chess notation. No time control is observed and games are adjudicated at the request of either player. There is only one membership requirement of the Wilmington Tele-Cheese Club: an enjoyment of chess and a desire to increase one's knowledge and skill with competition. Interested chess players may call Rick Smith at 791-5662.

President vetoes Legislature's bill requiring reports from groups

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Calling it a "waste of the Senate's time," SGA President Wayne Dunlap vetoed a resolution passed Sept. 21 by the Student Legislature which would have required all organizations receiving SGA funds to submit expenditure reports each month.

There was no attempt at last week's legislative meeting to override Dunlap's veto of the bill originally introduced by Representative Jon Fail.

However, Representative Michael Sanders introduced a similar motion which the legislature voted down. Sanders' motion would have required organizations which spend more than $200 within a given time frame to submit written and oral reports. Sanders stated that the reports would allow legislators to "see where expenditures are going."

But President Dunlap pointed out that SGA officials can monitor expenditures by going to the SGA office where all financial transactions are kept on record.

"All of that is there on record," Dunlap said. "I really think time could be spent doing more important things."

Representative Jack Carter agreed with Dunlap that it would be an "awful waste of time to put this before the Senate or a committee if the information is already available."

Sanders noted that the reports would not be required of every organization but only those with the greatest expenditures.

Sanders noted that the reports would not be required of every organization but only those with the greatest expenditures.

ditures.

But Senior Vice-president Karin Whaley criticized the plan saying that the reports would come after the money is spent.

"I don't think reports after the fact will do any good," Whaley stated. She also said that legislators should put more trust in committee and organization heads.

In other Legislature business, Investigative Committee Chair Whaley reported on her inquiry into citations being given by Campus Security. Whaley said that security officers are giving out more tickets this year and that the "tickets are for real," noting that they are considered the same as tickets received off campus.

Whaley said that Chief C.N. Long of security had told her that traffic laws concerning speeding, stopping at stop signs and drunken driving are being more strictly enforced.

Several matters were referred to the Investigative Committee for further consideration. Representative Mark Beanblossom asked that parking fees be investigated including amount collected and disbursement. Senior Senator Tammy Lancaster requested that plans for commencement and Dean's list requirements also be investigated.

President Dunlap presented a letter from Dr. Ned Martin requesting that faculty members be given discounts to SGA sponsored events. Several legislators felt it would be a good move politically to appeal to faculty members, but no action was taken on the issue.

SGA Vice-president Francis De Luca presented operating rules for the Legislature and stated that strict parliamentary procedure will be enforced. DeLuca indicated that this decision had stemmed from complaints about legislative procedure.

President Dunlap announced the appointment of Lisa Townsend and Doug Browne to the Student Court. Three members remain to be appointed by the Legislature.

Vice-president DeLuca announced that Nancy Malpass has filled the position of Senior Senator vacated by Richard Long.

The Legislature also authorized the purchase of a gavel to be used at its meetings by the presiding officer. There was one dissenting vote on that motion.

Absent from the meeting were Dan Osborne, Chuck Black and Jack Allen. The next Legislature meeting will be Thursday at 7 p.m. in room 218 of the Chemistry Building.

Video equipment unused since demise of VICE

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

To the majority of students now attending UNCW, the initials V.I.C.E. mean nothing, or inspire such vague statements as, "uh, isn't that the video set-up we had around campus a while back?" That's close enough, but far from a complete definition.

Actually, the V.I.C.E. program, more formally known as Video Incorporated Campus Entertainment, was begun in the spring of 1973. The purpose of the program was to provide video entertainment and related information to interested students. The set-up was organized and supported by the SGA, and was thereafter backed by enthusiastic students eager to gain working knowledge of the complicated electronic equipment.

There was a good deal of campus participation in the early formative stages of V.I.C.E. Students worked together to insure that the broadcasts ran smoothly and the equipment was handled properly. The programs offered ranged from old movies, sports, documentaries, now-defunct series, and original campus-produced broadcasts. Several community events, as well as Seahawk highlights, were reported on and filmed by students.

Equipment used in this venture included: a portable camera, a tv monitor, a black & white reel-to-reel tape recorder, a cassette color tape recorder, and a library of films that were produced on campus. Total cost of this equipment is estimated at "ten thousand dollars plus," according to SGA Administrative Assistant Nikki Bane.

After the initial enthusiasm had waned somewhat, the program began to falter. Participation became sporadic and the formerly well-organized project slid slowly downhill. Finally, V.I.C.E. folded in the fall of 1977, due to the lack of student manpower that was necessary to make the venture a success.

With the demise of V.I.C.E., the expensive equipment "has been sitting dormant," states Director of Student Activities Linda Moore. Translated, this means that a small fortune in electronic/video accessories is sitting in a storage closet in the Pub. At the present time there are no plans for its resurrection, again due to lack of student interest.

"I hope interest will be restored in this project," said Moore. "For anyone interested in tv, advertising, broadcasting or electronics, working with this equipment would be good experience in any related field."

Street hockey arrives

"Street hockey" has arrived at UNCW. "Street hockey," basically a northern sport, is hockey played in the street, a parking lot, or any other wide open space. It follows the basic rules of the National Hockey League, differing only in the fact that it is played with a ball rather than a puck. The UNCW "street hockey" club will be using a wooden shaft with a plastic end.

"So far we've got fifteen guys who are interested in playing. Anyone (guys or girls) who would like to play, or be taught to play, is welcome to attend the meeting Wednesday at 4:00 in my office," said Jon Greene, assistant student activities director at UNCW.

The club will begin by playing inter-campus games and eventually hopes to challenge other clubs throughout North Carolina.

Gerry Rafferty blends instrumentals and vocals in new release

The U.S. music charts once again allows a foreign performer to enter its scene. The Scottish Gerry Rafferty has come through with his LP "City to City."

"City to City" shows how well you can blend instrumental solos with the voices to get great tunes. Musical solos are provided by Tommy Eyre (Piano--"Whatever's Written In Your Heart"), Raphael Ravenscroft (Sax--"Baker Street" and "Island"), Henry Spinetti (Drums--"Waiting for the Day"). The most impressive solo was delivered by Paul Jones in the title cut.

With the Bushwackers providing the introduction to the initial cut "The Ark" tells of the adventures of Noah and the Ark.

The two released songs appear back to back with the first release "Baker Street" followed by "Right Down the Line." "Baker Street" tells of a guy who realizes his bad times and how he plans to pull himself out within a year, while "Right Down the Line" is of one's love for this girl that is so great that he will change his life to sustain her love for him.

The title cut, "City to City," is the heaviest cut on the LP. This is the only rock and roller on the album and gives an effect of a train as the song tells of how a train carried him from city to city.

"Mattie's Rag" supplies a ragtime beat as it tells the classical story of boy meets girl, boy leaves girl, boy and girl get back together and live happily ever after. "Whatever's Written in Your Heart" is a basic "Rafferty" and is one of the strongest cuts while "Home and Dry" and "Waiting for the Day" are the weakest songs on the album.

Gerry Rafferty's music is definitely going to keep spreading from "city to city."

Farrah turns in good performance

Films

It must be made clear before this review begins that Farrah Fawcett-Majors is not my favorite "bod," contrary to what the advertising logo for this movie ("she's everyone's favorite bod") has taken the opportunity to reveal. No, indeed, to further contradict these all-seeing demi-gods of advertising, it has previously been my opinion that Farrah should be filed away somewhere between Bambi and Bimbo.

But anyone can be wrong. In this case, both the ad-man and I should be ashamed of prior prejudices. "Somebody Killed Her Husband" is a worthwhile diversion with legitimate humor and a tight plot. Farrah is not a Bimbo in this movie, nor does she wear anything more revealing than a midi-dress (nice wrinkled look) with a tasteful piece of calf showing, again contrary to what advertising would have you believe.

The mystery, a mixture of Neil Simon and Agatha Christie, begins with an unlikely romance between a caterpillar-obsessed toy salesman in Macy's (Jeff Bridges) and an unhappily married woman (Farrah Fawcett-Majors). One can thoroughly understand that Farrah must part with her prominent executive husband, because right from the beginning his ethics are shown to be at the least highly dubious, kind of a Samosa of the corporate world. To this point, the movie has held its own as it establishes the characters well, and the range is diverse: from the boyish Bridges, to a concerned Farrah, to a husband who gloats in the new-found prestige awarded him for having a male secretary, or the pleasure of back-stabbing a business partner.

But he doesn't gloat too long. He is mysteriously killed in the kitchen of his home with a carefully placed butcher knife. There is a good and bad side to this, however. It is good that he is dead, but bad because Farrah and Jeff Bridges are in the apartment at the time, and all the evidence points to them as being the murderous culprits. Too many people have witnessed their new affair, so a motive is evident. The only thing for them to do is put the body on ice. Actually, they conceal it in the Frigidaire and try to solve the murder themselves.

A bizarre couple (Tammy Grimes, John Wood), who live next door, become the prime suspects when Bridges and Farrah accidentally discover they are being bugged by the kinky duo. The primary sentiment aroused by this couple is one of suspicion, and it they are not responsible for murder then they are most likely guilty of gross indecency. The husband (Wood) has a stuffed likeness to Chopin leaning over the piano. Bridges says, "You must have a great taxidermist." But the two escape all suspicion by dint of murder: Their own. As the plot grows, so does the body count.

It turns out that Farrah's husband was even more despicable than imagined. He was involved in fraudulent insurance claims on stolen jewelry, which allowed him to make deals with the thieves themselves. He still had many jewels left that were never recovered, and Bridges finds them. So he and Farrah set about trapping the evil-doer. They conceal the jewels in the bowels of another stuffed object, this time a talking bear called Harry Chorlie, who is undoubtedly responsible for some good lines.

The murderer takes the bear-bait, and the basement of Macy's becomes more dangerous than any Christmas sale could be. The identity of the murderer is a half-surprise, which is better than most suspense movies recently.

One of the things that made "Somebody Killed Her Husband" an unexpectedly enjoyable movie was the diversity in the characters. Bridges is infectious in his charms, much the way he was in "Hearts of the West." There is a part of him that has never grown up. He is funny in his innocence. It is now my opinion that Farrah is not a Bimbo. Her performance, although not outstanding, is far more efficient than anything she has ever had the opportunity to do on "Charlie's Angels." Tammy Grimes and John Wood captured a humorous decadence previously reserved for the personal ads in odd magazines. And, of course, Frigidaire should be commended for keeping things so cool for what seemed a fairly long time.

"Somebody Killed Her Husband" is now playing at New Center Cinema.

'Oh, God' screened

"I loved every minute of it. So will you." Jeffrey Lyons of CBS Radio was speaking of "Oh God!" which is the next movie to be presented by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee on Tuesday, Oct. 10, at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Comedy genius George Burns teams with famous minstrel John Denver in this box-office blockbuster. "Oh God!" is a facilar adventure in humor and humanity. It tells of God coming down to earth in the cool, sharp form of old George Burns. The person he picks to help him straighten out mankind is the assistant manager of a supermarket--John Denver.

Needless to say, there are plenty of surprises. "Burns alone is worth seeing. He's a constant delight" so wrote Frances Taylor of Newark Star Ledger. "He's hilarious! ... a personal triumph for George Burns. Oh God! is an outrageously funny comedy," said Aaron Gold of the Chicago Tribune.

This sixth movie presentation by the Fine Arts Committee is in color and rated PG. It is a Warner Brothers film directed by Carl Reiner. Except for those with season passes, admission will be 50 cents for students with I.D. cards and $1.00 general admission.

Seahawks face tough home match

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The Seahawk soccer team will face an important home match today against powerful N.C. State after taking back-to-back victories on the road. The Hawks beat Stetson University, 3-1, last Monday, then blanked Atlantic Christian, 4-0, on Thursday night.

The victories raise the Seahawks' record to 4-2 for the year.

The Hawks jumped off to a 2-0 first half lead against Stetson on goals by Eddie Brock and Dennis Davis. Gil Castilla scored the final UNCW goal in the last minute of the game. Brock also had two assists, while Castilla had one. The victory snapped a two-game losing streak for the Hawks.

UNCW collected its fourth triumph of the season, blanking Atlantic Christian, 3-0, last Thursday night. For goalie Charlie Ingold, it was his first shutout of the year. He got plenty of offensive support as Chi Chi Mercado scored twice in the first half on assists from Eddie Brock and John Miller. Gil Castilla got the Hawks final goal early in the second half on an assist from Nick Stephanos.

The Seahawks face two matches this week. Today, the Hawks take the home field for a 4:00 p.m. match against powerful N.C. State. Last year, UNCW lost a close, 3-2 match to the Wolfpack. This year's rematch should be just as exciting. In the second event, UNCW will travel to Virginia to compete in the Harbor Front Classic on Oct. 6-7 (Fri.-Sat.). The field for the event includes William & Mary, James Madison, and host Old Dominion.

Dunlap, finance officials disagree on expenditures for travel

by Bobby Parker
Editor

SGA President Wayne Dunlap and members of the SGA Finance Committee, including Treasurer Nancy Reagan, are at odds over the use of funds by Dunlap to attend a meeting of the North Carolina Black Student Coalition this summer.

Dunlap attended the statewide meeting in his capacity of SGA president, spending approximately $70 of SGA funds.

Reagan, however, feels that the trip was not related to student government but that Dunlap had really represented a specific campus organization, the Black Student Union.

Reagan said that most of the other Finance Committee members agree with her position.

"My concern was that . . . (Dunlap) should use the money for student government activity, not for a specific club," Reagan said.

The funds were taken out of the executive fund which is used for the SGA president's travel expenses and SGA office supplies, as well as to pay the administrative assistant.

Both Dunlap and Reagan agreed that the amount in question is not really significant. But Reagan feels the funds should have been allocated to the B.S.U. for this purpose.

The treasurer said that the president of the B.S.U. had planned to go to the conference but was unable to at the last moment. She said that since B.S.U. would have paid for the expenses, it should have paid Dunlap's expenses when he decided to go.

Dunlap, however, disagrees with Reagan. "As president (of SGA) . . . I have to be aware of the total life of the entire university system," Dunlap stated. "Even though I am black, I represent all students."

The Black Student Coalition is a statewide organization devoted to black students in North Carolina colleges. Most members are from black student organization, but some of the schools with a majority of black students send student government representatives to its meetings.

"Black student life is a part of student life at UNCW," Dunlap continued. "With all the concerns (within UNC) involving minorities—particularly blacks—I think I should have some input" into discussions of the problem statewide.

Reagan emphasized that she "did not think (the money) was improperly used." She just felt it should not have come out of the executive fund.

Reagan said that if Dunlap wanted to represent all student interests "he should go to everything."

Last year, a representative from UNCW attended the coalition meeting at the expense of the B.S.U.

Dunlap said that the president of UNC-Greensboro's student body—who, like Dunlap, is a black elected by a majority white student body—had gone to the same meeting at the expense of SGA.

Dunlap said that the coalition discusses "issues that should be of concern to all students and are concerns of black students."

"In particular, I have a responsibility to black students in that UNC has been involved in so many black-white issues," Dunlap added.

"I think maybe they (the Finance Committee) just don't understand," Dunlap stated. "As far as I'm concerned, there's really nothing to it."

Dunlap said that even if the Finance Committee disagreed with his expenditures, the committee "does not have the power to tell me what I can spend."

The Finance Committee was scheduled to meet with Dunlap Tuesday to discuss the matter.

Tuesday, October 10

The Psychology Club would like to announce its next meeting on Tuesday, October 10 at 4:00 pm in E103. Enthusiastic students and faculty are looking for any interested persons to help organize and get the Psychology club off to a solid start. For more information contact Jim Godwin (799-7557), Milton Bellamy (799-0711), or Dr. Brown of the Psychology department.

Thursday, October 12

The Student Legislature will meet in C218 at 7 pm.

NOTES

The Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity would like to extend a belated welcome to all of the freshmen, as well as everyone who returned to UNCW this semester. Things have been busy around the Pi Kappa house over the past few weeks and, as usual, we're having a blast! As many of you know, our Wednesday night parties have been a big success. So we're going to keep it up! Just give us a call at 763-9232.

The Chemistry Club T-shirts, "Chemists Do It Periodically," are in now and may be picked up in C-115. The last day to order a T-shirt will be Friday, October 6. This is your last chance this year to buy a T-shirt, so order now! (If you have not paid for a shirt, it has not been ordered.)

Bored on Thursday nights? Come to the disco sponsored by the B.S.U. starting at 8 pm Thursday, October 5 in the Pub. Free admission! Bring your own refreshments.

You are invited to Homecoming Day at the First Christian Church, 2035 Oleander Drive, Sunday, October 8. Worship will be at 11 am and lunch will follow at 12:15.

Hola Amigos! The Spanish Club met last week for the first time this semester to elect officers and discuss tentative plans for this year's activities. The next meeting is October 5 in K103 at 2:30 pm.

They're cookin' for 500

by Ray Warren
Features Editor

Imagine being the main cook and bottlewasher for your family. Now suppose you and your mate are of the rather prolific type and have about 500 children. Rather propitious? Of course it is, but the cafeteria food service faces a similar situation every day.

The food which students miraculously find waiting for them each morning is the product of several hours of previous preparation. The cooks arrive each morning at 6 a.m. to turn on the ovens and "break out the food" for that day's first meal. Then, according to manager Phil Welch, as the breakfast crowd is waning (about 9:15 a.m.) the crew begins to prepare for lunch.

Supper preparation begins about 11 a.m. when the second shift of cooks arrives. Those who have worked all morning leave about 2:30 p.m.

Because students are allowed to return for "seconds" as many times as they desire, tremendous quantities of food must be prepared.

Reports assistant manager Bennie Simons, "We often need 200 pounds of ham or 225 pounds of roast beef for each meal, and that's just one entire."

Likewise the cooks must prepare 30 gallons of mashed potatoes, two large (eight gallon) bowls of salad and as many as 700 pieces of cake.

Sixty-two people work to prepare and serve those large quantities of food, including twenty-two students. The employees must be extremely flexible in their job skills because they are often called on to do a different job than

They usually work at. For instances, if there are problems in the kitchen, a serving person might be called down to help out. In Simons' words, "everybody works with everybody... Everyone is hired for a certain job, but nobody has a certain job."

often complain bitterly about the cafeteria running out of a certain item, the management does the best it can to avoid the problem. Unfortunately, gauging the preferences of a fickle student body is not an exact science.

"A lot of times" according to Simons, "things that should go over well don't, while something we don't expect to do well really does. There is just no way to always predict what people are going to eat," he laments.

Contrary to popular belief, most leftover food is not recycled. Only a few things such as roast beef can be used again. Not being able to re-use food is what makes proper projections of the popularity of each item so important. Excessive waste would drive up the cost of the food contract, so, as Simons puts it, they "try not to have any leftovers."

To deal with those emergencies when a particular item does run out, there is always a back-up item handy.

Ruby Floyd, one of the cooks in the cafeteria's large kitchen, says that the main difference between cooking at home and for the students is sanitation. Despite horror stories, there have been no bona fide cases of food poison from the cafeteria food this year.

"We've gotta be real careful," says Mrs. Floyd, "not to let the food drop below a safe temperature. At home," she adds, "you might have a slight danger of bacterial infection; here you've gotta be one hundred times as careful."

As an example, she explains how she can't do the "little things" such as she would do at home with her hands, but must use gloves or instruments.

Manager Welch is aware of student complaints about the food service. "I need to know what people think," he says. Unfortunately very little can be done to please each individual taste preference.

The real problem in Welch's view, is the monotony of cafeteria food. To combat this, the first of his "special meals" is being planned for October 25. "Las Vegas night" will feature a decorated cafeteria, entertainment and menu to order by. Waitresses will be on duty that night. Such antics were quite popular at UNC-Charlotte where Welch worked before coming here, and he

The workload for student activities continues to grow

by Ray Warren
Features Editor

According to Linda Moore, the Office of Student Activities "advises, coordinates and schedules" events that students sponsor on campus. In addition, as director of that office, she also has responsibility for maintaining the student union (the Pub) and operating as a satellite program for Wilmington's Voluntary Action Center.

Along the way, she explains, her job involves a lot of giving directions and counseling students.

Moore and Jon Green, her assistant (some would say sidekick), are perhaps best known for working with the student government's standing committees—dance, concert, and fine arts. That, however, is only one aspect of a multi-faceted job.

Moore and Greene have what they call "a fuzzy line" dividing the work between them. Moore generally oversees all the activities and sees to the physical upkeep of the Pub. Greene works more closely with student groups.

Among the less-than-well-known services of the Student Activities Office are serving as a lost and found station, distributing campus and city maps, providing bus schedules, and supplying brochures and catalogues. They can even help you plan your next trip to Europe with information about travel arrangements and passports.

Moore and Greene also serve on the Publications Board (which selects the editors of the Atlantis, Fledgling, and Seahawk) and on the student affairs committee.

Many clubs and fraternities work with the Student Activities Office to plan their projects. Says Moore, "We're not trying to push our goals, but the students' goals."

Moore has been working on about 30 girls who are trying to establish a national sorority on campus. They are presently waiting on word from one national group as to whether they will be accepted as a local chapter.

Greene has been working on a project to provide "free or nearly free" activities for students for the rest of this semester. With about 10 interested students, he has formed the "outa hawk" (a take-off on ad hoc) committee. This group is working on projects ranging from a barn dance (in a real barn) to "the world's largest picnic."

Soon, the Student Activities Office will expand to offer two additional services to student groups.

An information desk to be built soon in the Pub, will offer students directions to all the services and activities.

Groups needing a place to meet can now see Greene or Moore and reserve a small meeting room in the Pub. After renovations are completed another small room and a rather large assembly area will be available.

As the university grows, the workload of the Student Activities Office will necessarily increase. As Moore points out, however, much of the present increase in activity has more to do with social change than a mere increase in student population.

"Kids today are more interested in traditional activities like fraternities and dances."

Changes in student attitudes don't bother Moore, though. As she says, "We work with different students every year and that's really exciting."

... But help has arrived

by Ray Warren
Features Editor

For the past several years the load of clerical work has increasingly been a burden on the Student Activities Office.

This year, however, Moore and Greene will be relatively free of such details to pursue their other duties.

That smiling new face in Moore's office is Charyl Kane, the new Student Activities secretary.

Kane now does the typing, filing and other secretarial duties. In addition, she delivers mail to the Seahawk and Fledgling and sorts it for the various student government committees.

Soon, she will move into a small office in front of Greene's office. There, according to Moore, she'll "keep up with the massive amount of information on groups and performers" the Student Activities Office receives.

A six-year resident of Wilmington, Kane was born in Japan. Because her father was in the armed services, she, her Canadian-born mother, and five brothers and sisters have lived in many different places.

"I enjoyed it," she says of that mobile lifestyle.

After graduation from Lancy High School, Kane attended King's College in Charlotte, where she majored in accounting. Right now she plans to stay in Wilmington for a while and to get married, though she and her beau "haven't set the date yet."

Linda Moore seems happy to be free of all her clerical duties.

"It used to be that I'd no sooner get back from the administration building (where she had her work typed by an administration secretary) than I'd have to go back again." Having a secretary, she beams, will be "just great."

Students who have previously tried in vain to chase down the busy student activities director will also find Charyl Kane's ready smile and helpful information to be "just Great."

has high hopes for success at UNCW.

"We want to bring up morale and break the monotony or our students," he says.

By the end of the month, Welch hopes, the Goodwood Tavern will be reopened for student food service and entertainment by the Coffeehouse Committee (the Goodwood is a "country style" snack bar that formerly occupied the space in the Pub now utilized by the Counseling and Testing Office).

Next time you feel like complaining about that roast beef, think about it. Is it really bad, or are you just tired of eating in the same place? If it's really bad then by all means see the manager. If not, feel lucky. You may have to eat it, but some people also have to cook it. And cooking for 500 people "ain't no easy job."

Doc Watson demonstrates talent that has made him a legend

During his two performances in Kenan Auditorium last Wednesday night, Doc Watson demonstrated the talent that has brought him to be considered a living legend in the field of traditional music. He wasn't out to prove anything and he didn't have to. He just took his guitar in hand and played the same "licks" and chords he has executed for years. But when he was through the enthusiastic audiences were convinced that everything they had heard on the radio and read in the newspapers was true.

Throughout the one hour and thirty minute shows he maintained the laid-back feeling and "clean" picking style that have become his trademarks. Accompanied, during the first half of the shows, by his son Merle on acoustic guitar and Michael Coleman on electric bass and harmony vocals, he satisfied the crowds with such favorites as, "Salty Dog" and "Deep River Blues."

Other traditional tunes performed included "St. James Infirmary" and "Cypress Grove Blues" which featured Doc on guitar and harmonica while Merle complimented the rhythm with a funky lead.

More modern tunes such as "The Last Thing On My Mind," by Tom Paxton, highlighted by some excellent harmonies by Michail Coleman, and "Frosty Morn" which featured Merle on banjo, were also crowd pleasers.

Joe Smothers on guitar and vocals joined the three other musicians during the second half of the shows as a surprise guest. (Smothers performed on campus in the Goodwood Tavern two years ago where he introduced the small audiences to his won brand of entertainment which was a combination of folk tunes and folk tales.)

Doc Watson

... traditional music, clean picking and short stories.

The addition of Smothers was an obvious advantage as it expanded their limitations and allowed them to perform more vocally complex songs like "Southbound Passenger Train" which has three separate vocal parts fluctuating throughout.

The second half also contained tunes such as "Keep Me Satisfied" and "Cornstock Bules," which featured Merle on slide guitar, and the old standard "Will the Circle Be Unbroken" that Doc introduced simply by saying, "I really enjoyed working with the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band a while back."

As an encore for the second show the band played "Treat Me Like a Fool" by J. Hurt and "Blue Suede Shoes" which gave everyone a chance to do a short solo break. Merle played his best slide of the night on this; Joe Smothers brought out a washboard and played it; Michael Coleman had his turn on bass and Doc had his on guitar.

The evening was opened by

Gamble Rogers

Staff photos by Howard Jarrell

Gamble Rogers who was a fine musician and storyteller. Some people liked him but thought he didn't move along fast enough. Others were caught up in the rhythm and timing he had worked out that sustained the whole act and held it together, instead of being a loose group of short stories or jokes.

Generally speaking, the acoustics in Kenan Auditorium were excellent. This made the evening much more enjoyable and easy on the ears.

New classroom building awaits final inspection

By J. Dillon Bryant

Staff Writer

A new 1.6 million dollar instructional facility for the UNCW campus is in the final stages of construction and is scheduled to be presented to the Board of Trustees, today for acceptance.

Construction began back in August of 1977. Once completed, the building will include 16 classrooms, an auditorium and several offices. Included in those 16 rooms will be 12 seminar rooms. These rooms are equipped just as any other seminar rooms would be and each room will hold around 20 people. The auditorium will hold 200 people.

The 40,000 square foot Georgian architected building consists of two floors and will hold the Mathematics, History, English, and modern Language Departments.

"It's a welcome addition to the campus. A lot of work went in to planning and getting the money for the building," said Tyrone Rowell, director of Development Office.

"There are several other needs that have also come to the attention of UNCW officials, such as a new student services center, an addition to the library and possibly a fifth dormitory," stated Rowell. "This is not saying they are going to be built, they are just needs and are still in the planning stages."

UNCW received the money for the new building when the state passed the Institution of Higher Education Capital Improvement Bond on March 23, 1976. This bond was for 43.2 million dollars, which was to be distributed among 13 of the 16 schools in the UNC system. UNCW was allotted $1,665,000 of the total figure. UNC-Charlotte and Fayetteville State were given 6 million and 4.3 million dollars, respectively, for the same type of building. The final total cost for UNCW's new building is $1,633,000, with $32,000 left over.

Commenting on the bond issue that was passed, UNC President William Friday has said, "North Carolinians have repeatedly demonstrated their affection for the University and their appreciation for what it has done in teaching, in improving the economy of the state, and in extending public services that touch the lives of every one of them. We must never forget that our institutions are inhabited by the greatest resource North Carolina possesses—its young people."

Today the building faces an examination by UNCW's

Board of Trustees. If their approval is given, approval will be sought from state officials. If given, the building will be open for the spring semester. If approval is not met, the state will give a list of modifications to be made and the building will open once these changes are completed.

New telephone system offers better service, but problems do arise

by Julie Russ

Staff Writer

For those students who are slightly behind in current events taking place at UNCW, the latest incident concerns the campus' new ultra-modern phone extension system. The former telephone system had become, over the years, totally inadequate in its capacity. There was not enough room on the switchboard for one more line, according to director of Development Tyrone Rowell.

The telephone system now in use is quite popular among large companies and is known as the Dimension PBX model. It features the popular touch-tone dial buttons and "offers some very impressive features," commented Director Rowell. One of the more appreciated luxuries afforded by the Dimension line is directly placed long distance calls, which enables administrators to make in-state long distance calls without having to enlist the aid of the switchboard operator.

In spite of varied and prestigious improvements, there have been surprisingly frequent problems that have occurred during the installation and initial use of the new phone lines. Every extension on campus has been changed from a three-digit listing to a four-digit number, and this has caused no small amount of confusion, according to UNCW's switchboard operators. Added one, "I don't think I should criticize the new phone service when it hasn't had enough time to be fully accepted yet."

In addition to the confusion regarding new extension numbers, there have been other difficulties. The new system still needs "ironing out," explained Rowell. He elaborated, "There are always problems when you switch from a tried-and-true system to a new way of communication. People are having trouble calling in to the various campus offices, but we hope to have this remedied soon."

Also, the complicated procedure of installation came at an inopportune time for the workmen. They faced the unenviable task of trying to install and monitor a highly sophisticated line of phone equipment while at the same time trying to stay out of the way of construction workers who were bent on remodeling several campus buildings. Confided Rowell, "I guess you could say it's been a headache all the way around."

In spite of all the related problems, including complete breakdown of the phone lines on the afternoon of Oct. 6, the current switchboard and phone communication lines are adequate for on-campus as well as long distance calls.

"It's been a hassle, sure," concluded Rowell. "But it's absolutely necessary and worth it in the long run."

Cole named program head

by Bobby Parker

Editor

Cindy Cole, appointed to chair the University Program Board last week by SGA President Wayne Dunlap, believes that the "big thing" about her job will be coordination of people and ideas.

Cole, who will preside over a board composed of the chairs of the various SGA Program committees, plans to have a first meeting of the group today to begin formulating plans for the rest of the year.

Cole says that she wants as much input to programming as possible and she plans to hold open forums about every month to which all students will be invited to share their ideas.

The program coordinator says she is excited about the position because "everything we do will be new" since the programming reorganization this year.

The board will bring committees for concerts, dances, lectures, Homecoming, fine arts

(See Cole, page 7)

Responsibility shared for blunders of Program Board planning

SGA Attorney General Glen Downs termed it "A whipped cream solution to a meat-and-potatoes problem." Although that statement may be said in jest, there is more truth in it than one might at first realize, because what Downs is referring to is the University Program Board.

Plans for a Program Board were first introduced last spring, in large part under the sponsorship of Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene. But Greene was not the only supporter of the plan—SGA President Wayne Dunlap has supported the concept from the beginning and SGA legislators gave it their semi-blessing at last year's budget hearings.

The Program Board made a lot of promises when it was first proposed. Programming on campus would be coordinated by one body which would make long-range plans and provide a balanced semester of entertainment for the university community. Students would get the most out of their activity money and all tastes would be catered to.

The old method of programming was inefficient, promoters of the board said, because there were just too many groups spending too much money in too many directions. Events would overlap and programmers always aimed at the broadest, most general audience, ignoring the desires of minority groups and minority preferences.

The proposed Program Board would have moved UNCW in the direction of most other universities in separating student government from campus programming. Few would doubt the wisdom of such a move, which would not only give programming greater mobility and creativity but lead student government into other areas that need much more of its attention.

Why hasn't a program board gotten off to a better start here than it appears to have done? Several parties share the blame.

First is the Student Legislature, which gave the plan a "go" sign last spring but left the responsibility of planning to other agents. Legislators have shown a complete lack of initiative in the development of the plan but have usually been quick to criticize others for not moving faster.

Obviously, the Legislature could not work on the board as a group over the summer because they are not in session. But is it unreasonable that they should have appointed a committee to devise a plan, or start thinking about its framework? What they did do is tell the board's major proponents at the time—Greene and Dunlap—to work on plans and present an acceptable proposal this fall. That action itself indicates a flagrant shift of responsibility and a general attitude of unconcern.

A more damaging act by the Legislature was its refusal to allow program funding to be distributed free of its tight-fisted control. By requiring that individual committees still present individual budgets, the concept of coordination was subverted.

The second party that must bear part of the blame for the programming debacle is Assistant Director Greene. Although he has probably put more time and effort into the Program Board than anyone else on campus, it was his unwise decision to push the plan through last spring in the final month of the semester. At that time, the promises were rampant but the specifics were not thought out. It would have been better to keep the old system of committees than to move ahead without a clear plan or organization.

But most of the responsibility for the situation rests with SGA President Dunlap. It has taken Dunlap more than four months to select a chairperson for the Program Board. In defense of that delay, one might say that he could not act until a concrete proposal was approved by the Legislature. But that excuse appears weak because the plan has been all along that the chairperson would be appointed by the President. Past experience also would have indicated executive appointment because that has always been the method of choosing program officials anyway.

Had program executives been chosen this summer, including a board chair and committee chairs, a positive plan could have begun at the beginning of this year.

Dunlap has also been the main force in steering the Program Board in a 180-degree turn that seems to be leading in the direction of the old method of programming. Today will be the first meeting of the entire board, but budgets have already been submitted and plans have already been made. That indicates that each committee is still working solely in its own area of programming, not seeking the overall, cost-efficient, long-range plans we had been promised.

Dunlap's approach also draws concern in his relationship with the Student Activities Office. Apparently—and, to an extent, validly—he has been worried about the amount of control that administration officials would exercise over the new board. These concerns have been magnified, however, out of proportion even to the extent that Dunlap did not even extend the courtesy of introducing his Program Board chairperson to Greene and Linda Moore of the Activities Office before she was approved by the Legislature. Concern about control is one matter, but Dunlap is also missing valuable advice and experience by excluding these officials.

The people who will feel the most acute effect of the program situation are the students in general. This semester has been lost—no matter what anyone says—for any vibrant programming effort on campus, and the prospects for next semester are fading quickly. And the sad part of the whole mess is that now we're right back where we started.

Faculty also neglected in Dean's List decision

To the Editor:

With regard to your editorial on October 4, "Dean's list changes deny opportunity for many full-time students," you are correct in saying that students were left out of the deliberations. Don't feel bad. The Faculty didn't fare much better. On April 24, 1978, the Faculty Senate was handed a proposal for changes in the Dean's List requirements by the chairman of the Admissions and Academic Standards Committee, Dr. Alan Watson, and was asked to approve the changes on the spot. The issue of the minimum credit hour requirement was raised, and after defeating an amendment to retain the original twelve-hour requirement, the Senate approved the present requirements. All of this is in spite of the provision of the Faculty Governance Document which requires that such proposals be presented in writing to the chairman of the Senate in time to be placed on the agenda, which should be distributed to all Faculty members "no less than three days before the meeting."

I must take exception to your criticism that a student taking twelve hours of courses is "unjustly deprived of the opportunity to make the Dean's List." At the rate of twelve hours per semester, a student would need five years to graduate. A student taking fifteen hours per semester would graduate in four years. I cannot see why two students with otherwise identical records should be rewarded equally if one takes five years to do what the other did in four. Perhaps we need first and second class Dean's Lists. Yes, academic honors are, and should be, discriminatory.

Lesson of ERA experience can be serious reconsideration of amendment process

If there is one important lesson that we have learned from the prolonged debate over the Equal Rights Amendment that both proponents and opponents could agree upon, it is that the constitutional amendment process is one of the last, most obvious bastions of states' rights today.

Since 1972, when the current ERA was passed through Congress, the amendment has been before state legislatures awaiting the ratification which will incorporate it into the Constitution. The amendment must be approved by two-thirds of the 50 states, and that is the key to the power of the states in the amendment process.

The two-thirds requirement means that a minority can obstruct the will of the majority. ERA has been sanctioned by the state legislatures of 35 states, but it will not become law unless three more states ratify it within the next several years.

At first glance, one might conclude that this process is a flagrant violation of majority rule that is the basis of democratic government. But the two-thirds provision was put into the Constitution for a distinct and admirable purpose: to limit unnecessary tampering with the document and ensure that only the most needed changes were made.

The method has worked well over the last 200 years, with only a relatively few 26 additions making it to constitutional law. In the case of ERA, however, we have witnessed how the process can work detrimentally by allowing only 15 state legislative bodies to stop implementation of the amendment. The impact is even more alarming when we look at it in terms of population: legislatures representing 70 percent of the American population have approved ERA, those representing only 30 percent have refused to ratify.

It is startling to realize that our Constitution allows this to happen. It is even more startling to realize the reasons that it has happened.

Opponents of ERA are opponents of human rights—plain and simple. Because the Equal Rights Amendment is a statement of principle that discrimination based on sex is adverse to the principles of equality, those who oppose it believe that sex discrimination is not adverse to the principles of equality.

ERA opponents subscribe to the traditional roles that have been given women and men: a woman's place is in the home, a man's duty is to be the provider. Those traditional ideas outrightly deny the truth of modern society that some people—men and women—ask for a basic choice in the direction of their lives rather than allowing themselves to be dictated to by the social values of an age gone by.

The proof that this "anti-equality" attitude permeates the opposition is in the arguments they use. They fear the establishment of a "unisex" society, as though the laws of man could change the laws of nature. They predict—with all the fervor of doomsayers—unisex toilets, homosexual marriages and (horror of horrors) mothers in combat boots and army fatigues.

If such arguments are ridiculous, they are also unfortunate because they are exactly the basis for the opponents' success in stopping the amendment from becoming law.

Other opponents like to argue the ERA on constitutional grounds, aspiring to an academic level of discussion. While such arguments that ERA is unnecessary because equal protection is already guaranteed to all citizens in the Fourteenth Amendment can at least be taken seriously, they, too, are in basic opposition to the principle of equality for all. The Fourteenth Amendment does indeed say "all persons," but it is not the outright guarantee of no sex discrimination under the law that the ERA would provide.

The advantages of ERA are as clear as the objections are muddled. Men and women would be guaranteed equal pay for equal work, equal benefits for equal needs and equal opportunity for equal potential. Specific advantages would include extension of equal employment laws to Congressional employees, equalization of enlistment and educational rights in the military and, most importantly, giving a clear direction to the nation's courts in cases of sex discrimination.

Conversely, if the ERA is not ratified it could be a signal to the courts that the law does not address sex discrimination, bringing on a wave of anti-equality decisions.

The extension bill which passed the Senate last week giving ERA a chance for ratification until 1982 also was an indication of the fact that a majority of Americans support the amendment and only a minority have kept it from passage. The vote on the extension bill was not even close—60 to 36. Those who object to "changing the rules in the middle of the game" have no valid argument because if Congress can make the rules, the Congress can change the rules.

The most important lesson we will get from the ERA experience will be that the majority does not rule in all cases. The fact that the amendment process was a deliberate attempt to reserve some powers to the states and to safeguard from constitutional revisions overnight doesn't change that fact one bit.

The amendment process—like the Electoral College process of electing our president—is an attempt to retain powers for the states, which today, is largely a sentimental ideal and little else. It often takes an important issue such as equal rights to show us the anachronisms within our constitution.

States rights, as misused by its major proponents, is an anachronism. And when it can be used to block such an important decision such as the removal of discrimination, it's time to seriously reconsider its worth.

Apathy still bad habit

To the Editor:

We were well into another semester here on the campus of UNCW and many bad habits of the past are still with us. One of the more prevalent problems is the problem of student apathy. The lack of student participation in campus organizations is a mystical and even perplexing problem to this writer.

Yes, indeed we have very viable organizations on this campus. Students who fail to partake in campus organizations and elections forfeit their right to complain when there is foul up with the administration, faculty, or student government. Granted, we as students do pay tuition, but the obligation we have just does not end there. We must question the system when it is wrong, and give credit due when it is right.

We can only do this by interacting with those organizations such as the B.S.U., Program Board, Young Democrats, and the various fraternal organizations. These organizations and others provide an adequate outlet for campus input.

Nowhere is student apathy more manifested than it is in student government elections. To illustrate a point only six percent of the student body voted for officers in last spring's SGA elections. That means that 94 percent of the student enrollment had no say as to who should serve in our student government. If the system is to work for all students this must change. Unless we the students start utilizing the different outlets of campus input, we are not going to find life on College Road getting any better.

Program Board dominates discussion at Student Legislature

by Bobby Parker

Editor

Cindy Cole, appointed by SGA President Wayne Dunlap as chair of the newly created Program Board, was approved by the Student Legislature in its regular meeting Thursday night. Cole and Dunlap also presented a proposed budget for the board which was referred to the SGA Finance Committee.

Dunlap announced other appointments to the various program committees including Steve Chiappisi, Fine Arts; David Carter, Concert; Mark Davis, Dance; Tammy Holder, Homecoming; Maurice Smith, Lecture; and Larry Hulett, Coffeehouse. All were approved by the Legislature.

The committee chairs will serve on the Program Board along with two at-large representatives. The board was created this year to unify programming being done with SGA funds in a coordinated effort.

In setting up the program Board, the Legislature had created a separate committee to handle all publicity. But Cole said Thursday that she and Dunlap feel that each individual committee should be responsible for its own publicity.

Cole said that the change would make publicity work "a lot more functional" and would eliminate conflicts that might develop over publicity priorities, creating division within the board.

Instead of a publicity committee, Cole recommended an allocation of $500 for publicity to be "filtered in" among the various committees.

Other items on the budget proposed by Cole and Dunlap were $15,400 for Fine Arts, $7,000 for Concert, $3,600 for Dance, and $3,500 for Lecture.

This brought the total recommendations to $30,000.

No recommendation was made for either the Coffeehouse or Homecoming Committees. Dunlap said that a Coffeehouse budget was not included because it was not known until recently that it would reopen soon. He also said that program officials are "not really sure" about plans for Homecoming this year, so a recommendation was not made.

Cole and Dunlap's recommendation for the Fine Arts Committee exceeds by $3000 the figure presented at SGA budget hearings last spring. Dunlap said the extra money is proposed for a presentation by actress and author Maya Angelou.

The budget presented for the Concert Committee is less than half of that requested by Committee Chair David Carter. Carter, Dunlap said, had asked for $15,000 which would include $10,000 to purchase four spotlights. Dunlap called this figure "inflationary" and said that he and Cole would recommend the purchase of two spotlights instead.

Dance Committee Chair Davis told legislators that tentative plans call for a dance every month, usually centered around holidays.

Dunlap said that the establishment of the Program Board "has dragged on and on" but that "instead of rushing into a program that was dumped on us... (we have been) taking our time."

The board was first proposed last spring with the support of the Legislature, other SGA officials and Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene.

Although several legislators urged approval of a budget last week because, Sophomore President Harry Pilos said, there has been "procrastination enough" on the issue, the body voted to send it first to the Finance Committee. Senior Vice-president Karin Whaley expressed concern that sufficient time would not be given the budget and the Legislature "would railroad it" to save time.

Assistant Director Greene said that the Program Board should meet as a body and then present a budget to the Legislature. He expressed concern that the board is not working toward a "cohesive program" because they have not met together to plan programming yet.

In other legislative business, the Investigative Committee reported on inquiries into the changes in Dean's List requirements. The Legislature passed a resolution urging a reduction from 15 to 12 credit hours to make a student eligible for the honor.

The requirement was changed from 12 to 15 hours this fall. Other changes were from a 3.0 average to 3.2 and from no grade lower than "C" to none lower than "B."

Investigative Chair Whaley and committee member Tammy Lancaster had discussed the matter with academic Dean Daniel Plyler. Whaley said that Plyler had indicated a possibility of reducing the hours requirement for honors and individual study students.

The resolution, presented by Lancaster, stated that the hours requirement should be reduced to 12 for the fall semester which would be a "trial period for raising the standards without being unfair" to students.

SGA Chief Justice Ray Warren presented a list of procedures for students to instigate court action. The list is available in the SGA office.

But Attorney General Glen Downs challenged Warren's authority to present the procedure without approval.

"I don't think he (Warren) has the authority to say 'that's the way it's going to be,'" Downs said. He suggested that a constitutional amendment may be needed to grant judicial powers.

The Legislature approved a request from food service manager Phil Welch for $750 to help pay the expenses of "Las Vegas night" which will be held in the cafeteria Oct. 25. The program will include a special menu, a floor show and Las Vegas "atmosphere."

The event will be similar to a dinner program put on by Welch at UNC-Charlotte. Another $750 will be given by the dormitory's Resident Action Team.

The Legislature appointed Earl Bragg and John Parker Wood to the Student Court. It still must appoint one other justice.

An appropriation of $150 was made to the Women's soccer team for travel expenses to attend a conference in Washington, D.C.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in room C-218. The public is invited to attend.

Campus Chuckles: It's soccer season again [sigh]

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

I suppose to some uninformed students, this time of year means only crimson leaves and scratchy sweaters, but not to us diehard sportsaholics. This, ladies and gentlemen, is Soccer Season.

Soccer means different things to different people. To my brother, soccer is an outlet for a lot of warped energy and misdirected enthusiasm. To my parents, it is a lot of tense moments spent wondering if that is really their youngest son at the bottom of that second-half pile-up. And for me, well, soccer means finding a battered black-and-white ball in the living room, under the kitchen table, and of course tucked discreetly out of sight in a corner of the bathroom (don't ask, I'll never tell).

While most normal well-adjusted students are studying in a nice, quiet atmosphere, yours truly is trying doggedly to concentrate on Sartre's concept of philosophy while a soccer ball is whizzing over my head. It's too cold to practice outside and if he doesn't practice we might lose The Big Game (anything other than a scrimmage is considered the most important game of the season) and if we lose The Big Game I'll be the cause of this calamity, and all because I'm such a selfish little twerp. By this time I am heading for the backyard myself. I can always keep warm by chewing my nails and chanting curses against that blasted soccer ball.

Sometimes I nourish a sneaking suspicion that soccer players (or jocks, as they prefer to be called) are just a trifle one-dimensional. They all seem to be limited to a vocabulary consisting of three phrases: "Just like Pele, huh?" "Wanna see something even Shep Messing can't do?" "Ah, Mom, I gotta go to practice!"

Talk about dedication! These guys make Kyle Rote Jr. look like a weekend amateur, in determination if not in talent. Their tastes tend to be pretty expensive, too. Always the yen for something newer and better, be it cleats or the newest soccer handbook. More often it's that cute little checkered ball. Around my house there are more used balls than Handi-wipes.

So if you'll excuse me, I have to go count my pennies and see if I have enough cash to buy an early Christmas present. And you guessed it—what else? An enormous full-color poster of Pele.

Administrators remain in doubt as to the meaning of Bakke decision by David Arbogast

(CPS)—Tim Bradley of the American Society for Engineering Education only shakes his head and says, "Nobody knows. They're all wondering."

That, in a nutshell, is the "consensus" that has developed among education lobbyists here in the four months since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that 38-year-old Allan Bakke was illegally denied admission to the University of California-Davis medical school because he is white.

The court also ruled that the school's admissions policy, which reserved 16 seats in a class of 100 for minority students, was unconstitutional. Yet it was the court's third ruling—that colleges may consider race as a factor under some circumstances—that generated the kind of confusion Bradley noted.

For admissions officers are trying to determine what those "circumstances" might be. Their task is not made easier by the court's split opinion on the issue. Only five of the nine justices concurred in the "special circumstances" opinion, and there was considerable dispute among those five over what constitutes an acceptable race-conscious program.

As a result, the academic community is busily running off to various conferences to see if it can concoct an acceptable affirmative action program on its own. Professional organizations like the American Council of Education and the National Assessment of Educational Progress, as well as schools from the University of Maryland to Mount Marty College in South Dakota, have already scheduled Bakke conferences this fall. Other groups, like the American Association for Higher Education, have rushed opinion booklets into print that catalogue admissions policy adjustments in the Bakke decision's wake.

The adjustments to date seem to be an empty consensus. Among the consensus' main points: That any admissions program that uses racial considerations in any way will probably be viewed by the courts as "inherently suspect," and thus be subject to review; that all schools are going to have to re-draw them to explicitly reflect the school's stated academic objectives; and that colleges will, nonetheless, retain broad discretionary powers in tailoring their admissions programs to their own goals, including the goal of increased minority enrollment.

The court itself was clear only on the first point of the consensus. On the second point, the court said schools can consider race as one element of an applicant's character, and thus his admissibility. Yet it added that to give an applicant special treatment only because of his or her race would violate the equal protection clauses of the 14th amendment.

Race as One Factor Specifically, the court decided that Allan Bakke had been denied an equal opportunity to compete for one of the 16 med school seats Davis had reserved for minority students. Minority students, though, were eligible for all 100 seats in the class. Bakke and all other whites were only eligible for 84.

Justice William Brennan wrote at some length on the third point of the consensus, that colleges should retain control over their own admissions programs, and that "more minority students" is a worthy program goal.

But he found—and the post-Bakke consensus has tended to concur—that schools will need to take a good, hard look at how they admit students. Minimally, the standards that are emerging would require schools to publicly declare their admissions policies, and to explain how the policies help the schools meet their institutional goals.

It's also clear that professional education associations are taking an active part in pushing their member schools toward new admissions programs. The emphasis is on innovation. Innovation would seem to be necessary if a school was to thoroughly consider an applicant's race within the vague bounds suggested by the court. The associations are asking schools to pattern their programs after Harvard's.

Justice Lewis F. Powell, of course, wrote approvingly of the Harvard program in his Bakke opinion. Harvard considers a candidate's minority status as one factor (in the applicant's favor) among many factors that determines if the candidate is ultimately accepted.

There is one other point on which everyone seems to agree: when evidence of past racial discrimination is proven, the courts will not hesitate imposing even drastic measures to remedy the problem.

Otherwise, speculation is all administrators have to go on right now. There seems to be agreement that something will have to be done about admissions programs in the near future, but the schools, contemplating an ambiguous court decision, are cautiously waiting to see what other schools will do first.

'Atlantis accepting student poetry, prose, art

Published by students, Atlantis, the UNCW literary magazine, is now accepting poetry, prose and art for publication in its fall semester issue. Atlantis, a biannual publication, provides for UNCW students a means to publish original creative work in a copyrighted magazine. In the past, response to this opportunity has been high. The Atlantis editors and staff feel that the response this semester will be the same.

To enable distribution around Dec. 1, all materials should be submitted by Friday, Oct. 20. Once all poetry, prose and art are submitted, respective staffs will examine each submission to determine which best reflects the creative concept of Atlantis. Those accepted for publication will then be incorporated into a literary magazine which is greatly respected throughout North Carolina University campuses.

To ensure quality, the Atlantis editors hold a separate art cover contest. From all art materials submitted, one which will most enhance the aesthetic value of the Atlantis cover will be printed by Jackson and Bell, a local printing company, on the covers of approximately 3000 copies.

Atlantis is a literary magazine made possible by UNCW students. It is published by students for students. If more information is wanted contact Richard Long, Editor-in-Chief, 256-9286; Patricia Blanton, Associate Editor, 343-8385; Bobbi Padgett, Poetry Editor, 791-8136; Lea McDaniel, Prose Editor; Sharon Ely, Art Editor, 686-0722; or Drs. Seahawks take tournament crown

Sports Editor

After a hot beginning and a so-so middle, the UNCW soccer team has again caught fire. The Seahawks went to Norfolk to play in the Harbor Front Classic and come away winners of the whole thing, with the tournament MVP and three other players on the All-Tournament team.

In the first game on Friday night against Old Dominion, the host school, UNCW fell behind early. After twelve minutes, Old Dominion scored on a penalty kick and then scored again twenty-five seconds before the half ended. Coach Calvin Lane thought the Seahawks "played well enough to be ahead," despite the score.

The second half was a different story as the Seahawks scored thirteen minutes into the period as Chi Chi Mercado booted in a penalty kick. The Seahawks tied it with twenty-three minutes left on a thirty-yard kick by Gary Wade.

During the two ten-minute over time periods defense played the major role. UNCW's Ed Donahue scored five minutes into the first overtime and that is the way the game ended, 3-2 Seahawks.

The second game was against James Madison which had defeated William and Mary 1-0. Both teams played well in the championship game. UNCW scored first, a goal by senior tri-captain Eddie Brock with an assist from Matt Wight. The Seahawks scored again to take a 2-0 lead with Chi Chi Mercado booting it through after an assist from Ed Donahue. That is the way it stood at half time.

James Madison came back, scoring three times in the second half to take the lead. But that only seemed to fire up the Seahawks even more. With one minute left in the game Eddie Brock, scored on an assist from Dennis Davis, to tie it up and send the game into overtime again.

UNCW really caught fire in the second half. After 30 seconds Chi Chi Mercado scored with an assist by Brock. Two minutes later, Gil Castilla, assisted by Mike Shafer, put the Seahawks up 5-3. Brock added another goal with eight minutes left to clinch the game, 6-3.

The seahawks on the all-tournament team were Gil Castilla, Chi Chi Mercado, John Miller and Eddie Brock who also came away with MVP honors.

Coach Lane was extremely proud of the entire team saying the tournament was the "highlight of our season so far." The Seahawks' next game is Wednesday in Buies Creek against Campbell College. The next home game is Saturday against powerful Maryland-Baltimore College.

Women's soccer is coming

Anyone interested in going out and kicking some? Because of last year's blue ribbon success in it's very first year of existence, team members are continuing to work hard to establish women's soccer as a prime candidate for the next women's sport to be added to our athletic program. This coming year promises to set even more precedent over last years "first time ever's."

The team has already scheduled a four-way tournament with club teams such as Columbia County, Maryland, Washington Metro, Chapel Hill and Meredith College, with such teams as South Florida and Virginia also under consideration. The sport is already very big in the Maryland-Virginia area as well as Florida-South Carolina area. For example, this weekend several team members plan to attend a small recruiting pool when the Washington Metro has its Columbus Day tournament with 127 "traveling teams" of women's soccer. Over half of these teams are from the Washington-Maryland area, one team is from Holland, and the others are from all over the U.S. and Canada.

Athletic Director Bill Brooks has voice his interest in forming a Division III Women's Soccer Program at UNCW. Our team this year will surely make UNCW as well as North Carolina athletic history as one of the first teams in the state to expand its program to the point of league competition.

Any woman UNCW student interested in playing a promotional preview game against UNC-Chapel Hill's club soccer team here at UNCW Saturday, Nov. 11, contact Pat Monahan at 791-6511 or the Intramural Department and leave name and phone number.

Football team wins 12 - 6

by Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

The UNCW Seahawks fought off a stubborn Duke Team for a 12-6 victory in football action played at Brooks Field Sunday. Quarterback Darrel Franks came off the bench to ignite the Seahawks in the fourth quarter. Franks tossed the game winning touchdown to split-end Paul Wood.

The Seahawk defense proved once again to be the difference in the game. The defense put the first score on the board when defensive end Jerry Pridgen picked up a Duke fumble and sprinted into the end zone with a convoy of defensive linemen. The Seahawk defense, playing a great deal of the game, held the Duke team until late in the fourth quarter. The entire Seahawk defense put in a great effort throughout the game.

The Seahawk offense finally got untracked when Franks entered the game with five minutes remaining. With the ball on the Duke 29 running backs Dave More and Clifton "Outlaw" Thomas began running inside and outside. Franks then threw a fourteen yard strike to end Paul Wood. Wood evaded a tackle at the five and raced into the end-zone.

The Seahawks are away next week in Fairfax, Virginia where they play the Fairfax Club Team.

TIME OUT

Sports offer great opportunity

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

In my short life at UNCW I have been impressed by the interest shown in almost every sports program. Although many people consider it "stupid" or "Weird" to show some spirit and interest in the school sports, it is a very integral part of college life.

Teams come into this area from all over the southeast. How would it look if two sleepy winos and a dog that sheds were all that showed up for the athletic contests here? I was particularly impressed with the turnout for the soccer game against N.C. State last week. There were about 500 people out around the soccer field in the afternoon sun to watch that contest.

Football games are another big draw. The Saturday or Sunday afternoon games give one the perfect opportunity to get a cooler full of one's favorite refreshment and get layed back.

Try it! Do some yelling. Scream at the referees or moan at some great scoring chance which has been missed. It is a great diversion from class.

At this time women's tennis and volleyball are also in full swing. While yelling tends to be frowned upon at tennis matches, volleyball games are excellent emotional releases. So get out and see a game. Find out what you are missing.

UNCW Seahawk basketball practice begins October 15. The Seahawks are looking forward to another good year coming off a 19-7 season in 77-78. They will have to replace the Martin twins, Billy and Bobby, and top scorer Denny Fields. The schedule features N.C. State, UNCC and South Florida.

Keep on eye on Gil Castilla, last year's leading soccer scorer and a candidate for All-South. Word has it that he has more moves than a belly dancer with ants.

Non-traditional students organize to attend their special problems

by Ray Warren
Features Editor

About 88 percent of the students at UNCW have something in common. They have followed the traditional scenario of graduating from high school and then immediately becoming a college freshman. Although these students have the problems common to young people in general, and students in particular, they also have a galaxy of activities, clubs, and services available to meet their needs.

The 12 percent of the student body which can be classified as "non-traditional" have additional needs, some of which are not being met by campus services and organizations oriented towards the need of the "average student."

In order to provide a forum to discuss their problems and to lend moral support to each other, some non-traditional students have been organizing an association. The purpose of this organization will be to solve problems common to its members, to provide opportunities for service to the community by the members, and to provide activities for those who feel "left out" by traditionally-oriented activities.

George Zedlitz, a veteran from Richlands (near Jacksonville), has taken a leading position in organizing the non-traditional students. According to Zedlitz, a transfer student from Coastal Carolina Community College, older students, veterans and married students often have "a lot of hard adjustments to make." For instance, says Zedlitz, married people with children don't like to take them to many campus activities.

"At the last soccer game," he complained, "some freshmen were yelling obscenities at this and that." Obviously, children should not be exposed to such an atmosphere. "These people" (parents), explains Zedlitz, "want activities that are still fun, but a little more mature."

Zedlitz expressed pleasure with the recent decision of the Athletic Department to allow the families of students to use the college swimming pool. This was a major concern of his group.

Probably the biggest problem facing non-traditional students is the extra-curricular demands on their time. Almost all have families and/or jobs. Not only does this prevent them from participating in many campus activities, it makes it almost impossible for them to get together for united action. Zedlitz and four other students are conducting a survey to determine when the best time to meet might be.

Besides offering social activities for members and pushing for sympathetic administrative policies, Zedlitz would like to see a non-traditional students organization make use of the special talents of its members.

"We've sort of sowed our wild oats," says Zedlitz. "Sometimes," he continues, "students need somebody to talk to somebody older. These kids often don't care to go to instructors with problems or to ask advice."

Older non-traditional students, Zedlitz hopes, will be able to use their experience in life to help their young co-students with problems in studying, inter-personal relations, or dealing with sex.

Those who can be described as non-traditional students, and who would like to join a fledgling organization of similar students, should contact Linda Moore in the Student Activities Office in the Pub. Hopefully enough of the 485 people in that situation (including 200 veterans) will be interested to make the project a success. Zedlitz, glowing with enthusiasm, hopes so.

"You know," he muses "I'd like for us to help support a community group like the Shriners or Rotarians. Who knows, we might have our own fish fry!"

Almost makes you sorry you're traditional, doesn't it?

'History of Science' seminars to be presented this semester

A series of presentations entitled "History of Science" will be sponsored throughout the fall semester by the Chemistry Department. Participants will include students in the senior seminar (Chemistry 495) and faculty members.

These programs will be held on Friday afternoons at 3:30 p.m. in the Chemistry Building, room 114. All interested persons are invited to attend.

The schedule for presentations follows:

Dec. 1

Panel Discussion

Topic: "The Public's Perception of Scientists"

Dr. L. A. Jackson, Psychology

Dr. C. S. Lamb, Psychology

Dr. N. H. Martin, Chemistry

Dr. R. D. McCall, Anthropology

Dr. W. J. Stenger, Chemist E. I. du Pont

Dec. 8

Panel Discussion

Topic: "The Moral Responsibilities of Scientists"

Dr. R. T. Brown, Psychology

Dr. H. V. Hart, Chemistry

Dr. C. V. Lundeen, Biochemistry

Dr. E. A. Olszewski, Physics

Dr. D. A. Robbins, Philosophy and Religion

These seminars will be held on Friday afternoons at 3:30 p.m., in Chemistry Building, Room 114. All interested persons are invited to attend.

Christian Scholar Lecture Series to raise important questions

by Vivan Martindale
Campus Minister

It has long been a concern of mine to raise questions about values in life; to ask the question, "By what standards do we live?" This occasional column has attempted to raise issues related to the ways we make sense out of life. In an effort to continue this quest the United Christian Campus Ministry has secured a grant to sponsor the Staley Distinguished Christian Scholar Lecture Series.

The purpose of the lecture series is to bring to the campus outstanding theologians and religious leaders to present the significance of the Christian faith for life and culture.

Through address and informal discussion, members of the college community are encouraged to explore and question their own religious commitment and to engage in meaningful dialogue with others.

We have secured the services of Calvin S. deWaal Malefyt, Ph.D. scholar, lecturer and pastor of the University Reformed Church in Ann Arbor, Michigan. His practical work in ministry to university communities in Boston and Ann Arbor and his graduate and post graduate work in Religion and Culture provide good preparation for Dr. Malefyt to deal with issues which profoundly influence the values of our society.

The evening lectures will attempt to look critically at three areas of experience which affect our value structures. First, we will examine "The Holy Spirit and the Charismatic Renewal," a movement which is infusing the life and structure of nearly every religious body in the U.S. What can we learn from that experience and what are the pitfalls to avoid? The next lecture is entitled "Maximum Sexuality" and will deal with the pervasive authority of sexuality in our lives.

In our sensate culture, are there commonsense "laws" to observe which will maximize our relationships and enrich the total person? The last public lecture will be, "U.S. and Soviet Society: In Search Of A Dream." Dr. Malefyt's involvement in the dialogue of religion and politics, particularly the Marxist Christian conversations and his personal experiences in Soviet society provide the ground work for first hand observations about political, economic and personal life styles in pursuit of happiness and the good life.

I hope that you will find time to participate in some portion of this series. More next week on this Dutchman from Michigan with the unusual name.

'Up with People' gives opportunity for travel, spreading a message

by Robert S. Brown
Staff Writer

On September 26, General Electric brought one-third of the international entertainment group "Up With People" to Wilmington to treat employees and their families with an evening of song and dance in this, their centennial year of corporate existence.

Between speeches, movies and choreographed musical spectacles exalting the "G.E. way," the audience got to see and hear some entertaining routines and songs by the enthusiastic members of this missionary group. Oddly, the audience's appreciation was not a result of the group's professionalism but rather, its energy and desire to please.

Carrie Jones, lighting technician from Seattle, Washington, and guitarist Bjorn Forsberg (translated: Bear Running Stream) from Nykoping, Sweden, explained that all members of the group are amateurs. They said that people who want to be "stars" are not accepted for the group because they have the wrong motivation but people whose personalities agree with the organization's main goal, which is to encourage communication between people and give them a reason to smile, are accepted.

"Up With People" is neither a training ground nor a stepping stone to a career, the two members said. Apparently, the motivation force behind members is the opportunity to travel and the chance to meet people and "build bridges" between them. Jones admitted that the shows themselves just provide a reason to travel and serve as a medium to bring people together.

Members of the group, who range from 17 to 25 years of age and are usually between schooling in one way or another, are not paid. As a matter of fact, they have to pay a tuition to join. They travel everywhere by bus and carry only a suitcase and a small bag of clothes the ten months they are on tour. In each town where they perform, they stay with families who will take them in. Forsberg estimates there are 90 host families for each member every year.

One year is the longest a member can stay with the group unless he/she becomes a staff member. Staff members are paid a salary. Members can also receive college credit in an independent study program by learning the business end of the organization, public relations and housing procedures, recruiting methods or stage techniques to fulfill the necessary requirements.

"Up With People" began in 1965 as an outlet for American optimism during a time when pessimism seemed to be the prevailing mood. Since then it has gone international and been to 40 countries. Many members also come from countries other than the United States.

Every year about 7000 applications to join are received at the Tucson, Arizona, training center but only 500 are chosen.

New members go through a rigorous five week training schedule of 12 hours a day, six days a week. This leaves them one month to work on the two 'hour' show and ten months to tour.

"Up With People" is a non-profit, educational organization which receives financial resources from gifts, donations, ticket sales and record sales, as well as tuitions. In 1976 one large gift came in the form of a one million dollar grant from the Lilly drug company with the stipulation that they go and reach more and more people throughout the world.

University Theatre to present De Musset's 'No Trifling With Love'

The University Theatre of the Creative Arts Department will present Alfred De Musset's intriguing romance "No Trifling With Love" in the SRO Theatre on Oct. 13 through Oct. 16th with an 8:15 curtain.

This medieval romance was written in 1835 when De Musset was suffering from the results of a tempestuous affair with the noted French novelist George Sand. Their journey together had ended in a devastating quarrel and resulted in the publication of books and plays giving their respective and contradictory views of the stormy affair. When De Musset returned to his family in 1834 he brought with him he wrote, "a sick frame, a crushed soul, and a bleeding heart."

"No Trifling With Love" can be literally translated to read "One Does Not Trifle with Love." This is a unique example of a proverb drama. The play is written with stylized charm and contains the formal feature of a chorus, although this interpretation will use the Elizabethan chorus rather than the classical Greek chorus. The writing and the characterizations are remarkably natural. The play rather than being an example of the romances of the day, as exemplified by Victor Hugo, came closer to anticipating the social realism of the later plays by Henrik Ibsen. In the determined feeling of Perdiccan, the hero, one finds the naturalistic drive to live each moment for the present values it holds and embrace the one thing certain in an uncertain universe, love.

This intriguing romance is set in 10th century France with authentic costumes created by Dorothy Hall. It embodies the economy, grace and wit that was the hallmark of the Neo-Classical French Theatre. Perdiccan's love for Camille is a pure and tender affection that stimulates both to the heights and depths of young love. These roles are played by Sherry Jones and Larry Matthews. De Musset is a master of romantic irony who uses reversing situations to bring out the obtuseness and selfishness of people in love and the incalculableness of the passion.

Thalian season to begin Oct. 20 with musical Promising all the exciting elements of theatre, Mrs. Januita Menick, president of the Thalian Association, has announced its 1978-79 season.

"Each year, the Thalian Association agonizes over what shows to select for production in the coming season. There are a number of considerations, naturally. . . mainly of which are our own capabilities and limitations. And, we always try to produce shows which the entire community will enjoy and appreciate," President Menick says.

"This year is no exception and we feel we have selected four shows for our main season which are outstanding and will appeal to a wide spectrum of the community," Menick said. "It is going to be a season full of surprises."

Starting it off, the Thaliens open Oct. 20 with a theatrical salute to the musical genius of German composer and lyricist Kurt Weill.

"From Berlin to Broadway" provides a musical road trip through the career of Mr. Weill beginning with his early days in Germany and ending with his successful shows on Broadway. He is best remembered for his long-running stage phenomenon, "The Three Penny Opera."

On December 8, the Thaliens open Euripides' "The Bacchae," the classical Greek tragedy. Menick explained this will be a very special show and will feature the Wilmington Civic Ballet.

"The show will give the ballet another vehicle for exposure and we are most pleased to have them as a part of our season."

A close encounter of the funniest kind will be the third production as the Thaliens present Gore Vidal's "Visit to a Small Planet," a madcap adventure dealing with an alien's visit to earth and the havoc he reaps on a Virginia household. The show opens March 9.

The final show of the Thalian season promises to be a theatrical event in Wilmington.

Roger O. Hirson's musical comedy "Pippin" opens on May 4 featuring the music and lyrics of Stephen Schwartz.

"Filled with magic, music, intrigue and merriment, 'Pippin' is a kaleidoscopic show which Wilmington theatre-goers will be talking about long after that final curtain," Menick said.

Rounding out the cast are Jim Wishon as the Baron, Kiri Allen as Dame Pluche, Barbara Caldwell as Rosette, Craig Way as Father Blazius, Mike Shea as Father Bridaine and Darrel Hope as the Chorus.

For the production, Amy Forrest is serving as the assistant director with Tim Wesner designing and coordinating the technical aspects. W. Terry Rogers is the director of the play.

As always, all university students are admitted to all University Theatre productions free of charge.

Reservations may be made by contacting the Drama Division Office in Kenan Auditorium.

ENTERTAINMENT

'Don't Look Back' sends Boston forward

by Judy Parry
Staff Writer

Boston's latest album, Don't Look Back is much like their debut release Boston. Both lp's have the "guitar" space-ships on the cover and the second album has the blueprints of the craft on the inner leaf. There is one major difference, however, on the second lp there is no use of synthesizers or computers. The only technological device employed in the second album is Tom Scholz's special effect guitar.

Members of Boston include Tom Scholz (lead and acoustic guitar, bass, organ, piano and special effect guitar), Brad Delp (vocals), Barry Goudreau (lead and slide guitars, percussion), Fran Sheehan (bass, percussion) and Sib Mashian (drums and percussion).

While listening to the album I noticed that the first songs on the lp could be connected to give you one concept of the songs being involved with the ship. "Don't Look Back," the title cut, is of one who finally realizes who he is and he is going to forget about the past and look to the future (since the ship carried him away). This song blends into an instrumental entitled "The Journey" which features the special effect guitar and gives you the impression of traveling in space. This song again blends into "It's Easy" about how he is going to take things day by day and take time to enjoy the adventure, while he tries to show his love for his lady.

The best non-release cut on the lp is "A Man I'll Never Be." This song tells of a girl who sees something good in her man that he knows is not one of his qualities and he knows he will never be the man she thinks he is so he hides in his dreams.

"Feel'n Satisfied" is one of the rock and rollers of the disc, along with "Party." In "Feel'n Satisfied" the message comes across that you can satisfy your needs by getting into rock and roll which gives you an outlet to get a grip on yourself. In "Party" it tells you your life isn't made to be all work-everyone needs to have fun and if you give of yourself, others will also.

The last two cuts on the album are easy listening. In "Used to Bad News" a boy tries to convince his girl that he can accept the "bad news" of her telling him she is leaving and he will try to understand.

The final cut is "Don't Be Afraid" a girl's boyfriend is trying to convince her that just because one man hurt her all men won't try and if she wants to talk he will try to show his love for her.

Boston's Don't Look Back is an appropriate name for their lp. Boston won't look back. They can only go forward.

ABORTIONS DOUBLE

The number of abortions doubled between 1972 and 1977. The estimated number of abortions performed in the US during 1977 was 1.27 million, according to projections by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a family planning research organization. 587,000 abortions were performed in 1972.

'Pirhana:' Gnashing Bore

Maybe the reason Hollywood keeps coming out with movies that deal with Man versus Nature is because technology has created a modern man who no longer has to worry about being stalked by some stronger animal. The modern fisherman doesn't have to worry about sharks in a steel-hull tuna boat, hunters rarely have to be overly concerned with large beasts when there is a trusty 30.06 at hand, and your average person need not shudder at the thought of a pack of maniacal dogs, what with the modern training techniques available to even the most defiant canine. But what would happen if we lost control over nature?

The film industry has taken it upon themselves to answer this question. Recently, we have suffered many bouts with nature in the relatively safe environs of the movie theater. First there was "Jaws," then movies with everything from dogs to frogs, now the newest edition is a pernicious carnivore right out of the tropical aquarium: "Pirhana."

The explanation for this pestilence is simple. In fact, if you have seen any movies with giant tarantulas or scorpions, you will have no problem grasping the plot. It seems the army not only experimented with chemical and biological warfare, but also with fish warfare. In the secluded mountains surrounding a little town, Lost Lake, a doctor (Kevin McCarthy) hired by the army developed a strain of pirhana adaptable to cold water, be it salt or fresh. Not only that, but "Operation Razor Teeth" focused on giving the vicious mutants bad dispositions. The plan was to stock North Vietnamese rivers with the foul fish, and thus help win the war. But the little buggers' draft numbers never came up, and instead they terrorize the tiny town of Lost Lake.

A pair of backpackers are the first to whet their seemingly endless appetites for human meat. They go for a midnight swim and become a midnight snack. There is no seat-squirming suspense as in "Jaws." Instead there is a feeling that if the couple are not intelligent enough to grab the dock and pull themselves out, then they deserve what they get.

A concerned parent of one of the backpackers hires a "tracer" to try to locate the whereabouts of the couple. She is a spaced-out, non-descript character (Heather Menzies), and is responsible for the Big

Films

Blunder. She empties the research tank containing the flesh-tearers and finds the bodies she was hired to retrieve (only they have both shed a considerable amount of weight), but she has thrown out the baby with the bath water. The research tank drains into the river that leads to the popular, and populous, Lost Lake resort.

So she and a liquor-swilling semi-recluse (Bradford Dillman) indigenous to the area try to warn the community of the violent pollution that has taken place. Of course, either no one believes them, or they want it hushed up (the army). But meanwhile, the little devils are tearing people to shreds. One can't possibly keep track of the number killed. The fountains of blood become very tedious and actually funny after a while. The director (Joe Dante) far exceeds the hyperbolic to the point of nonsense. There are long, tiring scenes of mauling when youngsters floating in inner-tubes are surrounded by schools of the monsters. Yet no one makes any attempt to get out of the water. The movie sums it up perfectly in a scene when a reporter says, "Terror, horror, death. Film at eleven." Even the director, at this point, sees the humorous condition aroused by the overuse of gore.

The acting is as empty as the river is full of pirhana. Bradford Dillman, a veteran of psychological horror flicks and many "Night Gallery's," gives a completely lackluster performance as the type of character Roy Scheider portrayed in "Jaws." Watching Menzies and Dillman together is like peering into an aquarium of guppies: they move around fast, but who cares? The problem with this movie is that there isn't a single character to identify with. In fact, it digresses to a perverted version of "Dragnet." Dillman might just as easily say, "At 5:03, Joe and I went to stop a school of man-eating pirhana that were terrorizing a river full of youngsters."

Harvey Arnold accepts congratulations from Wilmington Mayor Ben Halterman.

Outlaw Harvey Arnold chooses Wilmington home

by Wes Knappe

Special to the Seahawk

When a person spends a day with someone you discover a lot about them that isn't necessarily answered in any one question. That's the way it was when I spent the day with Harvey Arnold. There were many different incidents of "hurry-up-and-wait-variety" that would have forced many a lesser person to reveal a less flexible side; but throughout the day he maintained an affability that is not only characteristic of him, but of his band, and all that he represents. Harvey could have lived anywhere he chose—Atlanta, New York—or anywhere else that could possibly be considered more urban. But this is not what he's after—which might account for the mood of Thursday.

Harvey has chosen the Wilmington area because he genuinely likes the place where he was raised. He has worked hard for what he has achieved and Thursday, which was proclaimed Harvey Arnold Day by the Mayor, was the culmination of over eight years of hard work and who wouldn't have liked a bit of well-deserved back slapping? Wilmington should take notice The Outlaws are now headlining facilities like San Francisco's Cow Palace and Philadelphia's 18,000 seat Spectrum—each was a complete sell out.

In short, Harvey could consider himself a "rock star." He has chosen to remain just "good people." Harvey is proud that he's from here and is genuinely excited about playing his "hometown."

No one was more disappointed by the rescheduling but it should prove more than worth the wait. Outlaw Willie and Pual Davis—anywhere else but Wilmington it would cost you at least two or three dollars more than the $5.50 ticket price. There are still some tickets available at the University Bookstore. The Concert Committee may have peaked on the second show of the year. What started out as a homecoming has turned into a celebration.

Welcome Home, Harvey.

Daniels Film Society salutes the American cinema

Last year, the Godfrey Daniels Magical Moments and Marathon Film Society was created as a means of bringing a variety of quality motion pictures to the people of Wilmington and surrounding areas. This series of ten films became an immediate success, moving financially into the "black" after only three of its ten scheduled showings.

Optimistically continuing in the "Godfrey Daniels" tradition, the directors of the Society have conceived a second series which they hope will prove even more popular than their first, as—this year—Godfrey Daniels salutes the American cinema.

Featuring ten motion picture classics from the Golden Days of Hollywood, Godfrey Daniels' 1978-79 season promises both an exciting and nostalgic journey into the past.

Beginning Oct. 14, the series will get under way with the great MGM musical, "The Band Wagon" (1953), with Fred Astaire and Cyd Charisse. This colorful classic deals with the trials and tribulations of putting on a big, brassy Broadway show and features such musical gems as the comedy number, "Triplets," "I Love Louisa," and "Dancing in the Dark." It also boasts the most famous film finale of all time: "That's Entertainment," written especially for this musical extravaganza.

Another great musical film in the series is "San Francisco" (1939), starring Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy and Jeanette MacDonald, who sings the famous title song. "San Francisco" is also considered one of the first great "disaster" films, featuring as it does a spectacular sequence recreating the great San Francisco earthquake.

Comedies for the season include "Adam's Rib" (1949), the classic feminist farce featuring Katherine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy at their dazzling best; "Duck Soup" (1932) with the fabulous Marx Brothers; and Frank Capra's Academy Award-winning classic, "It Happened One Night" (1934), with Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert.

Also featured in the series are two romantic mysteries: Alfred Hitchcock's

"Rebecca," which won the 1940 Oscar as Best Picture of the Year, and Otto Preminger's highly sophisticated thriller, "Laura" (1944), with Clifton Webb and Gene Tierney.

Highlighting this year's series also will be two films featuring two of the Silver Screen's most legendary performers. On December 16, Godfrey Daniels members will be able to see Greta Garbo in one of her most widely-acclaimed performances, "Ninotchka" (1939), directed by Ernest Lubitsch. And on January 20, Charlie Chaplin will be featured in his controversial masterpiece, "The Great Dictator" (1940).

And, finally, for Western fans, our series will conclude with the great musical Western, "Destry Rides Again," with Marlene Dietrich and James Stewart. This warm-hearted satire of the "Ol' West" features the legendary Dietrich in one of her most popular roles, as Frenchie, the dance-hall hostess with the "heart of gold."

An additional improvement this year, besides a new and improved sound system, is our new home in historic Thalian Hall at 305 Princess Street. Here, Godfrey Daniels will hold his screenings on every third Saturday night (except for a brief break over Christmas) at 8 p.m.

Series memberships are $12.50 each, and are available from the Lower Cape Fear Council for the Arts and from the Thalian Association. For information call 762-4223.

Student Education Fund sponsors competition

The National Student Educational Fund is sponsoring, for the second year, the Better Information Project: Prices in Education (BIPPIE), a national competition to encourage and recognize original student-produced informational materials.

Awards of $500 will be given to each of the 12 best entries. Winners will then give their award money to the student organization or project of their choice.

Individual students and student organizations are eligible to enter the competition. All materials may be in any media and must be aimed at improving the information available to students concerning campus programs, opportunities and experiences, such as orientation handbooks or guides for women reentering college. Materials must have been produced during the 1977-78 or 1978-79 academic years.

Each of the 12 winners will win a trip to Washington, D.C. at which time the prize money will be awarded at a national Information Celebration.

Application packets are available from the National Student Educational Fund, 2000 P Street, NW Suite 305, Washington, D.C. 20036.

Over 330 students entered the 1977-78 BIPPIE contest. Information from last year's competition is currently being compiled into a Project Research Report, and will be available in late 1978.

The competition is supported by a grant from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education. To date, the Chronicle of Higher Education, the International Study/Travel Center and the Student Loan Marketing Association have also contributed to the project. The College Entrance Examination Board has donated funds toward the project's evaluation activities.

The competition is sponsored by the National Student Educational Fund, a national non-profit group engaged in research, information services and training activities from a student perspective.

Senior art major wins fair contest in county

Christy NaVall, a senior art major, has been awarded first, second and third places at the New Hanover County Fair Art Contest by Peggy Joller, president of the Wilmington Art Association.

NaVall entered two drawings, a print and an acrylic painting, which were proclaimed "Best overall art" by the Wilmington Art Association.

"It's the first time I ever entered anything. I found out Tuesday morning (October 3) that they had been judged," Christy said.

Most of the work she submitted were class assignments for professors Claude Howell and Michael Goins. NaVall's work deals with a "personal subject matter; there were three self-portraits."

Library expansion planned

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Administration officials have begun working on plans to more than double the present facility housing Randall Library, with a target date of 1984 for completion.

Vice-chancellor for Academic Affairs Charles Cahill has presented the Board of Trustees with a report compiled by library Director Eugene Huguelet outlining projections of needed library expansion within the next few years.

Cahill, who described the library situation as urgent, said that by 1981 the present facilities will have reached "maximum comfortable capacity" in the light of expected growth of the university.

Beyond that year, Cahill said, the library will be insufficient to serve the campus adequately.

By 1984, Cahill said the report indicates that it will be "imperative that we have additional (library) space." And, Cahill added, "1984 is not that far off, particularly when you put it in the context of state budget procedures."

The report will be sent by the trustees to the UNC Board of Governors. It will not, however, be sent as a budget request now but is intended to alert UNC officials to the need and prepare them for the sizable budget request which will be necessary in a few years to get the construction process off the ground.

According to Randall Director Huguelet, the expansion will include new facilities for all areas of the library. The report states that the majority of added space will go for seating readers and housing new materials, while a small portion will be reserved for administrative purposes.

Approximately 87,000 square feet of new space will be required. Upon completion, the library will be almost twice the size of the new Classroom building.

Huguelet said the library currently houses approximately 171,000 volumes and was designed to house 200,000. In 1969 when it was occupied, the building was constructed to serve 600 students.

The expansion, Huguelet said, will provide enough square footage for comfortable use until 1998. The added floor space will be built behind the present building on land which has been long reserved by university officials for such expansion. The addition will also be a two-floor building.

The report shows how rapidly the library has grown since 1969 and how rapidly it is expected to grow in the next several years.

For example, the library contained 69,270 volumes in 1969, 164,208 in 1978 and will have an estimated 206,500 in 1984. In 1969, 27 percent of the student body could be seated in the library; in 1978, 11.3 percent can be seated; and in 1984, with the new facilities, an estimated 33 percent could be seated.

During 1982-83, "extreme crowding will occur" in the library, the report says, which would "inevitably lead to a deterioration of library services for the university."

Immediate needs of the library include space for periodicals and journals, microform storage and study areas.

The projected need for additional reader space is based on an estimated student population of 8400 in 1998. According to figures of the Association of College and Research Libraries, seating for 22 percent of the student body is considered adequate for most campuses.

In addition to the new facilities, improvements are also planned for the existing portion of the library. These include new office space, enlarging the circulation desk (See Library, page 16)

N.C. Student Legislature delegates to convene in Wilmington

The UNCW delegation of the North Carolina Student Legislature will host an interim council meeting of N.C.S.L. delegates from across the state here this weekend. U.S. Senator Jesse Helms will address the business session which will begin at 9 a.m. Saturday in King Auditorium.

Helms is scheduled to speak at 10 a.m. The remainder of the session will be devoted to regular business and consideration of various resolutions proposed by the delegates. All meetings will be open to the public although N.C.S.L. delegates will receive seating preference.

The N.C.S.L. is the oldest continually active student legislature of its kind in the nation. Alumni of the organization include N.C. Governor Jim Hunt, state Labor Commissioner John Brooks and Secretary of State Thad Eure, U.S. Senator Robert Morgan, and Charlotte Mayor Ken Harris.

All of these former members have considered experience gained through N.C.S.L. of significant importance to the development of their careers in public service, according to members of the UNCW delegation. With this in mind, UNCW delegates say, current N.C.S.L. members feel that their experiences in the organization will benefit them in their future careers.

Interim council meetings of N.C.S.L. are held each month at colleges across the state. This is the first time that the UNCW delegation has hosted one of these meetings.

The interim council meetings provide continuity of N.C.S.L. business and allow delegates to become familiar with legislative procedures to prepare them for the annual legislative session held in Raleigh, according to UNCW delegate Jon Faill.

The Raleigh session lasts five days during which time delegates experience the legislative process in detail from the introduction of legislation, through committee proceedings and finally to floor debate and action.

More than 150 delegates are expected to attend the council meeting this weekend, according to Faill.

A reception will be held

Friday night at the Ramada Inn at 10 p.m. The public is also invited to this function.

N.C.S.L. work on the individual campuses involves research into current public policy topics directed to the drafting of legislation for consideration at the N.C.S.L. session.

According to UNCW delegates, N.C.S.L. seeks to incorporate people of divergent interests and opinions so that all views are represented. Anyone who is interested in the practical side of politics is urged to join.

Many areas to draw on for naming of university buildings

The university's Board of Trustees took a step forward last week in officially naming one of the buildings on campus which has thus far remained unnamed. This is really not an important, earth-shattering concern but it is a matter of convenience and appearance for the university community that could be attended to with relatively little effort.

Buildings which remain unnamed are the Chemistry-Physics and Marine Science Buildings, as well as the new classroom building just opened.

The trustees named the dormitory which opened this fall for Addison Hewlett, Jr., a member of the board and its past chairman. Hewlett has done much for the growth of UNCW and the honor is much deserved. The idea to name a dormitory for Hewlett was an appropriate one because it will be a means of communicating Hewlett's contribution to the students.

The problem of obtaining names for campus buildings is particularly acute here because of the relative youth of this institution. Other campuses with longer histories have a longer list of outstanding individuals who have made a significant contribution to the university or the community.

But UNCW and Wilmington are not without deserving individuals who have earned this honor. Names can be drawn from four major areas: people who have served UNCW, such as Shannon Morton, one of the first faculty members here; those who have served the UNC system, such as former president Frank Porter Graham; Wilmington's "favorite sons," such as David Brinkley, journalist and newscaster, or Thomas Jervay, editor of the Wilmington Journal and respected community leader; and, last, people who have made financial contributions to the university.

The list is certainly not limited to these few names. It will take the participation of all members of the university to come up with the best and most appropriate suggestions. It can and should be done.

The Seahawk is the student newspaper of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington and is published every Wednesday. Editorial opinions do not necessarily reflect the views of the individual staff members or of the University, and are written by the Editor unless otherwise signed.

Book requirements not always needed

To the Editor:

In the short time I have attended UNCW I have become aware of one problem when buying books. Often students are required to buy more than one book for each class and many times extra books and manuals are recommended to aid students in a particular course. These extra books and manuals are study guide manuals, lab manuals, paperback novels, etc. I have found that not all these extra books or manuals are needed, and I question whether some are even worth the paper that they are printed on.

Last semester I bought a laboratory manual, "Life Processes in the Laboratory," for $7.10. The manual contains 180 pages of pictures, diagrams and pertinent information which I did find to be essential in my lab work.

This semester I bought "A Complement to the Basic Speech Course" for $5.40. The manual contains 100 pages (41 of them are blank). The printed pages contain 27 criticism forms, 10 speech outline forms, 21 pages of miscellaneous information, and one personal data page. As of today, I have used the personal data page. My instructor wrote a detailed speech outline form on the chalkboard which I copied in my notes that I take during the lectures. If criticism forms are necessary or helpful, one mimeograph form given to each student to be used as a guide would seem sufficient. The 21 pages of miscellaneous information consists of material that is already covered in the required text, "Principles of Speech Communication." I feel that I have paid $5.40 for a sophisticated composition book when a 59 cent composition book would have been sufficient.

I do not know who is responsible for selecting particular books for each class but I feel that closer scrutiny should be exercised by the responsible parties when selecting required or "helpful" books and manuals. The increasing cost of books as well as the limited budgets that most students have to cope with should be reason enough for being selective about the literature that students should buy.

VIEWPOINT

by Ray Warren

Contraceptive information should be made available as a student service

Generally, this column deals with issues of state and national origin. The purpose of "Viewpoint" (aside from infuriating my liberal professors), however, is to present an alternative view of any issue affecting students. Contraceptive information and availability are issues of national import, but they strike closer to home also.

Recently, the Seahawk's "Living by the Sea" section explored the availability of contraception devices at UNCW. As that story pointed out, very little is being done to combat the epidemic of unplanned pregnancy at UNCW. Although such pregnancies are a very serious health problem, the administration (which has been quick to respond to flu and "mono" outbreaks) seems impotent to act.

Some of our campus Pharisees will no doubt castigate me for condoning immorality. Not so. Most definitely the most effective form of birth control is abstinence. "Punishing" young people and their unplanned children by withholding contraceptive services, however, is both cruel and ineffective. Anybody who really believes that God is happy when a young "sinner" gets her "punishment" (in the form of pregnancy) does violence to the very concept of a loving deity. There are, perhaps, good reasons to remain chaste, but fear of pregnancy is seldom an effective deterrent. Unplanned pregnancy, in short, is a serious health problem and the university should get its head out of the sand and treat it as such.

There is absolutely no excuse for students not being able to obtain contraceptive services through the university health service. True, there are local clinics in town which offer this service, but for several reasons this causes problems for students. Many have no transportation, and some have family situations that would make discovery a very serious problem.

As soon as possible, the university should renegotiate its contract with the health services to include contraceptive services, including prescriptions for the pill, and, if possible, fitting for a diaphragm as part of the campus clinic's free services. If the health personnel on duty are unable to offer these services, then a separate campus-based birth control clinic should be established.

In addition, foams and condoms should be sold in the bookstore. While it's true that many students would be too embarrassed to purchase them there, if only one unnecessary abortion, shotgun marriage or case of untimely single parenthood were prevented then it would be a worthwhile effort. For those who would not buy them in the bookstore, condoms should also be available machines in strategic restrooms. This may strike some as outlandish or funny, but pregnancy is no funny business.

There is admittedly something to be said for personal responsibility. In all truth, students are adults and should be responsible for their actions. The university shouldn't have to make it easy for them.

Writing about utopia, however, has never made it a reality. Sexual relations should only be undertaken responsibly and after careful consideration of the physical and emotional consequences. But—and it's a big but—it just doesn't happen that way. Despite the much ballyhooed sexual revolution, many students have their first real experiences with sex, alcohol and the combination of the two during their first years here. Students don't plan ahead and all the tongue clicking and smug head-shaking in the world won't change that situation. Making contraceptives more available won't totally eliminate the problem, but it is a constructive step in the right direction.

On a larger scale, the university should also move beyond mere contraceptive concerns. Often the emotional problems associated with sexual decisions are as bad, or worse than, the physical ones.

"A people to people learning experience in sex" (Apples) was a student group which attempted to deal with these problems last year. Unfortunately, Apples was limited to dorm students (as if College Manor was a local monastery), received very little support from the administration, and seems to have disappeared with the graduation of its founders.

The administration should move to support the re-creation of an Apples-type student organization. Student Affairs, Student Activities, the Campus ministry and the Counseling office could all cooperate in such an effort. This group could help students understand their feelings, clarify their values (such as being reassured that virginity is a viable alternative), and deal with peer pressure. Students are under incredible social pressures from the "youth and sex" myths our society perpetuates. Whatever decision each person reaches in dealing with their sexual feelings and attitudes, they deserve more support than is available from hypocritical moralists and exploitive advertising. Just as the university provides for the academic, physical, health, and career needs of its students, it should also provide help in coping with this most important aspect of human existence.

Trustees discuss expansion of university in enrollment

by Bobby Parker

Editor

Expansion was the key topic at the quarterly meeting of the Board of Trustees last Wednesday as the university's governing body discussed increasing enrollment, building projects in progress and plans for facilities needed in the future.

Chancellor William Wagoner reported to the board that UNCW has exceeded enrollment expectations for the fall with a total of 4058 students. Wagoner said that the increase had come despite the trend on other UNC campuses which had fallen short of their own expectations this year.

Wagoner attributed the increase to UNCW's geographic location (this campus is farthest of the 16 from UNC's administrative center in Chapel Hill), the growth in population of southeastern North Carolina, and the strength of academic programs such as marine science.

Wagoner predicted that despite an expected decline in the rate of enrollment increase for colleges nationwide, UNCW's student population would continue its rapid growth.

Undergraduate enrollment totals 3919, Wagoner stated, with an almost even breakdown between the sexes 50.7 percent male and 49.3 percent female.

Black students comprised 6.4 percent of the whole, or 242 students. Wagoner said that this figure fell short by one-tenth of a percent of meeting the university's black enrollment goal which the federal government and UNC administration have mandated be increased.

The board toured the new classroom building before its meeting and formally approved it for the university. The trustees' building and grounds committee reported that the new facility should be totally occupied by the end of November with only minor work yet to be done.

Chancellor Wagoner told board members that plans are already under way for still another classroom building with funds having been appropriated for initial planning. A request for $2.8 million is now before the UNC Board of Governors for the project.

Renovations to the Alderman Administration Building were said to be almost totally complete while remodeling in the Student Union has been delayed because of unanticipated work to the building's heating system.

Wagoner said that the union renovations should be complete by January. Meanwhile, he added, the Counseling and Testing Office will be relocated in the library to allow the reopening of the Goodwood Tavern in the union.

The Goodwood has been closed since the counseling office was moved there this summer. When union renovations are complete, Counseling and Testing will be relocated there in permanent offices.

A fourth dormitory, scheduled to open in fall 1979, was described as 30 percent complete. In addition, the contract for a new parking lot to serve the two new dormitories has now been awarded.

Other capital improvement projects now in progress include additional sidewalks and street lighting. A total of $16,000 has been approved for this purpose with the area of the Marine Science Building given top priority.

Vice-chancellor for Academic Affairs Charles Cahill presented a report on the need for future expansion of Randall Library which was compiled by officials within his division.

Cahill stated that the problem of over crowding in the library is one that is "on top of us right now." Both Cahill and Wagoner called the library expansion project an "urgent" need of the university.

Cahill's report concluded that by 1984, the current facilities would be insufficient and called for expansion to a total of 86,000 square feet, approximately twice the size of the new classroom building.

The report will be submitted to the UNC general administration to alert them to the problem and prepare them for a sizeable request for funds within the next few years.

The university has also begun to formulate plans for more dormitories, a new student union, additional dining facilities, and a fifth building for the marine research unit at Wrightsville Beach.

Wagoner said that projections for more dorm space had been "favorably received" by UNC administration.

The Chancellor also stated that the new Vice-chancellor for business affairs, Jairy Hunter, has undertaken a feasibility study for a new student union as his "first priority."

In other business considered by the board:

Wagoner reported that a nursing proposal approved by the board in July had been sent to the Board of Governors although he conceded that he "can not... report that it was favorably received."

The proposal would be unique in the state in offering both the associate and bachelor's degrees in nursing. Wagoner said that the earliest action by UNC officials would probably come in December.

The board was told of a geothermal study to be conducted on UNCW property by the U.S. Department of Energy. The study is one of a series being done on the east coast to monitor heat variations.

The Energy Department will construct wells on unused university property on the east end of the campus. University researchers and students will also have an opportunity to use the test sites.

Action was taken to urge state transportation officials to rename College Road "University" drive.

A resolution was passed naming the dormitory which opened this fall Addison Hewlett Hall. Hewlett is a member and past chairman of the Board of Trustees.

The board also noted that several buildings and streets remain unnamed and requested that suggestions be submitted for their consideration.

Wildlife federation sets deadline for applications

The National Wildlife Federation has set a deadline of Dec. 31, 1978, for applications from graduate students for its 1979-80 Environmental Conservation Fellowships.

To be eligible applicants must be citizens of the United States, Canada or Mexico who are pursuing degrees in a college or university graduate program or law school. They must be principally engaged in research, rather than course work, in fields related to wildlife, natural resources management, or the protection of environmental quality. The grants range up to $4000.

In addition to the NWF fellowships, which have been awarded for the past 21 years, the Federation has since 1971 also awarded joint fellowships with the American Petroleum Institute for studies involving petroleum and the conservation of resources.

For information, including a list of priority topics, and application forms write the Executive Vice President, National Wildlife Federation 1412 16th Street, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20036.

Food service manager cleans up questions for Student Legislature

by Bobby Parker

Editor

University food service manager Phil Welch has cleared up questions of several SGA officials which had threatened to lead to a presidential veto of an appropriation by the Student Legislature for entertainment at a special dinner set for Oct. 25.

The questions had surfaced after SGA officials obtained a copy of an outline of plans for the dinner which is being put on by food service management under Welch's direction.

The Student Legislature had approved a $750 grant to pay half the cost of entertainment for the event, which is being billed as "Las Vegas Night."

The plans specified that there would be two shows and a third if 250 reservations are received for the last. It requested funds from the Student Legislature on Oct. 3. Welch had said that there would be three shows with no mention of a minimum number of reservations.

Appearing before the Legislature again last week, Welch assured legislators there would be three shows and that the description of the event being circulated was only a means of promoting the dinner.

The description had outlined a schedule for the three dinners with students holding meal tickets being served in two groups according to their ticket numbers. Students not having meal cards and other persons would be served at the third show, the description stated, provided at least 250 reservations are made.

Welch, however, explained that the reason for the breakdown was to provide some gauge for preparing meals.

He said that there would be room for approximately 500 at each dinner and students with meal cards would be given first preference.

But, Welch said, since there are only 811 students on meal plans, there would be room for other diners at each seating. Welch added that meal-plan students could also choose which dinner to attend to accommodate their schedules.

Representative Jon Faili asked Welch why the schedule had been drawn up if it will not be followed, and why legislators had not been given the information when the allocation was requested.

Welch indicated that he had not intended to mislead SGA officials, but he defended his procedure, saying "I know it works this way; that's why I use (this procedure)."

Welch noted that he had put on a similar dinner program at two other universities, including UNC-Charlotte.

Senior Vice-president Karin Whaley said she believed there had been a lack of communication between the Legislature and Welch and that "some of the students take this (schedule) for what it says."

SGA President Dunlap, who had threatened to veto the appropriation if questions went unanswered, said that the Legislature had been "re-ligient" in considering the matter. The request was handled by legislators in one evening although it is customary to send funding requests to the Finance Committee before action is taken.

Dunlap cautioned the Legislature to "be more careful" with future requests. He said that he had not signed the legislation because the approval had been a "hasty decision" which should not have been made "if everything isn't above board or if it isn't clear in everyone's mind that it is above board."

Welch stated that "nobody was turned away from any show" on the other campuses where he sponsored the dinner. The contract for entertainment, which will feature singer Ronny Dove, was signed Oct. 10 and stipulates that there will be three shows.

Representative Chuck Black said that the opinions of most legislators had not changed on the program itself. Black also stated that he had talked with students from UNC-Charlotte who gave "good reports" about the program presented there.

President Dunlap agreed to sign the appropriation with the approval of the Legislature.

Junior Vice-president Jack Allen said that the request should have been sent to the Program Committee for consideration. Allen later proposed a motion that all matters pertaining to programming brought to the Legislature in the future be sent to the Program Committee, and the motion was approved.

In other legislative action, Representative Faili moved that $1288 be appropriated to send four representatives to a student rights conference in New Orleans at the end of October. President Dunlap had requested that money be approved, and the Legislature passed Faili's motion.

Vice-president Allen proposed a resolution calling for the formation of a dorm council to hear the appeals of dorm residents whose contracts are cancelled or who are put on probation for disciplinary reasons. Allen said the council would provide students the right to a hearing before their peers.

Allen proposed the council consist of a student representing each residence hall, a resident assistant and the deans of students. Allen said that the council is needed because the SGA Student Court has no jurisdiction in this area. The motion was passed.

Program Committee Chair Cindy Cole outlined activities planned for October and November which included "fall frolics" on Oct. 21 and a dance each month. Cole also reported that program officials would attend an entertainment conference in Charleston, S.C., to participate in programming workshops.

A charter for the UNCW N.C. Student Legislature was approved, but one for Sigma Phi Nuthin, described in its charter as a social fraternity, was rejected because it admitted only male members.

Absent from the meeting were legislators Wes Armstrong, Karen Weise, Mark Beamblossom and Patricia Blanton.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in room C218. All interested persons may attend the meeting.

Finance committee, SGA president reach agreement over expense dispute

SGA President Wayne Dunlap and members of the SGA Finance Committee have reached agreement over a dispute which is now being termed a "misunderstanding" by both parties.

The disagreement involved the use of SGA money from Dunlap's executive account—approximately $70—to attend a meeting this past summer of the North Carolina Black Student coalition. Finance Committee members, including SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan, had argued that the money should not have come out of the executive account because it was benefiting one specific campus organization, the Black Student Union.

Glen Downs, a member of the Finance Committee, reported to the Student Legislature that Reagan and other committee members had at first understood that Dunlap decided to attend the conference only after the president of the B.S.U. decided not to go.

Downs said, however, that Dunlap had since explained to the committee that he planned from the beginning to attend the conference as SGA president and using his executive account. Dunlap said that the B.S.U. president's decision not to go had no bearing on his decision to attend, Downs reported.

Finance Committee members agreed that since the executive fund is set up to cover the president's executive fund is set up to cover the president's travel expenses, Dunlap had spent the money properly, Downs added.

The Black Student Coalition is a statewide organization devoted to black students in North Carolina colleges. Most members are from black student organizations, but some schools with a majority black student population send student government representatives to its meetings.

Psychology lecture sponsored

October 24 at 4 p.m. in King Auditorium, the Psychology Club will sponsor an audience participation lecture. Dr. Sue Lanb and Dr. Larry Gerstenhaber will jointly conduct a lecture entitled "Clinical Practice in Psychology." The focus will be primarily on the different aspects of psychotherapy and counseling.

What makes this "lecture" different and hopefully very informative to students, is that students have complete control over the selection of topics in this area. How many times in your college career have you gotten a chance to tell the professor what to talk about. Well, this is your big chance. Some areas that will be covered are: what psychotherapy is and isn't, how a person decides if he needs it, different approaches in psychotherapy and counseling, and the relationships between psychologist and other professional disciplines. Students of all majors are invited.

This will be an opportunity to find out what is really happening now in psychotherapy and counseling from two experienced therapists who can answer questions in the focus of personal experience.

'Up in Smoke:' Reefer gladness

There is always a danger in catering humor to a certain type. If one decided to write a script on the many amusing aspects of the lotus-eaters of North Africa, a tribe well known for a plant-induced state of happy indolence, that person would run a strong risk of not being appreciated by all segments of society. Not everyone would find the ancient antics of the 'lotus-eaters' appealing, particularly the detailed hallucinations and the uncommon propensity for sleep.

Cheech Marin and Tommy Chong, previously known for their success in record albums dealing with a strong motif of plant-induced stupor, have chosen to parody the pot-smoking world with all its peculiarities derived from the early sixties through the seventies. Any person familiar with the milieu of the pot-smokers knows that it holds numerous comical possibilities, but much of it is inside humor and relegated to the hazy state of the mind at the time. Telling the things that strike you funny when you're stoned to someone who is straight usually leads to a condition seen often in English versions of foreign novels: it loses something in the translation. Well Cheech and Chong, who proved themselves outrageously funny on records, are equally good on film. The gags, though based on pot-smokers' experience, translate well to real life. Cheech and Chong's comic compatibility is responsible for the successful translation; however, the director (Lou Adler) gives the movie an frenzied action that complements the script.

"Up in Smoke" begins with the meeting of the odd couple of high society. Cheech Marin plays a fairly laid-back, one might even say droopy, Chicano musician who takes simple pleasure in his customized Chevy (The Love Machine) with the multi-colored fur interior and chain-link steering wheel the size of a small doughnut. Tommy Chong, on the other hand, is a frustrated drummer of richer extraction. His mother (Edie Adams) has a house that looks too clean and modern to live in. All the furniture looks as if it came from Design Research and was sterilized before installation. His father wears white leisure suits that don't need pressing and show unusual concern that his son should befriend the neighbor's son who is going to military school. Chong is too cool for all that and splits with his drums. His car breaks down and, while hitchhiking, he meets the person he was fated to meet. Cheech is cruising the highways outside of L.A. in the Love Machine and mistakes Chong for a buxom female hitchhiker (not entirely his fault as Chong is in drag to get a fast ride). The fun begins.

They cruise L.A., turning the interior of the car into a bilious cumulus cloud of smoke generated from a joint that resembles a Buck Rogers spaceship in size and shape. The pot is "Labrador" with a little Acapulcan; that is to say, Chong's dog swallowed the Acapulcan and well... you can guess the rest. At this point it is not so much the subject matter that is funny but the expressions and gestures of the comic duo. The smoothness with which these two adapt to their roles gets laughs. All you have to do is look at Cheech's droopy, innocent face and you chuckle. There is a scene when Cheech demonstrates his vulnerability. He accidentally swallows an incredible amount of LSD. His face falls in expressive childlike fear, and he turns to Chong for support. Chong says, "I hope you're not busy for the next month." But he gets over it the next moment and sings to a patrolman who is tapping on the car window, "You keep knockin' but you can't come in."

By equally innocent circumstances, they wind up south of the border in Tijuana. They get a free ride with immigration authorities who have come to confiscate his brother (that's a whole other story). This is a good break because, while in Mexico, they can score some weed which is vital to the musical output of the new band they have formed. In fact, the amount of pot is directly proportional to Chong's drumming ability. It is there they unknowingly stumble on something big: a billion dollar pot move to the States. The marijuana is turned into a synthetic plastic substance called fibre-weed and is spray coated on a van. Most of the van is weed; the grill is made up entirely of gigantic Thai-sticks.

An incompetent police force, headed by Stacy Keach as Sgt. Stendenko, is trying to intercept this "Mexican Connection." They tumble it at the border and bust a car-load of nuns. As Cheech and Chong cross the border and head north with what they think is a "Rented van," they are harassed by these lout-like cops and a motorcycle patrolman who, upon inhaling the exhaust fumes of the van, asks Cheech and Chong, "What is it you want?" He doesn't ticket them but takes a hot dog as payment.

The chase ends up in L.A., at the Roxy, where there is going to be a battle of the bands. Cheech and Chong think they can win this "rock fight of the century" as it is mostly punk-rockers who will take advantage of the competition. There is a tense moment when we don't know if Chong will be able to play the drums, which he can only do stoned. But the bungling cops solve this problem for Chong. They accidentally set the van on fire and the Roxy becomes as smoke-filled as The Love Machine. As Chong inhales the billows of smoke, his playing ability comes back. So Cheech and Chong rock the Roxy; Cheech gyrating onstage like Mick Jagger on amphetamines, wearing a pink tutu and Mickey Mouse ears.

The movie is chock full of interesting and amusing performances. Tom Skerrit plays Cheech's cousin "Strawberry," a violently controlled psychopath who gives the impression a time-bomb with two minutes left would give at a dinner party. Strawberry, besides being severely sensitive about a "birthmark" the size of a basketball on the side of his face, has never been the same since returning from Vietnam. He is prone to delusions of combat. While riding his motorcycle with Cheech in the side-car, he begins to mutter, "Victor Charlie (V.C.) has us surrounded." Before he bails out of the motorcycle, Cheech nervously looks up at him and says, "Oh man, are you going into one of your Vietnam trips again?" Zane Zebby gives a thoroughly wired performance as a speed-freak hitchhiker picked up between Tijuana and L.A. She can speak without opening her mouth, or separating her huge, grating teeth. Stacy Keach, as Sgt. Stendenko, is amusing in that he looks like the kind of guy who applied to the Police Academy before there even was one.

"Up in Smoke" is now playing at New Centre Cinema.

Football stars sparkle

The UNCW Football team is fortunate in that it has a lot of talent on the squad. The four athletes pictured must be included in that array of talent. Pictured are fullback Dave Moore, defensive end Dave Hooks, quarterback Darrell Franks and defensive end Jerry Pridgen.

Fullback Dave Moore was last year's quarterback, but was moved to fullback in order to take advantage of his running ability. Moore was an outstanding athlete in high school which could explain why he is playing so well in college. Moore is able to use his strength to break tackles that ordinary backs would not be able to break. Moore is "Mr. Dependable" on short yardage situations and always seems to perform well in the clutch. Moore may well be the most underrated player on the Seahawk team, since most of his feats go unnoticed.

Dave Hooks is probably one of the better defensive ends in the league. Hooks has great speed, thus this enables him to chase down speedy tailbacks and quarterbacks. A combination of physical skills along with a keen mind makes Hooks one of the more valuable Seahawks. Hooks can also play tight end which is another indication of the type of athlete he is.

Jerry Pridgen is a newcomer to the team but not a newcomer to football. A star at New Hanover, where he played linebacker and fullback, Pridgen has all the ability needed to survive on a football field. In Pridgen's first game against Duke, he picked up a fumble and sprinted 50 yards into the end zone. Pridgen is certainly a welcomed addition to the Seahawk team.

Probably one of the best athletes on this or any other team is quarterback Darrell Franks. At 6'3", he has a strong arm that can sparrow the football no less a distance than 60 yards. Franks is what makes the Seahawks go. Franks was a great athlete in jr. high and high school.

Franks has shown signs of brilliance in his tenure as the Seahawk's quarterback. In the first game of the season against Central Piedmont, Franks came off the bench to lead the team to five touchdowns after trailing 32-0 at the half. The winning touchdown was called back in the wake of a penalty.

Defense plays hard hitting match as football team loses close one

by Derrick Anderson
Staff Writer

The Fairfax County Chargers slipped by UNCW Seahawks 19-16 in a game played in Falls Church, Va.

The Seahawk defense played hard and concentrated on bone-rattling tackles waiting for the breaks. The breaks came early but the Hawks couldn't take advantage as the offense seemed sluggish in the first half. The defense turned the ball over to the offense four times in the first half, which yielded only one touchdown late in the second quarter. The first half ended 6-6.

In the third quarter the Chargers seemed to take over control of the game as they moved in for a touchdown and extra point for a 13-6 lead. The Hawks moved down field after the kickoff only to be stopped on the 2 yard line. On the Chargers first play a swarm of Hawks met the ball carrier in the end zone for a safety and 2 points.

After a few changes of ball possession, the Hawks were forced to punt. The Chargers return man took the ball back 79 yards for a touchdown and seemed to lock up the victory.

With the score 19-8 and four minutes left the Hawks started what proved to be their best drive of the day going 85 yards in 8 plays for the score. The two point try was good and the score was 19-16, Chargers.

The Hawks tried an onside kick which failed. The Chargers then ran out the clock for the win.

Cliff "The Outlaw" Thomas carried the ball 11 times for 84 yards. Dave "Iron Man" Moore carried 17 times for 49 yards. Moore gets most of his yardage on up the middle hard to get turf. Quarterback Darrell Franks ran the ball 11 times for 90 yards and threw for 150 yards.

Bill Morris had one fumble recovery and an interception to lead a defense that turned the ball over 5 times.

The next game for the Seahawks will be against Wake Forest on Sunday, Oct. 22 at 3 p.m. at the UNCW campus.

Crew team attempts rowing feat

In an effort to raise the funds needed for equipment, the UNCW crew team will attempt the spectacular feat of rowing from Wilmington to Wrightsville Beach, a distance of almost thirty miles. On Oct. 22, the crew will launch their shell in Wilmington and six hours later will land at Wrightsville Beach, if they make the total distance.

Jointly sponsored by the Cape Fear Rowing Association and the UNCW Rowing Club, the Row-a-thon will pit the skills and endurance of eight oarsmen and their coxswain against the uncertainties of the weather and equipment--and the certainty of fatigue.

By pledging a donation for each mile rowed, you can encourage these oarsmen in their efforts. To make a pledge, contact any member of the UNCW crew or Dr. John Anderson, office 105, Bear Business Building.

Soccer team continues great play

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

UNC-Wilmington, continuing to demonstrate excellent play, won two straight soccer matches this week to run their season's mark to 8-3. The Seahawks routed Campbell, 8-1, last Wednesday, while defeating previously unbeaten Maryland-Baltimore County, 4-2, last Saturday.

The Hawks enjoyed an offensive field day against Campbell. Six different UNCW players scored in the match. Dennis Davis and Chi Chi Mercado both scored twice, with Eddie Brock, Ed Donahue, Gil Castilla, and Keith Donnelly each scoring one goal.

Against Maryland-Baltimore

County, the Seahawks had to play catch-up. The UMBC scored late in the first half and early in the second half to take a 2-0 lead. But the Hawks kept applying the relentless pressure that has become their trademark. That pressure paid off, as the Seahawks scored four second-half goals to take the victory. Gil Castilla scored first with 40 minutes left in the game to narrow the gap to 2-1. Five minutes later, the Hawks tied the score up when Ed Donahue tallied. His hard shot from the left side deflected off a UMBC player and into the retriever goal. A short time later, Donahue gave the Hawks the lead as he headed in a cornerkick by Eddie Brock. Keith Donnelly closed out the 4-2 victory when he scored on a deadball kick by Matt Wight. Three of the Seahawks goals were scored by freshmen (Ed Donahue and Keith Donnelly).

"It would have been easy to panic when they got up on us 2-0," UNCW coach Calvin Lane said after the match. "But I had told our kids to keep applying the pressure and we would get a break sooner or later."

The Seahawks have now won four straight matches and are ranked 10th in the South.

Next action for the Seahawks will be at home against St. Andrew's at 4 p.m., Tuesday, October 24th. Of their remaining five matches, four will be played at home.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

With basketball season just around the corner, UNCW has several newcomers trying to take the place of departed players. Most of the new players are slated for backcourt duty. Some of the new players include:

John Calipari. The book on Calipari is that he is intelligent and a leader. A 6'0" freshman from Pennsylvania, he shoots well and is a good ballhandler.

John Haskins is a transfer from Lees-McRae Junior College. Haskins is a swing player, going in at forward and guard. He is known for defense.

Leon McRae. Another transfer, he came from Ft. Scott Junior College in Kansas. Leon is a leaper who can use either hand to score. He is 6'3".

Barry Taylor. Yet another transfer, Barry came out of Brevard (Fla.) Junior College. A 6'2" point guard candidate, he is a good ballhandler with great size and strength.

Dennis Tokin. A sharp-shooting freshman from Hopatcong, N.J. He has zone-busting outside shooting ability. His size will be an asset. He is 6'3".

So with these newcomers, plus some others and some returning stars, look for the Seahawks to be strong.

Who would have believed the Dodgers and Yankees would have had so many hits early in the series? Most players would have had the jitters. Davey Lopes sure didn't. I must admit that I was hoping Catfish Hunter would do good.

This is that funny time of year when it is baseball, football, basketball, hockey, horse-racing, and golf season all at once. It can drive one nuts trying to keep up with it all.

A special thanks to Jim Martin for designing and drawing the new sports logo. Jim has a real hidden talent; unfortunately, it is still hidden.

UNCW basketball question mark

The UNCW basketball team, with four very familiar faces missing, opened official practice on Sunday, October 15 in preparation for its third year of NCAA play.

UNCW boasted one of the finest records among Southern independents last year as the Seahawks rolled to a 19-7 season. Coach Mel Gibson's club established new school marks for total victories, as well as consecutive wins (8) in 77-78, but with leading scorer and rebounder Denny Fields and the starting backcourt of Billy and Bobby Martin lost to graduation, this year's squad has a completely new appearance.

"We lost four outstanding players (top reserve Lonnie Payton was also a senior) from a year ago," Gibson, who is entering his seventh season at UNCW, says. "Because of our seniors, some very talented young men did not receive the playing time they deserved last season, but I'm confident that they will now step in and do the job for us this year."

Heading the list of nine returning lettermen is the starting forward duo of 6-5 senior Dave Wolff and 6-6 junior Garry Cooper. Wolff's 11.1 points per game and 5.1 rebounds per outing are the best among the returnees—an indication of what Fields and the Martins took with them.

Cooper, whose 7.8 scoring and 5.0 rebounding figures are deceiving since he started only half of last year, could be the answer inside. His 52 blocked shots in 77-78 set a new UNCW record, and he has the potential to possibly double his stats from a year ago in both points and rebounds.

The third frontline starter will likely be either 6-9 Chuck Verba or 6-7 Danny Davis, both inexperienced sophomores. Others who will contribute up front include 6-6 soph Jimmy Denton and 6-5 senior Delaney Jones, a part-time starter last season.

The guard positions appear to be wide open with 6-2 senior Ralph Peterson and 5-10 junior John McPhaul, along with 6-5 swingman Art Paschal the only veterans on the roster.

Top newcomers are 6-0 John Calipari and 6-2 junior college transfer Barry Taylor at the point slot, and 6-3 freshman Dennis Tobin at the big guard position. Sophomore Leoh McRae and junior John Haskins, both 6-4 transfers, are capable of filling either the small forward or number two guard roles.

The 1978-79 season opener for the Seahawks is November 25 in Trask Coliseum, when UNCW host new Division One entry Baltimore University.

Students organize to promote activities and combat apathy

By Kay Warren

According to folk wisdom, some things are inevitable for NW students: death, taxes and apathy. Most of us manage to complete our matrix course without serious trouble, but the first two dangers (for that, however, has become a raging epidemic on campus, eliciting frequent statements of alarm from students and faculty alike.

Surveying the ravages of this scourge, a few brave pioneers determined to launch a counter attack. With the courage of Lazarus and Pandora, they began to prepare the battle-had not materialized. Deprived of its usual nourishment from dances, beer blasts and concerts, the student body's resistance to the apathetic virus was at an all time low. In the words of Jon Greene, Assistant Director of Student Activities, a group was needed to organize "no-cost or low-cost entertainment and activities for students."

At the first meeting of those interested in planning such activities, the name "OutaHawk" was chosen, the method to that madness being that such a designation would Greene announced that the committee would immediately begin to brainstorm. Nothing happened. There was not even a brainstorm (much less a storm). But then (after appropriate prayers to St. Jude, some later claimed) a veritable torrent of ideas commenced. A program for the fall semester began to take shape.

The basic scheme that emerged calls for mini-activities each Wednesday night and major activities each weekend.

The committee, realizing the power of apathy, determined and maintenance classes, a trivia contest, and free ski lessons.

On weekends, stronger treatment would be required to combat "suitcase-itis." Therefore, the committee determined to be extra creative. The result was plans for "fall case. According to Cindy Cole, the new chair of the program board, OutHawk's work will not be ignored.

"They've got some great ideas," she allowed, "and we'd like to work with them as much as possible." The two groups even plan to work return to inoculate our campus from ever-dreaded apathy. In short, the "OutaHawk committee" was born.

When OutaHawk arrived on the scene, the situation was desperate indeed. The program board, long hoped for, incorporate the Seahawk name and represent a play on the term "ad hoc." (An ad hoc committee is set up for particular purpose, while the OutaHawk committee wants to be unlimited in purpose). Having chosen a name, to utilize a broad spectrum of remedies.

For Wednesday nights they prescribed such interesting things as a hair show (with free beer for synergistic effect), a class in dorm cooking (nutritional therapy), car care frolics" (games, contests of superhuman strength and the world's largest picnic), a Halloween costume party, a Fifties dance (for all the would-be John Travolta's and Olivia Newton-Johns) a powder puff football game featuring a male Homecoming queen and male cheerleaders (feminism gone wild), and a Harvest Festival (with barn dance in a real barn).

The first dose of anti-apathy medicine (an open-mike contest in the Pub) was well received and the OutaHawk pioneers were greatly heartened. Then, from the dark recesses of student government, a dark cloud appeared. The student bureaucracy finally moved and the program board came into being. Would, the OutaHawk workers wondered, all their plans be thrown by the wayside as the program board geared up for action?

Thankfully, that won't be the together on the planned Halloween dance.

Whether apathy can be eliminated remains in doubt.

Some students, however, have proven that concern and enthusiasm can be used to fight it. Whatever the results of the formation of a program board, the OutaHawk committee demonstrates that students can work together to improve the quality of Seahawk life, without official sanction if necessary.

If these plans work out, the OutaHawk committee may very well do for apathy what Salk did for polio. Would-be miracle workers who would like to join in such an effort can drop by the committee's informal meetings any Monday at 10 p.m. in the Pub.

Be warned, however, these kids think big. After taking care of apathy, they plan to tackle death and taxes.

Campus Chuckles:

Getting over the Sunday slump

by Julie Russ

Staff Writer

There is one day a week when the whole world shares a huge, bored yawn. And that day is Sunday. Oh, a grease fire in the kitchen might liven up the hour, but you know what I mean. It's the kind of day when the English muffins could pop up green and nobody would care. When Andrew Gold on a cheap stereo sounds like Andrew Gold on a cheap stereo and nobody cries or throws.

You know it's a Sunday afternoon when the parents talk about going for a drive through the country (we live in the country, remember?). Another sure sign is going over to Galloway Hall to watch the Saturday night revelers stumble out into the sunlight. When they discover what day it is (no classes) the phrase "day of rest" takes on a whole new meaning, right there on the front lawn.

So what is there to do on the seventh day? Believe me, this is not just a problem faced by dorm-living unfortunates. Church is nice, but it doesn't fill up the whole day. TV? Ha. Somehow I can't get off on a screaming evangelist who promises to save my soul for twenty-five tax-deductible dollars.

After TV has driven one out of the house and into the hard cold world, then what? I can always go feed the squirrels, but since we have the canon version of Jack the Ripper, that might be a little hard on the squirrels. Maybe a nice horseback ride through the woods...

but no, our resident equine is sporting a coat of hair five inches deep and he does not care to be ridden today, thank you just the same.

By this time even the prospect of splitting firewood looks inviting. The hatchet, however, has disappeared and after hunting for it for thirty minutes, so has my enthusiasm. I did find a rather valuable item... but who would expect to find a lost retainer in the toolbox between the paint remover and a can of roofing nails? (It still fits, too).

Depression seems to strike more quickly on a Sunday, and my own solution to the seventh-day slump is to take two sleeping pills and hit the hay. (Yeah, I'm a medicine cabinet junkie. Pass the Tylenol, I've got the shakes). When I awake on Monday, Sunday is just a memory. I know, I know it's coming around again this week, right after Saturday, just like always. But this week I'm ready; I've got plans. This Sunday I'm going to paint the doghouse... and make a leaf collection... and maybe even make it to Monday again!

'Atlantis' to extend deadline for fall submissions

Atlantis, the UNCW Literary Magazine, has decided to extend its submission date to Friday, Oct. 27. Because the English Department has moved into the new classroom building, some students have been confused as to where to submit their materials. Although not a usual custom, Atlantis editors feel that the extension is necessary.

All who care to submit either poetry, prose, or art work should leave their materials with the English Department secretary now located downstairs in the new building.

This additional week gives those students who have yet completed Atlantis submissions extra time to do so.

Atlantis staff members feel that UNCW students should take advantage of the opportunity to publish their original poetry, prose, or art in a respected literary magazine.

Pom-pom squad hopes to raise school spirit with enthusiastic start

by J. Dillon Bryant
Staff Writer

School spirit will be greater than ever at UNCW this year with the addition of a pom-pom squad. The 13-member squad was chosen from 30 plus girls that tried out two weeks ago.

The squad is composed of eight freshman, four sophomores and one junior. They are Becky Thompson, Brucie Lee, Cathie Mitchell, Pat Billingsley, Lisa Morris, Donna Long, Lynne Dobbins, Pam Stocks, Susan West, Anne Cochrane, Debbie Simmons, Bridget Pederson and Tammy Parker. The advisor is Mrs. Jane Batson.

Tammy Parker, the group's head, is very enthusiastic about the group and performing this year.

"A group of girls from the student body got together, and as they've seen from other schools, decided to form a pom-pom squad to promote school spirit. We would perform at half-time of basketball games and possibly soccer games. As far as traveling to other schools, a lot of it depends on money. We are hoping to see a pep band formed so we will be able to travel together.

"It's always better to do our routine to live music rather than recorded music," Parker said. "The way we'll get to go is to write to the other schools that we are playing and ask if we could perform at half-time."

Although the squad has been chosen, funds have yet to be received.

"Right now we are in the process of itemizing everything and we will go before the Student Senate to ask for the amount of money we will need.

The squad is currently working hard trying to raise funds themselves. A doughnut sale was held this past Tuesday and they are selling seat cushions now for only $2.00.

Anyone interested in purchasing a cushion should contact a member of the squad or Advisor Batson in the Physical Education Department.

While interviewing Parker the feeling came through that the squad will be a good way to promote spirit in the school and get crowd support behind our teams. One can only hope that they promote spirit in our school like the Cowgirls do in Dallas.

Blues Brothers recording marks debut

The Blues Brothers have been signed to a recording contract with Atlantic Records.

The debut album from Jake Blues (John Belushi) and Elwood Blues (Dan Aykroyd) is planned for release later this year. The duo and their band recently played a week-long engagement at the Universal Amphitheatre in Los Angeles, where their performances were recorded live for the album. The Blues Brothers made their national network television debut last season on NBC-TV's "Saturday Night Live."

Jake (lead vocals) and Elwood (harp, vocals) grew up in Calumet City, Illinois, where they were adopted by black parents at a very early age. While details of their early years remain shrouded amidst mystery and conflicting legends, it is known that they were playing the blues in Chicago-area clubs at the age of eight. Their musical career has miraculously survived numerous near-disastrous interruptions, including Jake's three-month stint at Joliet Prison for armed robbery, as well as Elwood's careers in the industrial diamond and window-washing trades. Among their influences, the brothers cite Richard Daley, Paul Mauriat and Huey Long. Constantly on the road, The Blues Brothers cover 90,000 miles per year, traveling in their 1967 Dodge Polara.

University Music Series to present violinist as first concert

The first of two concerts sponsored by the University Music Series this semester will be presented next Wednesday, Oct. 28, at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. The concert will feature violinist Ani Kavafian. UNCW students will be admitted free with valid I.D. cards.

Ani Kavafian is the first recipient of the Philip M. Faucett String Prize of Young Concert Artists, as a result of which she was presented in a solo recital at Lincoln Center's Alice Tully Hall on March 21, 1978, and made her recording debut as a recitalist on the Musical Heritage Society label.

In February 1976, Kavafian was awarded an Avery Fisher Prize, bringing her a solo appearance with the New York Philharmonic in the Beethoven Concerto under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, and appearances with six other major U.S. orchestras. The non-competitive award recognizes outstanding talent and accomplishment in young, professional musicians.

Kavafian's New York appearances in 1977 have included solo engagements with the American Symphony Orchestra under John Nelson in Carnegie Hall, with Lawrence Foster and Lincoln Center's "Mostly Mozart" Festival, and as a special guest artist of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center. Highlights of the 1977-78 season include solo appearances with the New Orleans Philharmonic, the Oakland (Calif.) Symphony, the Chattanooga Symphony, and with eight Michigan orchestras in performances and as artist-in-residence through the Michigan Orchestra Association.

Kavafian has been heard as violin soloist with orchestras including the National Symphony in Washington, D.C., the Boston "Pops," the Dallas Symphony and the Greenwich Philharmonic. Other solo appearances with orchestra include engagements with the St. Louis Symphony, the Haydn Festival Orchestra in New York and the Grand Forks Symphony. Kavafian has appeared with harpsichordist Anthony Newman in Lincoln Center's "Great Performers" Series, with the "Mostly Mozart" Festival at Lincoln Center, and as soloist with the David and Brandenburg Ensembles. Last season, her acclaimed orchestral appearances included concerto performances with the Columbus Symphony, the Seattle Symphony, the Rochester Philharmonic, the Hudson Valley

Ani Kavafian

Philharmonic, the Richmond Symphony and the Hartford Symphony.

Kavafian performed her New York recital debut at Carnegie Recital Hall under the auspices of the Concert Artists Guild in 1972. After winning the 1973 Young Concert Artists International Auditions, Kavafian was chosen to open the 1973-74 Young Concert Artists Series at Hunter College Playhouse. In December 1974, she gave a recital in the "Introductions" Series of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, and she made a return appearance in the New York Young Concert Artists Series as cellist Ronald Thomas's guest artist in the Ravel Sonata for Violin and Cello.

Kavafian was born in Istanbul, Turkey, of Armenian parentage. Her family moved to Detroit, Michigan, when she was very young, and her early studies were with Ara Zerounian and Mischa Mischakoff. In her teens, at the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, she won both the violin and piano competitions and performed concertos on each instrument with the Interlochen Orchestra. Kavafian received her master's degree in 1973 from the Juilliard School of Music, where she studied with Ivan Galamian and Sally Thomas. While at Juilliard, she won first prize of the Khatchaturian Award in 1968, the Morris Loeb Memorial Prize, and the Juilliard Concerto Competition in 1971. Among Kavafian's other awards are the National Federation of Music Clubs Award in 1963, first prize in the Hudson Valley Philharmonic Competition in 1973, and second prize in the Naumburg Competition in 1975.

On Nov. 2, the University Music Series will present the Fine Arts Quartet, one of America's great ensembles that has been acclaimed worldwide.

Soundtrack makes it big

The movie industry has been using the recent rebirth of the 50's and 60's to come up with movies in the past years such as "American Graffiti," "Hot Wax" and "Grease." All of the flicks above employed music of the era and released soundtracks. One of the latest movies is National Lampoon's "Animal House" with the soundtrack featuring such goodies as Sam Cooke, Bobby Lewis, Chris Montez, Paul and Paula, Joey Dee and the Starliners and the Kingsmen. The star of "Animal House," "Saturday Night Live's" John Belushi, even has two arts on the LP with "Louie, Louie" (originally done by the Kingsmen).

As with the original version the words are very hard to make out and gives the same effect since you are constantly trying to figure out the words. Belushi also does "Money (That's What I Want)" which begins as he sings the solemn line "I gave my love a cherry" which is soon broken in by "Bluto" (Belushi) saying all he wants is money-love is OK but it won't pay the bills. Ronald Cuber does an impressive baritone saxophone solo in the cut.

The late same Cooke also has two cuts on the disc with "What a Wonderful World" and "Twistin' The Night Away." Both of Cooke's songs are slow and tell of love and romance.

"Wonderful World" (recently done by Art Garfunkel) says even if you are smart and know all there is to know you still need someone to love you to have a "wonderful world." "Twistin' The Night Away" takes place in a New York dance hall where two young and old "twist the night away."

Another cut that features dancing in Chris Montez's "Let's Dance" where the guy says he'll do any dance the girl wants to, even the "mashed potato" or twist if she will dance with him.

Bobby Lewis' "Tossin' and Turnin'" tells us that guys do feel guilt since the guy can't sleep because things aren't right with his girl.

"Hey Paula" by Paul and Paula employs true love in their theme. Now that they have both finished school they are going to be married and plan their life together.

Stephen Bishop ("On and On") wrote and performed the title cut, which if you didn't see the movie, summarizes it nicely. The Delta Chi Pledge is stated at the beginning of the cut. Bishop also performs "Dream Girl" which also has the 60's style complete with the "be-bops." The girl is leaving her man but she will always be his "dream girl" and he hopes she will make his dreams come true and stay.

Animal House is destined to become one of the soundtracks that will stay alive. After the movie leaves, the songs on the album come back to life once more.

ENTERTAINMENT

Fine Arts show 'The Deep' in Kenan

In describing "The Deep," which is the next movie to be presented by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee. Kathleen Carroll of the New York Daily News wrote "a thoroughly electrifying piece of entertainment. A movie so packed with unusual thrills, it could easily match the stunning success of 'Jaws'."

"The Deep," which is a Columbia Pictures release, will be shown Tuesday, Oct. 24, beginning at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium, by the Fine Arts Committee.

Starring Robert Shaw and Jacqueline Bisset and directed by Peter Yates, Peter Benchley's fascinating best-seller comes brilliantly to life in this thrilling adventure story. It's a romance, a mystery and an action-packed blockbuster which sprays excitement from the screen.

Liz Smith of Daily News Syndicate wrote of this motion picture that it is "sheer escapist adventure and the best underwater stuff ever filmed."

"The Deep" is an absolute adventure in itself, a big screen bonanza that just has to fit into your screening plans--terrific!"

This seventh movie presentation by the Fine Arts Committee is in color and is rated PG. Except for those with season passes, admission will be 50 cents for students with ID cards and $1.00 for all non-students.

Goodwood

The Goodwood Tavern located in the Pub is now open to the university community on a regular basis. Operating hours are 10:30-6:30, Monday through Friday, and 3:30-6:30 Sunday.

The Goodwood serves sandwiches, salads and other items. Students who have meal tickets may use them in the tavern as well as in the snack bar and cafeteria.

The Goodwood has been closed since last June because an administrative office was moved into the room to accommodate renovation work in Alderman Building.

Christian scholar lecture series to present Malefyt October 23-25

Dr. Calvin S. deWaal Malefyt will be guest speaker for the Staley Distinguished Christian Scholar Lecture Series on Oct. 23-25 at 7:30 p.m. in King Auditorium at UNCW. The lecture series, sponsored by United Christian Campus Ministry and funded by a grant from the Thomas F. Staley Foundation, is open to the entire university community as well as to the general public. Admission is free.

The general theme of the series is "The Search for Meaningful Values" with each lecture focusing on a specific issue which is influencing values in our contemporary society. The schedule of lectures include:

"The Holy Spirit and the Charismatic Renewal," looking at a religious movement which is affecting virtually every church body in the nation, Monday, Oct. 23.

"Maximum Sexuality," confronting our sensate culture and looking for common-sense guidelines to maximize relationships and enrich the total person, Tuesday, Oct. 24.

"U.S. and Soviet Society: In Search Of A Dream," examining the interplay of political, economic and religious lifestyles in the pursuit of happiness and the good life, Wednesday, Oct. 25.

Dr. Malefyt will also address the New Hanover County Ministerial Association on "Current Religious Moods on Campus;" a faculty forum on "The Whole Issue of Values in the University Today;" and a variety of university classes.

Dr. Malefyt is a native of northern New York and is presently pastor of the University Reformed Church of Ann Arbor, Michigan, established by the Reformed Church of America to serve the University of Michigan community. Under his leadership the Church has grown in membership from 30 in 1961 to 400 today. Previously, he was minister to students at historic Park Street Church in Boston.

He attended Union College and was graduated from Hope College; he received his M.Div. degree from Westminster Theological Seminary and his Ph.D. from Harvard University. A post-doctoral Merrill Fellow at Harvard, his focus was on religion and culture (working with Erik Eriksson, John Kenneth Galbraith and Gerald Kaplan). Other post-doctoral studies included the National Training Laboratory of Applied Behavioral Science; courses at the University of Michigan with Ronald Lippitt on planned social change and group dynamics; and work with Saul Cooper on systems analysis at the Community Mental Health Center.

Dr. Malefyt has conducted lecture series and small group workshops at many colleges and universities in the United States, and served as chaplain to the English speaking community and the United States embassy in Moscow, the Soviet Union.

The purpose of the lecture series is to present the significance of the Christian faith for contemporary life and culture, its sponsors stated. Through address and informal discussion, members of the university and of the community are encouraged to explore and question their own beliefs and religious commitment, and to engage in meaningful dialogue with others.

'Las Vegas Night' to be sponsored by cafeteria featuring Dove

The university food service management will present "An Evening in Las Vegas" as a special dinner-floor show on Wednesday, Oct. 25. Three shows are planned for 5, 7 and 8:30 p.m.

The entertainment for the evening will feature recording star Ronny Dove, an "oldie but goodie" act of the Sixties. Dove has hits such as "Mountain of Love," "One Kiss for Old Time's Sake," "Cry," and "Kiss Away" to his credit.

Dove will arrive in Wilmington from an engagement in Las Vegas at the Flamingo en route to Florida for another performance.

There will be two seatings at the show for all meal plan members. To insure a smooth-running evening, the students with meal tickets have been divided into groups for each seating.

Students with five-day meal plans with numbers 1-100 and seven-day plans with numbers

1-325 will attend the 5 p.m. show. Arrival time is set for 4:30 p.m.

Students with five-day plans with numbers 101-225 and seven-day plans with numbers 326-625 will attend the 7 p.m. show. Arrival time is set for 6:30 p.m.

The third show will be for staff, faculty and students without meal plans. Showtime is 8:30 p.m. with arrival at 8:15 p.m.

Any student with a schedule conflict who cannot attend the designated show should contact the food service management at least three days before the performance. Changes must be kept to a minimum, however.

When guests enter the dining room, tables will be set with a menu for each person. A waitress will take your order.

Entrees will include: sirloin steak with onion ring; chicken breast with wild rice; and beef tips burgundy.

Each entree will be served with a baked potato and peas with mushrooms. Also provided will be a salad bar, beverages and desserts.

Educational Testing Service stands between student and education

(CPSI)—Camouflaged in the gentle, antileveled hills of Lawrenceville is one of the most influential unknown corporations in America.

Critics like to characterize it as an unchecked monopoly, a gatekeeper, a cradle-to-grave inhibitor of social mobility.

Forbes Magazine, after noting the 370 acres of prime real estate, the artificial pond, the real ducks, the $1 million conference center, the tasteful brick buildings, the savvy investments, called it one of the hottest little growth companies around.

Information officer John Smith calls it a very concerned organization, with a lot of integrity.

The IRS calls it non-profit. Most Americans have little to say about the Educational Testing Service (ETS). They know it only as a multiple choice test that stands between them and college, grad school, law school and now more than 50 professions ranging from podiatrist to CIA agent. Last year over a million students took the ETS-designed Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). Another 800,000 sat down to one of a battery of graduate exams. Countless others, from pre-schoolers to auto mechanics, were measured, assessed and, say the critics, judged by an ETS test.

These programs, plus grants from government and the private sector, netted ETS $70 million in 1977, with a profit margin of about $1 million. ETS, in short, is a very successful non-profit company.

A Rubber Stamp?

"For too many students, the decision to take a standardized admission test creates a statistical shadow which follows them through life, often without their knowledge or control," says Congressman Michael Harrington (D-Mass).

Harrington has introduced a "truth in testing" bill designed to open standardized testing to public scrutiny and control. California recently passed a similar bill, and one is now pending before the New York legislature.

This action comes 30 years after the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, the American Council for Education and the College Entrance Examination Board (CEEB) established ETS as a separate entity chartered to construct educational tests.

Of this triumvirate, CEEB was and is the most important.

An umbrella organization representing over 2500 schools of every character, it contracts with ETS to provide admissions tests. Despite their historical tie, the relationship is supposed to be purely contractual, with CEEB acting as consumer protector.

"Not so," says Nader researcher Alan Nairns. "The college board is a rubber stamp for ETS, and therefore not accountable to the students who must take and pay for the exams."

"Historical" and "amicable" are the words ETS president

William Turnbull uses to describe the relationship. He should also say profitable. Last year CEEB programs accounted for more than 42 percent of ETS revenues.

Pure Motive

"ETS is not a gatekeeper," he says, claiming that charge is not only untrue, but a bad metaphor. "ETS is a custom gatemaker according to the dictates of the person who wants the gate. I do think it's important that someone other than ETS makes those decisions."

Turnbull admits that ETS, as the largest educational research organization in the country, often conducts the studies that validate its own test to clients like CEEB, but he points to the distinguished educators involved in the CEEB-ETS relationship as proof that motives are pure.

"Do you think men of this caliber would be involved in anything like that?" asked John Smith as we examined a list of ETS trustees.

Historical friendliness aside, it was revealed in 1974 that the ETS-CEEB contract contained two clauses forbidding both parties from doing business with any competitors. Lawyers at the time said that this was probably an illegal restraint of trade, but pointed out that the courts are reluctant to apply anti-trust law to areas involving education.

Whatever the nature of the relationship, their union has produced one controversial monument: the SAT. Objective, simple, practical, graded in milliseconds, a quick study for harried admission officers, it has become a rite of passage for millions of students.

But what exactly does it test?

"The SAT only measures a student's developed ability in a particular area at a given time," says Turnbull.

It's the School's Fault

One-time Einstein collaborator and longtime ETS gadfly Banesh Hoffman disagrees: "They reward superficiality, ignore creativity and penalize the person with a subtle probing mind." Ralph Nader and Harrington echo Hoffman's charge that the tests ignore such vital qualities as creativity, integrity and maturity.

Turnbull agrees: "It's not as if there were an array of things to test, and ETS chose only a couple. We test only what we know how to measure." He adds that if the test has come to influence the allocation of academic opportunity, then the fault lies not with ETS, but with the colleges.

Still, ETS is not completely blameless. While they hedge on stating exactly what predictive value the tests possess, they wax poetic on their test's rigorous development. Oscar K. Buros, who reviews nearly 1500 tests in his Mental Measurements Yearbook, describes the SAT as "highly perfected—possibly reaching the pinnacle of the current state of the art of psychometrics." Is it odd for people to assume that such a technically-exquisite test ought to have some predictive value?

The question of prediction is a sensitive one at ETS. Correlation between test scores and college grades is only .4. For some reason men consistently score higher than women, although the latter have better academic records coming into the test. Ethnic groups score lower than whites. ETS studies have revealed that there is a direct and continuous correlation between family income and SAT scores. There is a standard error of measurement of 30 points. Consequently, the true score of a person receiving a 600 lies somewhere between 570 and 630.

Such revelations prompted the "truth in testing" legislation. Briefly, the bills would require all testing firms to make public all reliability and validity studies; to publish a prominent warning that the allegedly exact score is only an approximation to provide test applicants with a specific description of what skills are being tested; to publish all test questions after 30 days and to notify students and schools of any irregularities.

Top Secret

Turnbull agrees with the spirit of the legislation, but claims that ETS already fulfills all the criteria except publishing test questions. They could do that, but the cost would have to be passed onto the student.

All recruiting visits are subject to the availability of space so interested students should confirm their arrangements a few days prior to the scheduled visit.

Volunteers needed

Volunteers are needed to serve as scorers, timers and chaperones for the Special Olympics 1978, sponsored by the Wilmington Parks and Recreation Department.

The Special Olympics is a national program to offer the opportunity for athletic competition for special children and adults in basketball games. It is designed so that these athletes may challenge themselves and compete with others having the same abilities.

Special Olympic competition is offered in four individual events: free throw shooting, field goal shooting, dribbling for time, and bonus goal.

The competition is scheduled for Nov. 8 and 9 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Brodgen Hall.

Athletes included are students 8 years old and above in special education classes or centers. An orientation program for volunteers is set for 9 a.m., and lunch will be provided.

If interested in volunteering, call Kathy Howard or Linda Formy-Duval to register by Nov. 6 at 763-1828 or 762-7246, or contact Student Activities Director Linda Moore in the Pub, telephone extension 2283.

classified," he says. A claim that both Nairns and former New York Magazine writer Stephen Brill dispute. Both recount the prevalence of the top secret stamp at ETS.

Regarding ETS errors, Vice-president Robert Solomon has testified before HEW's Privacy Commission that they were "to the best of our experience" no problems.

Since then, 95 percent of the takers of the Nov. 5, 1977 GMAT were scored 9 or 10 points too low. The mistake was discovered only several months after the scores had been mailed out. At the time of discovery, John High, associate program director for the management exam, called it "a very serious error . . . It was caught quite by chance."

In July and October, two different LSAT exams were administered. ETS says the exams were of equal difficulty, and cannot explain why one group did so much better than the other. Law schools were not informed that the tests were different.

The tests are nationally accepted nonetheless. President Turnbull agrees that certainly "with more tests in use the possibility of misuse increases." So what's on the horizon? In this decade, ETS has moved increasingly away from academics and into testing "occupational competence." They are devising tests for pre-schoolers. A long-range goal is to perfect a test to discover why people fail tests.

Business management class sells birdhouses

The Department of Business is trying a project method of instruction rather than the conventional lecture method with its Operations Management course this semester. The course is designed to enable the class to operate as an enterprise with two divisions. The students are actual employees of the corporation and, as such, they have been assigned roles in the company which will enable the divisions to go completely through the production process that an actual company would use. The classes would-be company produces birdhouses and bird feeders.

Division II will be manufacturing birdhouses for purple martins which will sell for $15 unassembled and $17 assembled. The assembled birdhouses will be painted white with green trim. Each of the birdhouses has a base of 12 1/2" x 22", and assembled height is 12 1/2". These birdhouses consist of eight rooms and are constructed out of one-half and one-quarter inch outdoor plywood. Purple martins contribute greatly to insect control—especially mosquitos. Each martin's yearly consumption ranges into 2000 mosquitos per day which they eat while migrating back and forth from South America each year.

These birdhouses will make excellent gifts and will also be beneficial to your community. Interested persons should contact Ken Carter at 791-4385 or Debbie Ferrel at 256-4376. Orders can also be placed through Dr. John Anderson in the Business Department.

Pre-registration for handicapped students held on October 31

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is subject to the regulations contained in the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and all regulations related to that Act. Portions of these regulations are designed to guide the University in its effort to make college life an enriching experience for the handicapped student.

In an effort to facilitate the pre-registration process for handicapped students, any student protected by the Rehabilitation Act is invited to begin pre-registration on the first day, Tuesday, October 31.

If a student feels that he/she is covered by the act, or has any questions, he/she should contact Dr. James K. McGowan or Lynda Strickland, office Alderman 114, extension 2115.

Huguelet said that the most urgent problem was for greater seating capacity. He said that as the library becomes more crowded, noise will become a problem for its users.

"It's really bad from a library standpoint to become overcrowded," Huguelet observed. "The more crowded it is, the less comfortable it is for those who need to use it."

Volunteer Opportunities

Help special athletes--Volunteers are needed to serve as scorers, timers, and chaperons for the Special Olympic Tournament to be held Nov. 8, 9, and 10.

Interested in helping the elderly?--Several volunteers are needed to work in recreation programs at nursing homes day or evening.

Like working with children?--Assist trained staff with activities for mentally retarded children (6months-adulthood) throughout the year, 7 days per week.

For more information on these and other volunteer openings, see Linda Moore, Student Activities, or call the Voluntary Action Center, 762-96211.

Absentee ballot deadlines nearing

Students who are registered to vote in counties other than New Hanover have until Nov. 1 to apply for absentee ballots for the Nov. 7 general election.

There are three ways under North Carolina election laws to obtain an absentee ballot.

An applicant may personally visit the board of elections of his/her home county. There, an application may be completed and the voter can receive and mark the ballot in the presence of an elections official.

Board of elections offices are generally open Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. In less populous counties, however, the hours may be limited to Monday, Wednesday and Friday only.

The applicant may also have a close relative visit the home county elections office and complete the application for the absentee voter. A ballot will then be mailed to the voter which must be marked, notarized and received by the board of elections no later than 5 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 6.

The third method of application is to obtain an absentee ballot application request card. These request cards must be mailed to the home county board of elections by Thursday, Oct. 26.

The board of elections will then send the application which must be completed and returned no later than Nov. 1. A ballot will be sent which must be mailed, notarized and returned to the board of elections by 5 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 6.

Application request cards are available at UNCW in the Student Activities Office, room 105 of the Pub. Cards are also posted on bulletin boards in the student union and are being distributed by members of the UNCW Young Democrats.

All correspondence with the board of elections must list the voter's name as recorded in the registration books.

Further questions about absentee ballot procedures may be addressed to the New Hanover County Board of Elections (763-4637) or the Student Activities Office in the Pub.

Security force to crack down on violations

by Helen Hazelton
Associate Editor

Charles Long, Chief of Campus Security, will be "cracking down on the larceny of traffic signs" around campus beginning immediately. "First, it is an offense. It carries a $500 fine or six months in jail or both. Secondly, it is expensive to replace them and the expense is carried by the students. It is a dangerous situation on campus (without the signs) and stealing them carries a stiff penalty," Long says. Also, Long will be stepping up enforcement to combat the increase in the larcenies of cars around campus. A larceny in which valuables are stolen carries a felony of up to five years in prison.

"We need to protect the students," Long said. "All traffic violations, for example, DUI (driving under the influence), stop sign violations, driving over the speed limit-- these too will be cracked down on and we will increase our enforcement. We are using radar now and the radar signs are posted," said Long. The speed limit on campus is 25 miles per hour, unless otherwise posted. The speed limit is 10 miles per hour in parking lots.

"We just want to make them (the students) aware of the dangers and problems," Long said.

WLOZ faces financial crisis in wake of new federal regulations

by J. Dillon Bryant

The smallest of six Wilmington radio stations, UNCW's WLOZ faces a critical financial crisis as a result of a new Federal Communications Commission regulation which will require the 10-watt station to expand its output to 100 watts. The SGA-supported station also has been left in serious trouble—equipment wise—from the past two years. The cost of the changes to meet the new requirements and update equipment—around $20,000.

Operating as an FM station since November 1977, WLOZ still has not been licensed by the F.C.C. The station's application for licensing was filed before the new 100-watt minimum went into effect, and the F.C.C. will consider granting the license to the station at its current wattage.

WLOZ Program Director Wade Harris says that much of the responsibility for the station's problems rests with the last year's staff, and university and SGA officials who don't realize the scope of the problem.

"When the station was formed as an FM broadcast station it was formed by a group of people who came in with the right idea but the wrong approach and the wrong means," Harris stated.

"What they didn't do was to get all of the necessary paperwork, the necessary equipment and the proper personnel to set the station up."

Harris said that before anything can be done to correct the current problems "we must correct many of the mistakes made by last year's staff."

Harris said that much of the new equipment purchased to change the station to FM frequency was installed incorrectly and is now "burnt out or beyond repair."

WLOZ is now operating as an FM educational station.

Harris stated that under the new F.C.C. guidelines the station has three options: shut down completely, change frequencies or increase the power to 100 watts.

WLOZ disc jockey Paul Johnson mans the control booth

Harris explained that, at any rate, the station must increase its power or face closing within a three-year probationary period which will begin once the F.C.C. has approved the license for a 10-watt facility. Harris said it would be impossible to change frequencies because there are no frequencies open for 10-watt stations. The operating budget for WLOZ this year is approximately $5,000. The SGA has also set aside a fund of $4,000 that will be added to each year until enough has been saved to purchase the necessary new equipment.

Harris estimates that as a 100-watt station, WLOZ would need a $2000 initial operating budget.

This would cover purchasing new equipment, installation and normal operation expenditures.

Harris said that the station has already spent about half of its budget for this year. He said that much of that money went for bills from last year and last summer when the station's current management was not in charge of the station.

Harris said that the SGA does not understand the station's funding needs and that they

NCSL delegates convene at UNCW, hear remarks of Sen. Helms

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Approximately 150 members of the North Carolina Student Legislature convened this weekend for a meeting in UNCW's King Auditorium. NCSL meets each month for an interim council session in addition to the annual legislative session it holds in Raleigh.

The NCSL delegates heard U.S. Senator Jesse Helms, who addressed the group at the Saturday morning session. UNCW Chancellor William Wagoner and SGA President Wayne Dunlap also spoke to the organization.

Helms told the delegates that it is good to see young people involved and interested in the governmental process. He cautioned them, however, against turning to the federal government as the answer to all problems because "in truth, Washington does not solve problems because it is a problem."

The Senator also said that there is a big difference between his generation and the generation of students today because today's students are more willing to become active in politics and government.

Helms answered questions from the audience on topics ranging from defense to campaign contributions, from the proposed "D.C." amendment to tax policy.

NCSL delegates held committee meetings later in the morning and reassembled in general session in the afternoon. Among the issues debated in the general session was the "D.C." amendment, which is a proposed amendment to the Constitution granting Congressional representation to the District of Columbia.

The delegates voted down a resolution in support of the amendment by a 13-5 vote. UNCW's delegation voted against the measure.

A lengthy debate occurred on the proposal with delegates from UNC-Chapel Hill, Lenoir-Rhyne and N.C. State active in supporting the resolution. Proponents argued that it would extend representation to the citizens of Washington, while opponents said it would be adverse to the concept of federalism.

The student legislature passed a resolution supporting the establishment of a labor law center at N.C. Central University. Other issues discussed included expansion of student aid, which was postponed for action until the next NCSL meeting.

The session was presided over by John Ott of Duke University, who serves as student governor.

Student Legislature stages display of procedural mismanagement

The curtain came up—another opening, another show. Act I—the cast of characters introduce themselves. Act II—nice dialogue, not a lot of action. Act III—a twist in plot: who has the script? Epilogue—thank God the producer wasn't in the audience!

That is the general outline of the production staged by the Student Legislature at its meeting last week. What started out as a normal, every-week meeting turned into a charade of rule-bending, nonchalance and temper tantrums. The worst part is that the show's producers—the student body—were hardly represented at the performance of their stars.

The inciting incident of all this action was a request from the pom-pom squad for $671 of SGA money. The important thing here is not to debate the merit of such a proposal; indeed, we would find ourselves with little to say on that topic. But there are a few things to be said about the controversy of legislative procedure which resulted from consideration of this request.

Representatives of the pom-pom squad appeared before the Legislature to state their case for money to buy uniforms, hats and canes, pom-poms and other paraphernalia necessary to their organization. Problems arose when the squad representatives said they needed the money immediately because time was running short.

Normally, that would present no problem because the Legislature would have said simply, "Sorry, you'll have to go before the Finance Committee and come back next week." Almost every group that goes to the SGA for money "needs it right now," and almost every group gets referred to the Finance Committee.

What made the difference for our pom-pom girls? SGA officials—including President Wayne Dunlap—were pushing for speedy approval of the funds. Their reasons for doing so are not at all clear because there is no reason to treat this request any differently than others.

Dunlap's position is particularly perplexing because it was the president who only a week earlier had admonished the Legislature for passing an allocation for "Las Vegas Night" without going through the Finance Committee. The Legislature got burned in that situation when they later discovered there were unanswered questions surrounding the allocation, and we hoped they had finally realized the benefit of using the committee.

We must acknowledge here that there were in fact many legislators who insisted the matter be sent to committee. But it was this insistence which led to the irrational decision to call a recess, hold a Finance Committee meeting with the members who happened to be present and then come back to act on the "committee's" recommendation.

And all along we thought the purpose of the Finance Committee was to provide a means of thorough examination of each funding request, a process that would be impractical on the floor of the Legislature.

At any rate, the "meeting" of the "Finance Committee" was held even though two of the five members, including its chairperson, were not present. The meeting was as illegal as armed robbery—you can't hold a meeting without proper notice to all parties involved.

But, as if by a gift heaven-sent, the Legislature was prevented from acting on the allocation because when it was called back into session there was not a quorum and business could not continue. Although he received little praise from his fellow legislators, Representative Wes Armstrong deserves credit for the most heroic move of the evening for calling public attention to the lack of a quorum; otherwise, business could have continued as long as no one said anything.

We hope—and believe—that the Legislature has learned from this experience. The biggest lesson is implicit: establish some sense of procedural order and seldom deviate. This will insure that all parties are given equal and fair treatment and allow the smooth flow of business. Sure, there will be times when there are exceptions, but as the procedure becomes a part of a legislative process these exceptions will appear less and less often.

Opinions expressed by SGA officials after the abrupt end of the meeting lend as much worry as they do hope for the situation. Some argued that as long as business is being handled, it is okay to break to rules. Others argued—more sensibly—that there should be written procedures so that when questions arise they are not answered by the whims of an evening.

SGA officials should be embarrassed by what happened Thursday night. For a long time they have been asserting their power and proclaiming that their situation is the envy of student governments across the state. Maybe soon they will realize that it's not how much power you have, but how well you use what power you've got.

LETTERS

There is cross-country

To the Editor:

This letter is to inform the staff of the Seahawk, especially the Sports Editor, that UNCW does have a cross-country team. Yes, a varsity cross-country team. As a member of the team, I am very disappointed that we have been completely ignored when it came to coverage by the Seahawk.

Joggers and runners can be seen all over campus, so one would think coverage of running events would increase. Our meet last Thursday was covered by both TV stations and the Wilmington paper. Yet our paper chose to print articles on club football, the World Series and basketball practice. Paul Lupika, a UNCW freshman, won the race with a time of 27:11. It would have taken very little effort and space for you to report it. Definitely a slack move on your part.

Gene Arthur

(EDITOR'S NOTE: We regret the omission very much and apologize to members and supporters of the cross-country team. However, would ask you to consider that our present sports editor has only filled the position for three weeks.)

Warren's column not all facts

To the Editor:

Mr. Ray Warren writes very graphically and with much intensity in his column, "Viewpoint." However, I wonder if his excitability sometimes stifles his comprehension of all the facts. Last week he wrote a lengthy "rah, rah" article about human sexuality on campus. I admire his willingness to tackle an issue which is sometimes sensitive and often actively avoided. I also commend his pitch for responsible sexuality.

However, it seems that in this particular assignment he didn't do all of his homework to get the facts together, such as:

1. I don't believe he interviewed anyone related to the "Apples" group to find out what is going on.

2. An all-campus survey was completed last semester to help assess the human sexuality needs of the campus.

3. The Administration (i.e., Student Affairs) has been very supportive of the APPLES activities and contributed space, staff time, and forums for disseminating information.

4. Student Activities, Counseling and Testing, Campus Ministry, Region 'O' Family

Music is music, right? It's all beautiful noise, right? Uh-uh, not any more. Ah, I was naive once; I thought that anyone who enjoyed the Eagles would appreciate Elvis Costello, too. Well, that assumption nearly caused a war, but I survived (with scars) and learned the Truth About Rock & Roll.

Now let's say you ask a drooling Cheech & Chong freak about music. Chances are you'll be in for an hour-long lecture on the benefits of Real Rock. According to these sound experts, Bob Dylan is the absolute last word in meaningful music. Well, maybe so, but don't tell that to a Johnny Rotten fan—you're liable to get a safety pin in the old eyeball.

Enough of the wild-eyed groupie types. Now we come to a huge percentage of music-lovers: concert-goers. Show me a man who listens to Boston night and noon and I'll show you a guy who'd scale the Rockies to hear the real thing. Live music is fun, sure, and even inspiring to some, but I prefer to keep my eardrums intact. Being a little wiser today than of yore, I am careful not to broadcast my indifference to live sound. There are too many diehard rock fans around who will gladly rope and drag a skeptic to the most ear-busting gig in the state... and then laugh off the resulting case of "Rocker's Ear."

And God forbid that a James Taylor disciple should ever come up against a Bob Seger Fan. Bloodshed is never nice, even in the name of pop music.

The classical factor is definitely an oppressed minority, and many an aspiring Mozart has forsaken his integrity in favor of local Friday night jam sessions. This is not to suggest that there aren't any classical music buffs out there... but they are getting a little harder to find nowadays.

So there you have it, folks and friends. Which facet of stereo sound is really you? Does Bruce Springsteen make you antsy? Does Donna Sommer bring tears to your eyes? Does disco make you want to spit up or do you live for those weekend dance floors? Or maybe you're like me; all you want out of life is a Pioneer set and a quality headset to listen to your own musical choices.

Bean sprouts— cheap & nutritional

When money is running short on Wednesday, and you still have to worry about tomorrow's dinner, or you just want a food that provides a few extra vitamins at a low cost, bean sprouts can provide the answer.

Sprouts contain great nutritional value in addition to being easy to grow in the home. In order to grow any type of sprout take a fairly large jar and place two tablespoons of seeds (alfalfa or lentils work especially well) then fill the jar with water, one-half full for small seeds up to the entire jar for the large seeds.

Soak the seeds for 4 to 8 hours, again depending on size, then drain them using a wire strainer or cheesecloth. Lay the jar on its side so the sprouts have room to grow, in a warm, shady area of the kitchen. The seeds then have to be rinsed two to three days of this, the seeds should be placed in the sun so the leaves will green.

The sprouts can then be used as fillers for casseroles, hamburgers, salads or just anything. They only contain about 16 calories per cupful. Additionally, the water used to soak the sprouts can be used to water houseplants because it has been vitamin enriched by the seeds.

Congress drops tuition credit legislation

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS)-- In a major victory for President Carter, the Congress adopted the president's Middle Income Assistance Act and, in last-minute politicking before the Oct. 15 adjournment, dropped the tuition tax credit legislation Carter opposed.

The Middle Income Assistance Plan, offered by the president last February as an alternative to tuition tax credits, adds some $1.2 billion to existing federal student financial aid programs.

Specifically, the plan expands the government's Basic Educational Opportunity Grants, Guaranteed Student Loans and Work-Study programs. The plan was generally pitched to middle-income families, who presumably want some relief from the rising costs of college education.

Under the act, which the president is expected to sign into law shortly, dependents of families earning more than $16,000 are eligible for work-study grants for the first time ever. Average grants to families earning $8,000-$16,000 per year will go up by some $200.

Tuition tax credits legislation, which would have allowed families to deduct up to $100 in tuition costs from their income taxes, passed both the House and the Senate last week. As originally introduced, the bill included the tuition costs of students in elementary and secondary school as well. Political expediency demanded that elementary and secondary school costs be dropped from the bill, which was then passes as an amendment to a larger tax cut bill.

House and Senate versions of the larger bill, though, were deferred. When the bill was referred back to a joint conference committee, several representatives insisted on attaching the elementary and secondary school provision to it again. An agreement could not be reached, and while the tax cut bill went on to passage, the tuition tax cut amendment to it was dropped.

Resources and the health services have been cooperating for over two years to provide human sexuality information to the campus and confidential personal counseling for those in need.

5. Programs and resources which have been presented:

-Rape prevention by Campus Ministry

-Human sexuality lecture series by Counseling and Testing

-Pregnancy testing and contraceptive information groups led by APPLS

-Campus Ministry lecture on "Maximum Sexuality"

-Personal counseling in these areas by faculty, campus minister, Counseling and Testing, health services, et al.

-Campus-wide survey

Many of Mr. Warren's ideas are admirable and some, as noted above, have already been thought of by others. There has been one critical problem which has plagued all the above efforts--would you believe--lack of student interest! Our survey says that UNCW is typically a sexually active community. However, few students have been willing to deal with human sexuality issues in an open, critical fashion and take advantage of the services already available.

More needs to be done and some of us are willing to help. If there are students who would like to become involved in some of the above issues they should contact Student Activities, the campus minister, the health services, Counseling and Testing or Region 'O' Family Resources. The Student Senate appropriated $400 for this year to help meet the needs but so far no students have expressed any interest. Are there any students out there willing to assume part of the responsibility?

SGA to send representatives to New Orleans student conference

by Bobby Parker

Editor

The Student Legislature voted to send five representatives to a student rights conference this weekend in New Orleans after considerable debate over who would be chosen to go. SGA President Wayne Dunlap, who will also attend the conference using his executive travel fund, had requested that money be appropriated to send other representatives so that UNCW would take full advantage of the meeting.

The five representatives are all officials of the SGA. Attorney General Glen Downs, Secretary Karin Wainsley, and legislators Karin Whaley, Jon Faill and Mark Beamblossom. They will spend three days in New Orleans attending various workshops dealing with women and minority rights, student press, student rights and other topics.

Freshman Representative Wes Armstrong expressed strong concern that none of the representatives are from his class. Armstrong and Sophomore Vice president Brad Williams said that underclassmen should be sent because they could use the experience in future years of SGA service.

Williams suggested that the single senior in the group, Karin Whaley, be replaced by a freshman.

But Jon Faill said that the Legislature should send the most qualified representatives without regard to classification.

Junior Vice-president Jack Allen said that sending representatives on the basis of their classification would "splinter" the Legislature and would be a move backwards for the unity of the SGA.

Representative Ray Blackburn, however, argued that sending a freshman would "increase the representativeness and diversity of the body" and the more diverse the body, the better UNCW would be represented.

The five representatives, recommended by President Dunlap, were finally approved by the Legislature.

Another debate occurred over the approval of money for food costs for the group. Customarily, the SGA does not provide money for food to individuals or groups that it sends on trips.

The Finance Committee, however, had recommended giving the group $20 per person for food. Other costs were listed as $80 for registration fees per person, $140 for air fare per person and an allocation for lodging.

Representative Faill said that money should be approved for food because this group is representing the SGA as a whole rather than one group as is usually the case.

Dunlap, who said that two or three of the meals would be included in the registration fee, said that the individuals must present receipts for food and that unused portions of the appropriation would be returned to the SGA.

Sophomore President Harry Pilos said that the Legislature should hold to past precedent and not give money for food. Pilos added that "even for New Orleans... $20 a day is a big subsidy."

The Legislature passed the recommendation of the Finance Committee, including the $20 food budget.

In other legislative business, Tammy Parker of the pom-pom squad presented a request for $671 for uniforms and other materials but a controversy over legislative procedure prevented the request from being acted upon.

SGA President Dunlap urged the Legislature to consider the request without going through the Finance Committee, as is the usual procedure. Dunlap noted that the squad needs the money as soon as possible because uniforms must be made in time for the first home basketball game.

The request listed expenses as: $331 for uniforms, $140 for pom-poms, and $200 for supplies including canes, gloves, hats and music.

Several legislators urged that the request be referred to the Finance Committee. A motion finally was passed to recess to allow the three members of the committee present at the meeting to make a recommendation on the request to prevent putting the matter off another week.

But when the legislature was called back into session, many members had left and there was not a quorum. Therefore, the meeting was immediately adjourned.

Other matters taken up include approval of charters for the Psychology Club and Rowing Club. Program Committee chairperson Cindy Cole gave a report on scheduled events for the semester and indicated that a budget would be presented at this week's meeting.

A motion was passed to require written financial reports be submitted to the SGA office monthly be funded groups. Absent from the meeting was Karin Whaley.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in C218.

Members of Chi Phi fraternity sponsored a pole-sitting marathon to raise money for muscular dystrophy. For a total of 75 hours, from Thursday through Sunday, volunteers sat atop this pole near Galloway Hall. Nearly $300 in cash and $150 in pledges was raised.

It was rumored last week that some villainous person found the lucky Stroh's bottle and intended to ship it off to a distant land, thus depriving you the students of a chance to find it. This greatly disturbed us here at Stroh's; so, last Wednesday night when you were all at our Oct-Stroh-ber Fest we slipped away and checked for ourselves.

Thankfully the rumor was incorrect. But with this grim possibility in mind, we decided to give you the big clue soon. We have defined soon as follows:

On Wed. Oct. 25th, a Stroh's representative will post the final clue in the Pub lobby, in front of Jon Greene's office. It will be posted some time between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

So on with the Great Stroh's Suds Search.

All students who have lost their permanent I.D. cards and need new ones made are advised that the Student Affairs Office, Alderman Hall, room 104, is now set up to take pictures between the hours of 8:30 and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. There is a $3.00 charge to make a duplicate card.

Helms defends campaign contributions, denounces 'intrusion'

by Bobby Parker
Editor

U.S. Senator Jesse Helms defended his multimillion dollar campaign for reelection and denounced the increasing "intrusion . . . of government into everybody's lives" in an appearance at UNCW Saturday before the North Carolina Student Legislature.

Helms' comments came as he addressed NCSL delegates who convened this weekend in Wilmington for their monthly meeting, hosted by the UNCW delegation. Approximately 150 delegates attended the meeting from schools throughout North Carolina.

Helms, who has raised $6.2 million in his reelection effort, has been criticized by his Democratic opponent, Insurance Commissioner John Ingram, as a candidate of special interests who has received significant donations from outside the state.

Helms dismissed Ingram's charges, saying that he is not concerned about Ingram's challenge "if that's all he has to talk about." Helms stated that "instead of apologizing for (the amount raised), I'm immensely proud of it."

"How more can a citizen be involved (in an election) than when he chips in a small amount of money?" Helms questioned, noting that most of the money had been raised through an average contribution of $20 or less.

Helms said that the campaign fund, which has set a record in North Carolina political campaigns and possibly for Senate campaigns nationwide, was necessary because he is the candidate of the minority party and had been campaigning since August 1976 against a host of Democratic challengers.

The senator also noted the expense of the method his campaign has used to raise money—direct mail appeals. Helms said this is "the most expensive way" to finance a campaign but added that he preferred this to accepting large contributions from labor unions or political "fat cats."

Relating inflation to the size of the federal debt, Helms said that the American people "have too often turned to Washington, D.C., . . . when in truth Washington does not solve problems because Washington is a problem." He said that increasing government regulations for business, farmers, education, and other areas represents an intrusion into the private lives of Americans.

Helms expressed particular concern for the role of U.S. Health, Education and Welfare officials in the operations of the University of North Carolina system. He said that HEW could "never run UNC as well as (UNC President William) Friday," and noted that he had proposed legislation which would prohibit HEW from subjecting state universities to racial "quotas."

When questioned about alleged discrimination in the operation of dual programs at historically black and historically white institutions of UNC, Helms said that "where one person may see discrimination, another sees reality." Helms noted that many black citizens do not support abolishing one program as a tool of integration of the university and expressed confidence in the "good faith intent" of UNC officials to deal with the integration issue.

Answering questions after his address, Helms labelled the proposed constitutional amendment giving the District of Columbia House and Senate representation as "election year politics" and a "charade." Helms predicted that the amendment would not be ratified by the states.

Charging that the amendment had been pushed through Congress by the Democratic leadership, Helms said there had been no committee hearings on the proposal. He said that he does not "favor giving a city two senators" and suggested that if passed, the amendment would be a precedent for giving representation to other major U.S. cities.

On the subject of national defense, Helms declared that the U.S. has become "second place in most categories" to the Soviet Union, noting that the USSR will spend $25 billion dollars more than the U.S. on defense this year. Helms, who serves on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said that America "is not in the ball game . . . with the Soviet Union" as far as defense preparedness goes.

Helms expressed support for the development of the B-1 bomber, which was eliminated from the defense budget earlier this year with the support of President Carter. Helms said the B-1 would enable the U.S. to "regain . . . rough equivalency" with the Soviet defense force.

On other issues, Helms: --agreed with the concept of the Kemp-Roth tax cut bill recently defeated in Congress but said that if the government cuts taxes, it must also cut expenditures.

--said the Equal Rights Amendment is "too broad and too subject to interpretation by too many people" and said the recent ratification deadline extension was not a good decision.

--reaffirmed his position against U.S. contributions to the United Nations which are in turn funnelled to countries which harbor international terrorists.

--described Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith as a man "dedicated to his country" who realizes his past mistakes and is working with the blacks in his country to bring about majority rule. Helms met with Smith when the Rhodesian leader visited Washington recently.

Helms stated that the best part of his Senate job is the personal relationships which develop among senators, even those of different political opinions. He said that the disillusioning aspect of the Senate is the reluctance of many senators to vote their convictions because of pressure from interests groups and home-state press.

Helms also said that he will sponsor a bill if he is reelected to the Senate to limit presidents to one six-year term and Congressional terms to a total of twelve years. Helms said that there is a "danger inherent in people who want to stay in office" because their principals will be compromised for political gains.

are judging this year's staff on the performance of previous staff members.

"We have been approached by the Senate to come before them and present our case," Harris said. "Our problem with the Senate, though, is that many don't realize what it takes to run this station. When we ask for a piece of equipment they want to know why (we need it) because they don't understand what the equipment does and why it's needed."

"What we want to do the first chance we get," Harris continued, "is to give SGA officials a short synopsis of what the radio station is, why it is and why what we give them is a necessary function." Harris said that the misunderstanding between SGA and WLOZ could perhaps be clarified by taking legislators and faculty members on a tour of the station so they can see firsthand how the money is spent.

So far this year, new expenditures for WLOZ have included a new receiver to monitor their signal and facilities for the Emergency Broadcast System. The E.B.S. was put in last year, but did not function until this year.

Harris expressed concern that the public image of WLOZ has been the root of much of the problem the station now faces.

"It's just that the way the public perceives us is that we're not a broadcast station, but just somebody having fun on the air."

Harris also stated that reports of marijuana use at the station this summer had also "hurt us tremendously" with the public.

"What people don't know is that was last year's staff and we have since taken over and have been left to start over with our heads under water," Harris said.

The station is also fighting control by the F.C.C., Harris said. The station has more restrictions than other stations in the area, according to Harris.

"What we need to do is to show the people that the goof-offs and the 'club members' from last year are gone," Harris stated. "That is a ghost of the past and I wish people would bury it. We have been working hard—very hard—since the semester started."

"We've been trying to change things, trying to repair what's been done wrong, changing the programming of the station because it wasn't done right last year, and matching and meeting new F.C.C. regulations."

"If it sounds like we've been goofing off this year, it's because we've been trying to correct what was done last year and make it right. We haven't had time to start on this year; we've been at least a semester behind."

The station first operated as a closed carrier AM broadcast station. It became WCNU when the university became part of the UNC system, and was changed to WLOZ when it began FM broadcast.

WLOZ has solicited and received private donations to help in its operational costs, and this has enabled them to remodel the station this year in an effort to improve the studio design. Among the changes have been moving the outside entrance to reduce noise, rebuilding the control board and other improvement.

At present, there are 30 volunteers working for the station, ten of whom have F.C.C. broadcasting licenses.

As for the new F.C.C. requirement, Harris stated that "the writing has been on the wall for some time now."

"The F.C.C. has been telling us that 10-watt stations were going to be cut off," Harris said.

Basketball team looking ahead

by J. Dillon Bryant
Staff Writer

Lonnie Payton is gone. Denny Fields is gone. The Martin twins are gone. UNCW basketball team has gone, right? Wrong! Payton, Fields, and the Martins are gone, but UNCW basketball is back at its best. This years team promises to be the most exciting ever. At least that's what Coach Mel Gibson says.

"When you talk about Billy, Bobby, Denny, and Lonnie you talk about two-thirds of your offense, not to mention the advantages they give you on defense with their ability and experience. Together they accounted for well over 50 points a game. Replacing that scoring will be difficult."

"However, we feel after this first week of practice that we have a unique club. They're very exciting, but we won't be big and obviously it will be hard to duplicate a record like last year, particularly with the schedule we have."

"This will be a more exciting club, they're more enthusiastic, more energetic, we're getting alot more accomplished defensively than we did at the same time last year. We're real encouraged with that fact."

"We also feel that even though we lost some heights with graduation, we will be a better rebounding club," Gibson said.

When asked about who will be the team leader, Gibson noted, "Scoring wise, we don't have another Denny Fields. We are a well balanced club, and watch for a different scoring leader every night. The older players, knowing them more now, and it's so early for me to speculate on the new players, will help out immensely," says Gibson.

"Gary Copper is playing awfully good for his size," Gibson says. "He's jumping and rebounding well. Dave Wolfe inside is doing an outstanding job as our other two seniors. Ralph Peterson has a renewed vigor this year and Delaney Jones seems to want to make a good showing in his last year, so it's going to be hard to say who will do what. I think we will play more people than we did last year. We are so even that I would almost equate it to the team two years ago when we would send in a complete new backcourt. In this past year when we only had one point guard (Bobby Martin) that was giving us a good job, we just had to push Bobby beyond his limits. Now it's not like that with John Callipari being a freshman, and Barry Teyton coming in, this gives us two more people to go with John McPhawl. I can see us substituting even more, not only in the back court but in the front court."

Seahawk Sports

There is a limit of 15 players that can travel on the road. Gibson stated that the 15 would dress out at home but he would not take all 15 on the road and he wasn't sure, who or how many he would take.

"We're going to wait and determine who'll be on the traveling squad later."

UNCW faces a tough schedule, even though some of the teams have a lack of rotary. "We have a good schedule, though the names are not as notable as a Wake Forest. At home we have East Carolina who is awfully tough. The University of Maine is going to surprise some people. They are very strong. We played an upset them two years ago in what was probably our biggest game. That was our first division one win on the road. South Alabama beat UNC-Charlotte last year so you know they have to be sharp. Our biggest games on the road are South Florida, N.C. State and UNC Charlotte."

Once again, UNCW will have a short team but fast. Gibson notes that, "We are definitely going to have quickness. Our first offense will be the fast break. This was our bread and butter last year and we're going to run again this year. We're going to do a lot of combination defenses, and pressing, and we change up on our defenses. Basically we are not going to deviate from that, it is just that our club will have a different look with the new people."

"As far as our now defense goes it is early to say but I know we'll miss the steals the Martin twins gave us. We have nobody in the ballpark with the ability to do that. I'm not being pessimistic it's just that you don't come across that type of ability very often."

We've had people waiting in Denny's wings such as Danny Davis, Jimmy Denton, Chuck Verba, Ralph Peterson, Delaney Jones. There are people we have back, not counting the new people, that we feel are going to take that deficit up. Dave Wolfe is a returning starter and we feel he will increase his point total. Gary Cooper averaged seven-points a game last year and if he's under double figures this year I'll be very very disappointed. He jumps as good as anybody we play. He's doing things in practice I've never had players do before. He ducks in a crowd and that's not easy to do. He does it consistently, its not like a break away duck, he'll get it in a crowd, go up and just jam it. There is so much difference between a sophomore and a junior. You seem to mature so much, as has Gary Cooper."

Dave Wolfe played a big forward last year. This year we have Delaney Jones, Jimmy Denton, Leon McCrae, and John Haskins playing that position. We have so many combinations that I have no idea who our top ten people will be."

Finally, an optimistic Gibson notes: "We don't promise wins we want to win. What we do promise is an exciting brand of basketball. Even though we've had some exciting players to leave, there's always someone waiting to try and prove themselves."

Seahawks win in soccer

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW soccer team kept itself on the winning track by defeating East Carolina, 3-1, last Tuesday at Greenville. The win extends the Hawks season mark to 9-3.

The Hawks got going early against the Pirates. Eddie Brock scored during the opening minutes of the game to start things off. Shortly after Brock's goal, it was Gil Castilla's turn to score, giving the Hawks a 2-0 halftime advantage. Early in the second half, Castilla scored his second goal of the match on a deadball kick to account for the final Seahawk goal. ECU got their lone goal off a corner kick with two minutes remaining in the match.

Coach Lane commented that the team seemed "a little flat" in the ECU match, but he considered that normal after coming off two big wins. "The match was not as close as the 3-1 score would indicate," said Coach Lane.

This week the Seahawks face two opponents at home. UNCW entertains a tough William and Mary team this Saturday at 2:00 p.m. Although William and Mary's record hovers around .500, they have a fine team and as much skill as any team the Hawks have faced. The match should be a tough test for the Hawks. The following Tuesday, UNCW goes up against Methodist College in a 4:00 PM home match.

The possibility of a post season berth still exists for the Seahawks. Invitations are sent to four teams from the South and Mid Atlantic regions. The Hawks are in contention for post season play, according to Coach Lane but must keep winning in order to have that chance.

Three linemen key success

With the football season at the midpoint, many fans are looking forward to the conference playoffs. If the Seahawks are to be in the playoffs, they must have strong, consistent play from the team.

Billy Morris, Ken Morrow and Steve Povlos are a vital part of the Seahawk playoff hopes.

Steve Povlos hails from Fayetteville, N.C. where he attended Terry Sanford high school. In his senior year at Sanford, Steve was selected as all-conference at guard. Despite this accolade, Povlos was not considered a prospect by any of the colleges. This probably could be attributed to Povlos' 5'10", 190 lb. size.

Povlos eventually came to UNCW and upon hearing about the football program he subsequently tried out. It was not long before coached began raving about Povlos' sound fundamentals on the football field. Coach Don Corry once said that Povlos had the best fundamentals of anyone on the team. Povlos' outlook for the future is that the Seahawks can win the conference and the remaining games if they can stay healthy as a team. Povlos himself was injured and had to miss two games. Still, Steve Povlos can be proud of himself for contributing to the Seahawk program.

Unlike Steve Povlos, Kenny Morrow was a much sought after athlete in high school. Morrow went to East Burke high school in Icard, North Carolina. Morrow's football skills can be evidenced by the fact that he played spring football at Appalachian State, a Southern Conference power. At 6'4", 235 pounds, Morrow had his pick of colleges to attend. Kenny, however, chose not to play football, and opted for the environment of UNCW.

Billy Morris is certainly a main stay in the Seahawk defensive machine. Morris is the middle linebacker and defensive captain on the squad.

Morris attended Hoggard high school where he played at the linebacker and tackle positions. Morris is considered the leader on the team.

At 6'3", 215 pounds, Morris has been clocked at 4.6 in the 40 yard run. This is a most amazing statistic for a man that size. Moreover, Morris can bench press over 300 pounds. Morris was on last year's team but says there is more talent on this team. Morris is responsible for calling the defensive signals and reading the offense.

Morris lives on Wrightsville Beach where he says he enjoys the ocean and the discos.

Morris says his most memorable moment on the team was the goal-line stand against Duke.

Women's tennis is looking up

By John Justus
Sports Information Director
UNCW

The UNC-Wilmington women's tennis team, which appears on its way to a winning season for the first time in four years, has been a pleasant surprise for Coach Jane Batson.

Following last Wednesday's 6-3 win over Methodist, the Seahawk gals are 5-4 on the season with three matches remaining. Their next outing is this Thursday (Oct. 26) at Pembroke.

"This year has been a real good one for us, considering the age-level of our team," Batson says. "I'm especially pleased with the play of our two freshmen, Gigi Trilinski and Conchie Gemborys at the one and two positions. For two young girls just out of high school (Jacksonville High), they have both showed a great deal of poise and I'm very excited about what they can do for us in the future."

After 1977's less-than-lofty record of 5-10, the UNCW fortunes did not look promising, but the presence of the newcomers, along with some real improvement from the returnees, has made the difference, Batson says.

"We needed strength at the top of our lineup," the coach says, "and Gigi and Conchie have given us that."

"Of course, girls like Theresa

Reaves (#3), Brenda Kalevas (#4), Lowrey Sorensen (#5) and Carolyn Bender (#6), our only seniors, have worked very hard, too. It has required greater effort on everyone's part and we have gotten that effort this fall."

A key to the success that this year's squad has enjoyed has been the remarkable doubles play of the entire team. Kalevas and Sorensen have combined for eight straight wins at the #3 doubles, while the rookie duo of Trilinski and Gemborys have won their last five matches and seven of their last eight. Reaves and Bender's four-match win streak was snapped in the team victory over Methodist.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

As campus fall sports begin to wind down we take a look around and see that UNCW has been pretty successful.

The girls tennis team has a fine record and the number three doubles team of Brenda Kalevas and Lowrey Sorensen is undefeated through eight matches. The girls are coached by Jane Batson.

The soccer team, coached by Calvin Lane, has a winning record. Led by tri-captains Eddie Brock, Ted Kort and Gary Wade. Their season includes a victory over previously undefeated University of Maryland at Baltimore County and the championship of the Harbor Front Classic Tournament. The Seahawk soccer team is highly ranked in the South.

The girls volleyball team is in its first year under new coach Judy Peel. The volleyballers are off to a rough start but have been close in many of the games they lost and are looking forward to better times. Coach Peel has a marvelous coaching record in the past and will get things turned around soon.

The club football team come up with a large amount of talent this season, also. With a winning record through last week, the footballing Seahawks were loaded with over forty players, many capable of playing college football on a Division II or III level. Hear that, Mr. Brooks?

Two of UNCW's sister institutions clashed last weekend with North Carolina State rolling over North Carolina, 34 - 7. The gap between those two has not been so large in many years.

Keep an eye out for the Seahawk's special basketball issue coming out in November. It will guide you through the roundball season.

Paul Lupica: UNCW's Newest star

Cross Country runner is making name

by Derrick Anderson
Staff Writer

Paul Lupica is a star unknown on the UNCW campus. The reason for this is that Lupica competes in a sport unknown to most of us, cross country. Lupica has added to the cross country team a dimension that the team has never had before.

Paul Lupica has given the team a star in that he is a star runner.

Lupica was a champion runner back in his home town of Easton, Mass., where he attended Oliver Ames high school. Lupica ran track and cross country in high school. Lupica's high school track team finished tops in their League in his senior year. Lupica ran the two mile distance run on the team running an incredible 10 minute time for that distance. Lupica received letters for track but turned them down because of the lack of money for a scholarship or grant.

Lupica turned to UNCW because of its strong Marine Biology Program which Lupica is presently majoring in.

Lupica inquired about the cross country team at UNCW to which he was referred to cross country coach David (Pop) Warner. Pop Warner and Lupica corresponded over a period of months before Lupica finally arrived on the UNCW campus. Lupica did not immediately find a cross country team waiting and had to wait for the organization of this year's cross country team to take place.

The team had their first meet Saturday Oct. 14. In Paul Lupica's first cross country meet in college he finished first. Although the team finished last in a field of three, Lupica feels that the team did exceptional considering that most of its members are inexperienced. More over, Lupica says that with time his fellow teammates will get better.

His fellow teammates include Emerson Willard, Bob Skaridas, David Ross, Gene Arthur, Jeff Gober, Percy Key, Jenz Kaiser, and Jim Godwin.

Lupica works out by running 8 to 10 miles a day. Lupica runs on the baja behind the UNCW campus. He runs with Tom Correll who also ran cross country.

Lupica says he has enjoyed the south thus far. He especially likes the southern girls and the discos.

The obscurity of cross country may let Lupica's ability go unnoticed, but this does not exempt the fact that he is a true athlete

Music Series presents Fine Arts Quartet as second concert of season

The University Music Series will present the Fine Arts Quartet Thursday Nov. 2 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. This will be the second presentation of the semester by the Series. UNCW students will be admitted free with valid I.D.'s.

With the 1977-78 season, the Fine Arts Quartet marked the 22nd year of its existence. That career has taken the ensemble on tour throughout America and Canada, and since 1958 and with very few interruptions, an on annual tour abroad: to the Far East, Australia, New Zealand, and the major and lesser cities of Europe, from Jerusalem to Helsinki.

The four members of the ensemble are gifted teachers as well as performers, and have lectured, coached and conducted seminars at Northwestern University, the Cleveland Institute of Music, the Aspen School of Music, the Royal Conservatory of Copenhagen, and elsewhere. Since 1963 they have been professors and artists-in-residence at the University of Wisconsin Milwaukee.

One of America's great ensembles, the Fine Arts Quartet has been hailed by concert audiences the world over. In the United States, this quartet has been a major factor in the growing interest in chamber music. From the start, they appealed to a wide public—on radio, in recordings, and, later, on television—presenting outstanding performances of the quartet literature from Haydn to Bartok and beyond. For eight consecutive years they were heard Sunday mornings on the American Broadcasting Company network.

Leonard Sorkin, first violinist, studied at the American Conservatory, the Chicago Musical College, and with Misha Mischakoff. He is a former member of the Saitenberg Symphonette and the Chicago Symphony. He is professor at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

Abram Loft, second violinist, studied with Herbert Dittler in New York. He holds a Ph.D. in musicology from Columbia University and was formerly assistant professor of music there. He has, in addition, served on the board of the U.S. section of the International Society for Contemporary Music. He is professor at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

Bernard Zaslav, violist, a native New Yorker and graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, joined the Cleveland Orchestra at the age of 18. He soon left to pursue a varied musical career which included chamber music, solo recitals, recordings and membership in various string quartets. He is professor at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

George Sopkin, cellist, studied with Daniel Saitenberg in Chicago and with Emanuel Feuermann in Switzerland. He also attended the Chicago Musical College. Mr. Sopkin is an alumnus of the Chicago Symphony and was cellist with the Pro Arte Quartet. He is professor in the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee.

Tonight at 8 in Kenan Auditorium, the University Music Series will present violinist Ani Kavafian. Students will be admitted free with valid I.D.'s.

ENTERTAINMENT

Mother's Finest

Goodwood hours extended, beer policy explained

The Goodwood Tavern will remain open until 9:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, until Christmas and will continue after that if enough people make use of the facility.

It will still remain closed on Saturday and open from 4 p.m. until 6:30 p.m. on Sunday.

Continuing past policy, students may bring their favorite brew into the Goodwood Tavern on Fridays and Sundays from 5 p.m. until closing. The following guidelines will remain in effect:

A total of 72 ounces of beer per person per night may be brought in. This is the equivalent of a six-pack of twelve-ounce cans or bottles. Alcoholic beverages of any other kind will not be permitted.

Beer must be carried into the coffeehouse in bottles or cans. Empty cups may also be brought in or obtained from the food operator.

Beer will not be allowed in any other areas of the Student Union.

No buying or selling of beer will be permitted.

Patrons' beer may not be stored in the building.

Any patron whose behavior, in the opinion of the coffeehouse manager, is disruptive will be asked to leave immediately. A second offense will bar this individual from the coffeehouse for that semester.

Neither the food operator nor the coffeehouse may provide a cooler for patrons' beer.

Other schools in North Carolina have co-operated with the North Carolina Alcoholic Beverage Control Board in making similar arrangements for students to bring their beer into campus coffeehouses.

Mother's Finest returned by popular demand

Ask any dorm resident which group is playing on all the stereos up and down the halls and the answer would be Mother's Finest. The group established a following when it played UNCW last year. So, by popular demand, the Concert Committee will present Mother's Finest in concert in Trask Coliseum on Wednesday, Nov. 1.

The consensus of those who have witnessed the set in concert is unanimous—they are one of America's top touring bands; their level of energy and excitement is at a level coveted by many better-known ensembles; they can successfully court narrow-minded audiences to such a fervor that encores will be demanded.

Mother's Finest's strong points are multifold. There is obviously a sex appeal factor present in the demeanor of lead vocalist Joyce Kennedy; with tight pants and attractive looks, she uses these as a base. A mighty voice, projects to the very back row. In addition, the other members have a sharply honed sense of stage presence; their dancing, peripatetic poses on stage speak of unbridled enthusiasm and dynamism.

Although their albums have won scores of critical raves, most objective observers agree their live show is Mother's Finest's true calling card.

Also on the bill are Evelyn Champagne King who had a huge hit, "Shame," and a new group, Atlantic Starr, which is everyone's bet of being the next Earth, Wind and Fire.

Tickets are available at the University Bookstore at reduced student admissions; only $5.75.

Costume dance planned

The Dance Committee in conjunction with the Program Board has planned a Super Bang Weekend Halloween Costume Dance on Saturday, Oct. 28 at 8 p.m. in the Cafeteria. The disc jockey for the disco night will be "The Fast Man," Pat Paterson, who served as D.J. for the Castaways in Myrtle Beach last summer.

Mark Davis, Dance Committee chairman, stated that Paterson will have a variety of discs and will play any type by request. Costumes should be worn to the event as there will be a costume contest as well as a dance contest with prizes awarded. The price will be 50 cents a person and 75 cents a couple (couples can be mixed).

'Creature of the Black Lagoon' uses 3-D photography for effect

John Baxter of Science Fiction in the Cinema, wrote of "Creature from the Black Lagoon," that "James C. Haven's brilliant underwater photography and the miraculous mime of Ben Chapman as the Gill-Man convert the depths of the lagoon into a world of mystery as subtly beautiful as the Cocteau conceived for his fantastic creations."

This will mark the eighth movie to be presented by the Fine Arts Committee this semester.

The Creature, an amphibious, prehistoric man-monster, inhabits the primordial depths of a mysterious tropical lagoon, undisturbed until a team of scientists intrude upon his domain. Various interpretations as a monster from hell and a primitive innocent provoked to violence, the Creature belongs to a tradition of mistreated, misunderstood monsters which includes Frankenstein, King Kong and the Beast who pursued Beauty.

One of the finest films directed by science-fiction master Jack Arnold, "Creature from the Black Lagoon" is particularly notable for its sensitive handling of erotic interplay between the Gill-Man and the beautiful woman he desires.

"Creature from the Black Lagoon" was photographed and originally released in 3-D. Three-dimensional photography is based on the principle that when you look at an object, each eye sees it with a slightly different perspective and these two images combine in the mind to create a single three-dimensional whole.

"Creature from the Black Lagoon" was photographed using two cameras mounted side-by-side, their lenses just a few inches apart--like human eyes.

When "Creature" was originally released in 1954, a 3-D presentation required two projectors so that these two filmstrips could be projected simultaneously. Unless great care was exercised in perfectly synchronizing and accurately superimposing the two images on the screen, the 3-D effect was impaired, often resulting in headaches for the audience.

However, because "Creature" was photographed in black-and-white, Universal/16 has been able to process these new 16mm prints using the single strip Anaglyphic 3-D system. The original left and right filmstrips have been tinted red and blue-green, respectively, and printed on a single strip of color film which can be projected just like any other film. When a spectator looks at the colored double image on the screen through the special Anaglyphic 3-D glasses provided (which have a red lens for one eye and a blue-green lens for the other) the lenses select the proper image for each eye and the spectator sees a three-dimensional picture.

"Creature from the Black Lagoon" will be shown Tuesday, Oct. 31, at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium and is rated G. Except for those with season passes, admission will be 50 cents for students with I.D. cards and $1.00 for all non-students.

3-D lenses will be provided free of charge to the first 600 paid admissions.

Magic revue features Del Ray

The fabulous Del Ray, along with several other outstanding magicians, will star in a gigantic stage show, "Stars of Magic Revue", Saturday, Oct. 28, in Kenan Auditorium.

Curtain time is 7:30 p.m. for this extravaganza, and it promises fun, mystery and excitement for everyone, according to the show's sponsors.

Del Ray is an outstanding performer from the cabaret and nite club circuits of Las Vegas. He will be joined by "Carlos", whose coin and card manipulations have astounded audiences everywhere.

The grandeur of stage illusions will be presented by Mike Phillips and Tricia from Asheville, N.C., along with some expert manipulation of conjuror Ron Conley of Myrtle Beach, and the comedy antics of Raleigh's George Vaughn.

The show is sponsored by the Lower Cape Fear Council for the Arts in cooperation with the Coastal Carolina Conjurers International Brotherhood of Magicians-Ring 248.

Tickets for this performance are available at Belk's, McGraths, Dolphin Bookstore, the Community Arts Center and Record World.

Anniversary Celebration

Wet Willie gets high rating, Outlaws fall short of expectations

Having been postponed for about two weeks as a result of illness in the Outlaws band, the second concert of the season was about to get under way. Scheduled for the initial appearance, Le Roux was unable to attend the delayed performance and Paul Davis ("Sweet Little" was to take the second billing spot. Davis cancelled his performance which left two Southern bands, Wet Willie and the headliners, Outlaws.

When the lights went down, a hush of anticipation fell over the audience as Wet Willie appeared on stage. Soon the music was getting into the music of one of the best groups around. On a scale of one to ten, I would rate Wet Willie as a 9. There might be one group around that's better. Since their appearance with Fenton last year, Wet Willie has apparently come a long way.

Wet Willie ran the gambit of their music from "Mama It's a Shame on You" released on their first disc to their new single, "Don't Turn Me Away," which featured an impressive piano solo.

Other songs performed by Wet Willie were "Make You Feel Love Again" and "Dixie Rock" which showed their country style of life and their roots.

After their closing number,

"Keep on Smilin,'" Wet Willie left the stage but not for long. Returning for an encore, the group performed their most impressive piece. With lead singer Jimmy Hall, the songs dramatic fade, along with lights to make the climax, added the icing to the cake after performing for about 55 minutes.

Now came the time for the headliners, Outlaws with Wilmington's own Harvey Arnold. One by one Outlaw appeared on stage and began to perform the hit "Hurricane Sundown." Outlaws is definitely not the one band better than Wet Willie.

With their "Sundown Skull" as a backdrop behind them, Outlaws began to jam with cuts from Hurricane Sundown.

Cuts from the recent live album Bring them Back Alive were performed including "Free Born Man" sung by Harvey. "I Hope You Don't Mind" was impressive only because of the way the lights worked with the performers, and their famous "There Goes Another Love Song."

This was Outlaws' show--running about 28 minutes. They went off only to return for the encore with their Bring it Back Alive backdrop. The band's encore was "Green Grass and High Tides" which ran only 7 minutes short of their original jam. True, Outlaw fans crowded the stage as the group's guitar sounds seemed to outdo the others. Others in the audience became bored with the "music and began to leave."

If I had heard the two groups separately before the concert, I would have bought the ticket only to see and hear Wet Willie, but sometimes you have to take the good with the bad.

Scenes of the Outlaws

Woody Allen's 'Interiors' literary achievement, visual expression

It is a difficult task to evaluate Woody Allen's newest endeavor, "Interiors," with anything less than overwhelming respect. It stands out as an artistic accomplishment for two reasons. The script, written by Allen, is in itself a literary achievement comparable by sheer depth of emotion to Eugene O'Neill's play about family turmoil, "A Long Day's Journey into Night." Yet, on the other hand, "Interiors" shows Allen to be a film director with a unique capability for visual expression as well.

The cinematography is just as responsible for creating the mood in this movie as is the script. This is primarily due to the talents of Allen's director of photography, Gordon Willis, whose previous work includes "The Godfather" (parts one and two); "Kluge," and "Annie Hall." Willis has captured on film the somber, desolate landscape which becomes symbolic of the emotions of the characters in the movie. Watching "Interiors" is like seeing many still-life studies by Andrew Wyeth; the agonizing perfection and bleakness in detail conveys an alarming sense of isolation.

But isolation, and how it effects an upper-middle class family, seems to be the focus of this movie. The mother (Geraldine Page) is a self-absorbed interior decorator who is mentally distraught over a "trial separation" with her husband. Geraldine Page affects an annoying doe-like vulnerability which is doubly irritating when combined with her chronic urges for compulsive interior decorating. It is as if she believes that she can resolve her own inner disorder at being rejected by her husband by setting everything around her in order. But she can not resolve her pain and while her neuroses grow, so isolates herself from reality. Yet her lines belie her inner state with unyielding clarity. She says, during one of her compulsive decorative moments, "Wouldn't paler tones make a more subtle statement?" We see her whole appearance as being cloaked in pale tones.

Her husband (E. G. Marshall), on the other hand, is the one attempting to extricate himself from the sterile world of his wife. He leaves her realm of "pale blues and earth tones" for the outstretched arms of a colorful and gregarious woman, Pearl (Maureen Stapleton). But all of this, the separation and the mother's growing lack of sanity, effects the lives of their three daughters.

Renata (Diane Keaton), a poetess, cannot handle the strain of a suicidal mother and retreats to rural Connecticut under the pretense of poetic seclusion. It is there she begins to discover a part of herself that she has always remained isolated from. She becomes prone to bouts of depression caused by the impending reality of her own mortality. She says, "The real implication of dying, I can't seem to shake it. The intimacy of it embarrasses me." Well, any kind of intimacy seems to bother this family and we can see it illustrated clearly in Renata's sister Joey (Marybeth Jurt). Joey is bitter on two accounts: she must handle their mother's more bizarre moments, as Renata is in seclusion and the other sister, Flynn (Kristin Griffith), is in L.A. shooting a film, and Joey is jealous of Renata's success as a poet. She feels as if she could have been an artist, but now it is too late. Renata says of Joey, "She has all the anguish and anxiety of the artist, but no talent."

Their mother is eventually successful in a suicide attempt, after her husband remarries. One might think that with the death of the mother many of the problems would be resolved, yet they are not.

Marybeth's resentment will not end with the death of her mother, nor will Renata learn to face her problems without a cloak of intellectualism.

"Interiors" is a complete reversal from Allen's previous films which abound with a unique humor that has become synonymous with the name Woody Allen. But this complete reversal is a testimony to the versatility of Allen as an artist. "Annie Hall" showed us how sensitive he can be when dealing with emotions that can be poignant, yet funny, at the same time. But with "Interiors," he takes a great step as he covers human pain and conflicts without humor. Of course, it is obvious the strong influence Swedish director Ingmar Bergman has had on Allen. The bare, cheerless tone of "Interiors" can only be matched by Bergman's chilly Scandinavian touch.

Friends of Animals contest

A national essay contest, focusing on the use of animals in research and education programs, has been announced by Alice Herrington, president of Friends of Animals, Inc. (FOA). The best essay will receive a first prize of $2,000. There will be three awards of second prizes of $1,000 each and six awards of third prizes in the amount of $500 each.

The question for this year's contest is: "Why should the Congress end funding of research and education programs that involve the use of animals and divert these funds to alternative methods?"

The contest is aimed at encouraging American students to help in the development of a new ethic for the treatment of non-human animals. Now in its second year, the competition is made possible through a grant from Regina Bauer Frankenberg, a director and vice-president of the national animal welfare organization.

"My purpose in funding the contest is to encourage interest in this new ethic," said Frankenberg. "The past decade has witnessed strides in popular consciousness of the need for animal protection legislation. I want to add to this progress."

In announcing the contest, Herrington said, "Humans have used animals for their own purposes for thousands of years. As a result of ignorance and economic self-interest, we have developed rather deep-seated attitudes about our relationship to other species."

Yes emphasizes rock in new album

In celebration of their tenth anniversary, Yes has released their eleventh album, Turn of Mind. Turn of Mind is more along the lines of the group's first release in 1972, Fragile, than Gone with the Wind released last year after about a 2 1/2 year absence from the charts.

Turn of Mind's songs are shorter (some actually only 4 minutes) and have a more updated tempo as rock is emphasized and is more impressive than ever.

Recorded in London, the LP was produced by the members of Yes who are Jon Anderson (vocals, guitar), Steve Howe (guitar), Chris Squire (bass guitar), Rick Wakeman (keyboards) and Alan White (drums).

When Jon Anderson and Chris Squire first formed Yes, no one would have guessed that their style and the concept of music and synthesizers would have turned out a form of music unto itself.

The LP contains two songs in which messages are revealed. Indirectly, the first cut of the disc, which was written by the entire group, "Future Times," warns that metal and steel will overtake us and there will only be a "course of innocence."

A more direct message is revealed in "Don't Kill the Whale"—the "last heaven beast" who has died in dignity.

"Rejoice" is nothing more than a celebration for the times of Yes. They have rejoiced since they have lasted through changes.

"Madrigal" is a ballad with the colonial style of the times when the groups were formed. Wakeman plays a harpsichord which was also used in the era. This is the shortest cut just at four minutes.

"Release, Release" tells you if you have pressure and lack concentration, release yourself. This is the rocker on the LP, containing a great drum solo by Alan White.

"Arriving UFO" tells that all should be linked together and forces are coming from outer space to help out. The effect of the craft landing is synthesized on the album and has a great effect. The craft seems to land and crashes which shows help still isn't here.

"Circus of Heaven" is about a man and his son who are waiting for the parade to arrive in town with the members. Other than a unicorn no one appears but the Seventh Lord. As in heaven, the Seventh Lord can show scenes from the past. Jon Anderson's son, Damion, says at the end of the song that he thought the circus was OK but he wanted to see animals and "There Was No Clowns."

"Onward" describes how love will keep him going "onward through the night" through to the next day.

The final cut on the disc is "On The Silent Wings Of Freedom." This song has a jazzy tempo and shows all are free to do what hits them.

As Yes concludes their first decade as one of the most impressive groups to emerge on the music scene, Happy Anniversary.

Applications available for study abroad in Scandinavia

Scandinavian Seminar is now accepting applications for its study abroad program in Denmark, Finland, Norway or Sweden for the academic year 1979-80. This living-and-learning experience is designed for college students, graduates and other adults who want to become part of another culture while acquiring a second language.

An initial three-weeks language course, followed by a family stay whenever possible, will give the student opportunity to practice the language on a daily basis and to share in the life of the community. For the major part of the year the student is separated from fellow American students, living and studying among Scandinavians at a "People's College" (residential school for continuing adult education) or some other specialized institution.

All Seminar students participate in the introductory, midyear and final sessions, where matters related to their studies, experiences and individual progress are reviewed and discussed. The focus of the Scandinavian Seminar program is an independent study project in the student's own field of interest. An increasing number of American colleges and universities are giving full or partial credit for the seminar year.

The fee, covering tuition, room, board and all course-connected travels in Scandinavia, is $4,600. For further information please write to: Scandinavian Seminars, 100 East 85th Street, New York, NY 10028.

Two dorms won't be coed

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Two of the university's four residence halls will be designated as single-sex dormitories beginning this fall, Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy announced this week. While Galloway Hall and the new dorm will be coed facilities, Belk Hall will be reserved for women and Hewlett Hall, for men.

Malloy said that the change would be a "big switch" for UNCW, which is currently the only school in the UNC system that does not offer a choice between coed and single-sex housing on campus.

Malloy said that although the coed policy has been "very successful," the rapid growth of campus housing facilities now makes it feasible to offer the choice. "Over the years we have had requests for housing from parents (of students) who want (us) to provide a choice," Malloy said.

He added that some freshmen applicants may have decided to go elsewhere because single-sex residence halls are not offered here.

Malloy said that the change has been "coming on for a while" and was an "administrative decision" which involved university housing officials, the deans of students and business administrators.

With the completion of the fourth residence hall this summer, the university will have a housing capacity of 1000 students. Galloway houses 400 students while others hold 200 each.

Housing Director Charlie King described the alternatives as a good move because it "gives people a choice they never had before."

Both Malloy and King said that several students have previously asked why the choice is not made available.

"I would be surprised if students do not like this change," King Added.

As last year, dorm spaces will be reserved for incoming freshmen due to the growing number of the freshman class. This year, 550 spaces will be set aside for freshmen. It is expected that 400 spaces will be needed for returning residents and 50 for transfer students next fall.

The 550 spaces for freshmen will allow the university to house more than half of the expected freshmen enrollment next year, a fact that Malloy was particularly pleased with. Malloy said that the lack of dorm space had hurt recruiting efforts in the past.

According to King, few if any students who wish to return to the dormitories will be turned away because of the reserve of spaces for freshmen. This year, 348 students returned to the dorm from last year and none were turned away.

Malloy said that the effects of a growing on-campus student population during the last several years have shown up in financial aid applications, part-time campus employment and individual student problems encountered by his office. Traffic has also been a problem, he said. The dormitory complex, Malloy said, has become a "small city" with "small city problems."

Malloy said that the plans for future housing beyond the 1000-person capacity are "up in the air" at the present because there are so many options available.

One possibility is building on-campus apartments. Students would pay rent and utilities and have a private entrance, similar to facilities at UNC-Charlotte.

Malloy said there has been an "on-campus trend" in recent years with students who have moved off campus seeking to return to the dorms. Currently, there are 406 men and 389 women living on campus.

The Coneheads (and a friend) dropped by UNCW Saturday night to attend the Halloween costume dance sponsored by the SGA Dance Committee. Approximately 300 persons are reported to have attended the event.

Reader's theatre set

In his lecture "On Three Ways of Writing for Children" in 1952, C. S. Lewis is quoted to have said, "I am almost inclined to set it up as a canon that a children's story which is enjoyed only by children is a bad children's story. The good ones last." In the same lecture he said "where the children's story is simply the right form for what the author has to say, then of course readers who want to hear that, will read the story, or re-read it, at any age. I never read The Wind in the Willows or the Bastable books till I was in my late twenties, and I do not think that I have enjoyed them any the less on that account."

Lewis himself wrote seven excellent children's stories which are collectively called the Chronicles of Narnia. On Nov. 3-4, at 8 p.m. in the SRO Theater, the first of these stories will be presented in a Reader's Theatre. "The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe" doesn't start out "Once upon a time . . ." and it doesn't end "happily ever after." It isn't a fairy tale, it is a fantasy. All students will be admitted free.

Catherine Bell wins first place in 1978 University Poetry Contest

Catherine A. Bell won first place and $50 in the 1978 University Poetry Contest for her poem entitled "Uncle Albert." The contest awards were presented Oct. 26 at 11:30 a.m. in the SRO Theater. Trena P. Gourley received second place and $30 for "Insentience." Third place and $20 went to Becky Owens for "On Wearing Glasses Again."

Honorar mentions and $5

each were awarded to Dorothy Hall for "The Comedian" and Deborah Mansy for "The Old Cellar Door."

The awards were presented by James R. Pridemore, Vice-president of the Lower Cape Fear Council for the Arts. Anne Fitzgibbon of the UNCW Department of Drama read the five winning poems.

Judges for the contest were Eugene Huguélet, director of library services at UNCW, and Carol Ellis and Lillian Brannon both faculty members in the UNCW Department of English, which sponsored the contest.

The North Carolina Junior Sorosis financed the contest and provided the reception for the contestants and guests. The contest is an annual event.

Host for the program was Richard D. Long, English Club president and editor-in-chief of Atlantis, the UNCW literary magazine.

Editorial policy is to separate opinions from facts

The following article was first printed in the October 5, 1977, issue of the Seahawk as a statement of editorial policy. It is reprinted here in response to some questions which have been raised this year about our policy, which continues to be essentially the same.

THIS NEWSPAPER'S OPINION

Question after question has arisen this year as to just how strong a role the Seahawk (or any student newspaper) should assume on campus with its editorial comments. In our opinion, this role should be as strong as deemed necessary by the editor and staff, with the decision based on the particular issue concerned and a judgment of what the effects of the editorial would be.

Well-directed editorials can provide the incentive for students to investigate and find out for themselves what the specifics of a certain story are. More importantly, they will serve as commentary and analysis that could never be achieved in regular news stories.

The Seahawk maintains high regard for the separation of editorial opinion and reportorial facts. That's why you will never read—and have not this year—a biased news story within our pages. We have no trouble separating editorial opinions from straight news reporting; our readers should not either.

It has been suggested that editorials which appear in the Seahawk be signed by the author. To a professional journalist, such a suggestion would be an insult since the opinion would then become that of one staff member and not the newspaper as a whole. We, also, are insulted by the suggestion.

To be certain, the editorials are written by only one person, usually the Editor. But in theory—and in practice—the Seahawk's editorials receive feedback from several members of the staff before they are published, and appropriate changes are made through group consultation. Thus, the opinions expressed become a joint effort by staff members, though every staff member does not necessarily agree with any particular portion of the editorial.

Our editorial page will continue to be strongly opinionated. We will not accept the censorship of student government, administration, or faculty in regard to our editorial policy. No one from either of these three entities has ever attempted to censor our paper before and we do not seriously expect them to now.

At the same time, we pledge to the student body that we will exercise responsible judgment in regard to our editorials. We invite letters to the editor when you agree or disagree with our position.

Editorials are a very important part of this and all newspapers. It is vital that we retain editorial freedom if we are to fulfill our obligations to this university and its students. With that in mind, we ask for your respect; we hope—and believe—that we have earned it.

The Editorial Board of the Seahawk was established at the beginning of this semester with the purpose of providing a general direction for the newspaper in all areas. The board is the major forum for establishing general editorial policy and particular editorial opinions. The Editor, as chair of the Editorial Board, retains final authority in specific editorial opinions. Other members of the board are the Associate Editor, Sports Editor, Chief Photographer, Advertising Manager, Features Editor, and an at large representative of the staff. These operating policies, as well as all other policies of the Seahawk, are included in the Seahawk Operations Manual, a copy of which is available upon request in the Seahawk office to any member of the university community.

Dean's List changes said 'invalid'

To the Editor:

In regard to the editorial of October 4, "Dean's List changes deny opportunity for many full-time students," and in response to Faculty Senator Dr. Haskell V. Hart's replying letter of October 11, let me appeal to both the Student Senate and Faculty Senate. Will you not take a more responsible and firm stand for the students? I confess, many of us are apathetic, but remember "two wrongs don't make a right" and in this case they've made a mess! For in your allowing the Dean's List changes to be made for you rather than by you, you have given up your rights and neglected your duties and your student body.

Specifically, with regard to Senator Hart's letter, his mention that the requirements were not voted on according to the Faculty Governance Document indicates that the adoption of these changes is invalid. Will the faculty not demand the role in this decision they are entitled to and that they are accountable for?

Concerning Dr. Hart's comment that students which "lighten their load have other rewards," I agree. Therefore, I welcome the 15 hour requirement. However, in regard to the "no C" stipulation I must say it would make Dean's List totally misrepresentative—for instance: a student earning 15 hours credit with four B's and one A (3.2) will obtain Dean's List standing, whereas a student with four A's and one C (3.6) will not make it! How can anyone say that an 80 percent "excellent," 20 percent "average" student is not as deserving of Dean's List ranking as an 80 percent "good," 20 percent "excellent" student? Are students who are for the most part excelling to be punished for obtaining one "average" standing while other students who are excelling to a lesser extent are rewarded? This should make it clear that the "nothing below a B" requirement will be grossly misleading. This stipulation will also have severe and lasting side-effects such as grade inflation and encouraging students to choose easier courses when possible. Obviously, this is not a good way to promote academic excellence, which along with recognition of acaademic achievers is an aim of a Dean's List.

Also, may I point out that some UNC schools have merely one requirement (a 3.5 grade point). This allows for fairness without results incurred by our "bottom-grade" stipulation. Surely, UNCW can come to a compromise which will make Dean's List standing an honor while being fair and truly representative of the percentage of excelling students.

We can make Dean's List more of an incentive towards high academic achievement without making it something which would impose great pressure upon the students and lead to less than honorable practices! We can establish high academic standards without depriving deserving students of recognition while rewarding less deserving students. Let's do it!

How? Perhaps the following requirements would be a fair compromise and certainly more indicative of the percentage of high academic achievers at UNCW:

A minimum requirement of 15 hours, a grade point of 3.4, and a "nothing below C" grade requirement would this not be fairer for all concerned than the present guidelines which deny just recognition to excelling students.

Problems arise with Las Vegas night

To the Editor:

Last Wednesday I attended the Las Vegas night at the cafeteria. I must say that Ronny Dove and his band were very good; in fact, much better than I had anticipated. Phil Welsh did a fine job, not only by obtaining Ronnie Dove, but also in the food preparation. Dinner was commendable. In all, the evening was very enjoyable; however, there were several problems which detracted from the evening as a whole.

The first is somewhat minor, but needs to be addressed.

The menu program listed those campus organizations that sponsored Las Vegas night, but somehow, the SGA, who gave half of the money for Ronnie Dove, was not even mentioned as having helped in the enjoyable evening. I realize that the RA's not only helped pay for Ronnie Dove, but also helped in the entire program. They deserve to be highly commended for their efforts; however, neither should the SGA be left out altogether.

The second problem stems from the fact that the SGA did use student fees to help defray the cost of Ronnie Dove's appearance. In using student fees, all students attending the Las Vegas night should be treated equally. If I were to eat dinner on any other night, it would cost me, as a non-meal ticket student at UNCW, $2.50 for a special menu meal. When I went to pay to see Ronnie Dove's third show (the one reserved for non-meal ticket students, staff, faculty and guests), I was told that being a student had no bearing on the cost of the show and meal, and had to pay $3.50! Not only is this an outrageous sum to pay (especially when considering that part of my fees also paid for Ronnie Dove's appearance) but it was also much more than the cost of a special menu meal, by $1.00.

A couple of weeks ago, the Student Legislature had questioned Phil Welsh in respect to the reproduced sheet stating that there may not be a third show if there weren't 250 advance reservations. This was dismissed by Phil Welsh as a "PR gimmick" to make more people come and also "because that's the way it was done before (at UNC-C). Now, on the evening of Las Vegas night, $1.00 extra is charged to fee-paying students attending the third show! I paid the money at the door because I wanted to see, for myself, what we were spending $750 of student fee money for and I was not disappointed. But the lack of regard to non-meal ticket students by Phil Welsh is deplorable. Phil Welsh should answer to someone for his very basic disregard to fee-paying students. Also, the extra monies collected should not only be accounted for, but also needs an explanation as to why it was charged in the first place.

Dean's List changes unfair

To the Editor:

In reply to Haskell Hart's letter to the editor (October 11, Seahawk), I must take exception to his exception to the Seahawk's editorial on the Dean's List requirements. He argues that it is unfair to treat a student taking 15 hours and 12 hours a semester equally since the latter would take a year longer to accomplish the same task. Further mathematics will show that a student taking 14 hours each semester and only four summer courses in total could graduate with a 4.0, never make the Dean's List and watch a fellow student average 3.2 and make the Dean's List eight times! All in the same time frame which shows the basic fallacy in the new requirements—that students are robbed of the opportunity to receive the honor.

As the Seahawk editorial pointed out, honors students are deprived by undertaking advanced studies. Their hours-in-progress are not graded until the following semester when the project is reviewed. So again our same student in the above decides that instead of summer school, he or she will take 17 hours including honors work. The 4.0 earned on the 14 hours that are graded is ignored by the academic dean because the computer only kicks out grades with a 3.2 and 15 hours.

As Dr. Hart pointed out there are "other rewards" for these students. Our unaverage student depicted will receive a Summa Cum Laude degree, "With Honors in," much more important than the Dean's List. But it is not logical to not recognize a superior student solely because other activities have caused him to miss the stiff requirements by one hour. I'm sure the majority of the faculty would be sore to miss a "Teacher of the Year" award solely because he/she was required to attend every faculty meeting and attendance at other important activities caused him to lose out on a $4000 bonus that was also awarded.

Dr. Hart's idea of two different Dean's Lists is interesting.

Why not add new requirements—a 3.4 or higher for students taking from 12 to 15 hours with equality on the List—no second class status. I would also like to suggest that items of high student interest be submitted to the Student Legislature for its comments and suggestions so as to gain further student input. Certainly a long-standing institution as the Dean's List should not be railroaded through the Faculty Senate again. They could have reviewed it this fall and implemented it in the spring.

Halloween dance was a great time

To the Editor:

If you missed the Halloween dance in the cafeteria Saturday night, well, too bad, because you missed a great time. Barring any incidents unknown to me, this was the best dance I have yet to attend at UNCW. Beer was served, music was played and students had a great time with few, if any, major problems. I would like to commend Mark Davis and his dance committee, the head RA's, Jon Green, and all other people involved for an excellent job. Hopefully, you will continue the good work.

Campus Chuckles: Diary of an addiction

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

It's 11:30 on a Saturday night: where are you? If you are like millions of other slightly loopy tv-ers, you're planted firmly in front of the tube waiting for the "Saturday Night Live" gang. In the presence of Jane Curtin and John Belushi, the old gray matter takes a holiday and an entire nation is transformed into a bunch of late-night loonies.

I don't like SNL, I live for it! No matter what I'm doing, when Saturday night rolls around I practically bust my bananas trying to get home in time to catch Dan Ackroyd's sneer. But sometimes...I just don't make it. Take last month for instance, when I foolishly made plans that didn't include the Coneheads. After all, I assured my foolish self, "Saturday Night Live" was a weekly occurrence. Surely I could miss it just this once, without any harmful side effects.

At first, I have to admit I was having a great time, dancing my cares away in the company of good friends. I never even noticed the passing time, until some clod looked at his watch and blared, "Well, well, almost time for Baba Wawa and friends!" I immediately began experiencing withdrawal symptoms (you know how your teeth begin to grind and your armpits get kinda sticky...?) but I shrugged them off and returned to the business of having a good time.

It was no use. My hands began to tremble and I began trotting in demented little circles on the dance floor (three guys asked me to teach them that step). My friends seemed to notice nothing amiss until I began frothing at the mouth, muttering "What is this? Does this stuff come outta me?" (For all you uninitiated folks, that's a Roseanne Rosannadanna original laff-line.)

At last, when my sanity seemed at stake, I made a beeline for the nearest automobile which just happened to be the right one, and I made it home in record time (sobbing all the way). My hair was standing on end as I fumbled the key into the lock and kicked the door open.

Was I too late? Had hysterical history already been made? I twisted frenziedly at the volume knob; it came off in my hand. I was preparing to go into convulsions when I heard the opening insults that marked the beginning of "Weekend Update." Instant relief! I collapsed into the nearest chair and calmed myself with a double handful of potato chips. Once again, my life had meaning. I settled back happily and enjoyed the antics of the Not Ready For Prime Time Players...and Roseanne Rosannadanna...

Program budget of over $20,000 approved by Legislature Thursday

by Bobby Parker

A program budget totalling more than $20,000 was approved by the Student Legislature at its regular meeting last week. In approving the budget, the Legislature adopted the recommendations of the SGA Finance Committee without alteration.

SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan presented the Finance Committee's recommendations for each individual program committee. In all cases, the recommendation was less than the amount requested by program officials.

The Dance Committee was allocated $36.36. The original request was for $8000, but finance officials recommended cutting expenses for publicity and in other areas.

The Concert Committee had submitted a request for $15,000 which would have included the purchase of four spotlights, but the Legislature struck the lights from the budget and approved $2600. Funds for publicity ($500) were also eliminated.

A budget of $485 was approved for the Coffeehouse Committee. Program Committee Chair Cindy Cole had recommended $3000, but Coffeehouse Chair Larry Hulet requested only $610.

The Lecture Committee was appropriated $3000 with the stipulation of presenting four lectures during the year. The original request was $6000, but the Finance Committee recommended cutting $3000 proposed for a lecture by author and actress Maya Angelou.

A reallocation of $9722 was made to the Fine Arts Committee in addition to $3000 already approved.

The final budget request for programming came from the Homecoming Committee for $2000. The Legislature encumbered $1500 for homecoming as recommended by the Finance Committee until more definite plans are made by this committee.

There was little or no debate within the Legislature on each budget, and most recommendations passed without opposition.

A final recommendation from the Finance Committee was to allocate $501 to the pom-pom squad, which was approved by a 20-8 vote of the Legislature. The squad had requested $671, but the Finance Committee recommended cuts in "miscellaneous" expenses.

Vice-president Francis DeLuca outlined a new procedure for organizations which need to bring business before the Legislature. Among the changes made, groups can now notify the SGA office that they intend to go before the Legislature and receive preferential treatment in the order of business.

DeLuca also suggested that the SGA adopt operating rules for its committees.

Junior Vice-president Jack Allen moved that all matters pertaining to money be automatically referred to the Finance Committee, but the motion was defeated. Opponents argued that matters must be referred to the committee by the Legislature on an individual basis.

Allen said that his procedure would be time-saving, but others noted that the Finance Committee does not even meet unless a request has been referred to it by the Legislature.

Representative Jon Fail introduced a motion to require that all contracts made by SGA-funded groups be countersigned by the SGA president or treasurer. Fail noted that a contract had been signed this summer by WLOZ program officials for programs which ran counter to SGA stipulations at the time that funds were approved for the station. The motion was passed.

Representatives of a business seminar group which is working with WLOZ as a consulting agency for operational matters reported on their progress to the Legislature. Maurice Smith, a member of the group, said that six students are working on the project under the direction of Dr. Steve Harper of the Business Department.

Smith explained that the group is directed into three sections: internal operations (personnel), financial affairs and marketing. He said that a marketing survey had just been completed which asked questions about listening habits, program preferences and other subjects from a random sample of people in the area.

In other Legislature action: Junior Vice-president Allen was appointed chair of a committee to investigate the feasibility and implementation of a dorm council. The council, which originated with Allen, would serve as a hearing board in case of termination or suspension of dorm contracts by university officials.

-An allocation of $154 was made to cover the cost of renting a car for students attending a student rights conference in New Orleans last weekend. A motion was also passed requiring the students to submit a formal report on the meeting.

-A resolution calling for refurnishing the cafeteria with clocks was passed.

-Charters for the pom-pom squad and Earth Science Club were approved.

-Representative John Wiley was appointed to serve on a committee making plans for a new student union.

-A resolution was passed to recommend to the Board of Trustees that the new classroom building be named for broadcast journalist David Brinkley.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in C-218.

'Blue Collar:' Union blues

The exploitation of the working man by corrupt and economically insatiable company bosses is a topic potentially charged with violent bitterness. One of the first great films to handle the oppression of the working man was director-writer Elia Kazan's classic, "On the Waterfront." In this movie, Kazan traced the beginnings of organized labor amid the more established and weighty hand of organized crime. Marlon Brando is perhaps best remembered in this movie as he bands together the longshoremen in New York City for the first "strike" against big bosses. But the real accomplishment of "On the Waterfront" is the effective way Kazan immerses us in the world of the dock worker: the world in which men move like machines through the dreary warehouses of the Brooklyn waterfront.

"Blue Collar" does for the auto industry what "On the Waterfront" did for the longshoremen. This time the union, organized to protect the working man, is the villain, usurping money and spirit from the workers in a Detroit auto plant. Paul Schrader, who wrote and directed this movie, exercises a steady control which even Elia Kazan might envy. The dialogue between the stars, Richard Pryor, Yaphet Kotto and Harvey Keitel, is astoundingly authentic, yet worked with an unusual sensitivity to the men and their environment.

Bobby Byrne, the director of photography, displays and eye for realism as he takes us inside the auto plant and reveals with a creative-documentary style the horrible machinery that takes over the lives of the workers.

Even the music, by Tom Nitzsche, is a kind of dragged-out Detroit blues: it reverberates in one's ears, competing with the pounding of machinery, and sets the scene for a tale of exploitation and corruption in one of America's largest industries.

The plot involves a trio of frustrated factory workers. Zeke Brown (Richard Pryor) is a man with seven years on the assembly line who wants little of the union (AAW, Local 291) except that they fix his loco, which has gone unfixed for six months. Pryor makes barely enough to support his wife and three kids and must alter his tax returns to get that necessary extra money. There is an amusing-desperate scene when the IRS man comes to see Pryor about claiming six children on his tax form. Pryor has his wife dress the children in different clothes in the hope that the IRS man won't know the difference.

Smokey James (Yaphet Kotto), the plant utilities man, plays Pryor's ex-con buddy who exudes a streetwise knowledge and proves to be the brains of the union scam to come. Jerry Bartowski (Harvey Keitel) is the work-weary, yet steadier, influence of the three. He holds two jobs to support his good Catholic wife and children, one of whom needs braces badly.

But Jerry doesn't have the money. Says Jerry: "Better off if I didn't work at all, then I could at least get government welfare."

During a routine-breaking, orgasmic cocaine party sponsored by Smokey (the only unmarried one of the trio), we get a glimpse of the inner desperation harbored by the men. Jerry says, "Every time I get coked-up like this I think I'm never going to go back to the plant." They decide to rob the union headquarters and thus solve their money problems and their feelings of being only pawns in the hands of the union, particularly a tough, arrogant union official, Eddie "Knuckles" Johnson (Harry Belafonte). They rob the safe, wearing Halloween masks as disguises, but there is no money kept in the office. Instead, they find themselves in possession of a pay-off book, listing in detail union pay-offs and loans at rates of interest that make loan sharks look like Household Finance. In a typical union cover-up, Eddie "Knuckles" claims over ten thousand was stolen from the safe. Zeke, Smokey, and Jerry see this as an opportunity for blackmail: the union gets back its inerminating book, and the three get the insurance money. They say, "It's not robbery, it's getting back."

But they get in deeper than they can handle. The blackmail scheme fails because of an informer and the trio must now pay their union dues. Zeke is bought by the union for a chance to get off the line and become a union representative. Jerry refuses to be bought and lives in fear of union retribution on him and his family. In the end, Keitel and Pryor are pitted against one another, fulfilling the prophetic words of their mutual friend, Smokey, who said of the union, "They pit the lifers against the new-boys, the old against the young, and the black against the white, just to keep you on the line."

Richard Pryor is outstanding in this dramatic role; from the lighthearted naivete at the beginning to the more ironic naive heshows in being bought by the union. Yaphet Kotto has an interesting Poitieresque quality, but more boyish and unrefined in his big, lumbering movements. Keitel, who one might recognize as the explosive boyfriend in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore," or the character Speed in "Mother, Jugs and Speed," contrasts Pryor's innocence and Kotto's affability with a muscular toughness and a surprising heroic effort at the end.

Where "On the Waterfront" showed men need a union to protect the working man, "Blue Collar" shows man needs a union to protect one from the union.

"Blue Collar" is now showing at the Long Leaf Cinema.

Sorority growing on campus

Why do you see girls around campus wearing pins on their sweaters? They're pledging to Delta Zeta, a sorority that is now being organized here on campus.

Delta Zeta's devotes much of their time and effort to helping wherever there is a need. This sorority has been successful since 1902. The purpose of a sorority is to unite members in sincere and lasting friendship. It also helps each member in the pursuit of knowledge, to promote cultures for its members and to develop plans for guidance and unity in action.

Delta Zeta was founded at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio. In past years the number of college chapters has grown to 175 with a number of colonies preparing for installation (UNCW makes 176). Delta Zeta has over 300 alumnae chapters and in June 1977 total individual membership was over 89,000.

Delta Zeta has the largest number of chapters and is ranked overall as the number two sorority in the country. Delta Zeta recently had their Diamond Jubilee celebrating 75 years since their founding.

In North Carolina Delta Zeta now has 7 chapters: East Carolina University, Appalachain, Atlantic Christian, Lenior-Rhyne, UNC-Charlotte, Western Carolina and UNC-Wilmington.

Delta Zeta has maintained a philanthropic program which is directed toward help for the hearing impaired. Delta Zeta has worked closely with gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., the only college in the world that is devoted to the instruction and training of young deaf people.

The basic principle of the sorority's founding is friendship its members state. In this friendship there is a great variety of shared and goals.

Delta Zeta colors are rose and green; the flower is the pink Killarney rose. The sorority emblem is the Roman Lamp; the official jewel is the diamond. UNCW pledges have chosen Xi Theta as the colony name. They are presently working on a banner and t-shirts.

If anyone is interested in joining you can go by Linda Moore's office, located in the Pub, and set up an appointment with Debbie Raziana, the sorority representative. Or go talk to someone who is already a member to find out what a sorority is all about, call Ann Marlowe at 791-9366.

Legislative procedures outlined, SGA actions for year reviewed by Francis DeLuca

SGA Vice-president

There have arisen lately a few problems concerning groups coming before the Student Legislature. It is usually a case where both sides lack information the other vitally needs. Groups coming before the Legislature need to know the proper procedure; the Legislature, in order to make rational and intelligent decisions, needs information.

In response to both needs an agenda has been adopted. In order for a group or person to be assured adequate time before the Legislature, they will need to inform the student government office, upstairs in the Pub, the Friday before the meeting.

The person informing the office should include the club's name, person to present the report and a telephone number they may be reached at. They should also leave a synopsis of what their report shall consist of (i.e. funds requested, a breakdown of request or some action taken on which they wish to report). If no one is present at the student government office, leave a note on the door with the appropriate information addressed to the vice-president of SGA.

Once a group has notified the student government office, will be placed on the agenda for the following Thursday. All persons presenting a report must be present in C-218 no later than 6:50 p.m. If they fail to be there on time, unless there is a valid excuse, they shall forfeit their space on the agenda.

The schedule of business shall be:

- A. Call to order
- B. Roll call

Vice-president's report

C. Reading of the minutes of the previous meeting(s)

D. Reports:

- 1) executive officers
- 2) Standing Committees
- 3) Special Committees
- E. Unfinished Business
- F. Scheduled Business
- G. New Business
- H. Announcements
- I. Adjournment

The business of groups who contact the office by the previous Friday shall be handled under scheduled business. I realize that situations arise that don't permit proper notification. These situations will have to be handled under new business at the Legislature's discretion.

The aspect of all this that I must stress is that if a group comes before the Legislature expecting some action they should be prepared not to get it that night. This is by no means a hard and fast rule but when it comes to using delegated power (as the Legislature does) the best course is often the slowest. For this reason I urge all persons and groups to approach the Legislature as early as possible when pursuing a project with which they will need assistance.

If any parts of the process are confusing, or if you need further help, please stop by the SGA office or leave a note for me and I will try and get in touch with you.

Now for an update on action the Legislature has been taking. Despite the recent reports by this paper there has been considerable action out of the Legislature. They have passed resolutions which concern use of the pool facilities by married students, motorcycle parking on campus, posting of grades at the end of the semester (this resolution was distributed to the entire faculty). Resolutions which have brought results include one for a sidewalk along the marine science road scheduled for the 1979-80 budget; lighting between the Marine Science Building and its parking lot, scheduled for next year; a sidewalk between the new classroom building and the Marine Science Building, to be built as soon as a proper path is found.

The Legislature also has asked for a postal substation be established on campus. They have been investigating the possibility of changing the new Dean's List requirements which were adopted without student input.

These actions are much more important than the money aspects of the Legislature as they show a creative approach to making our student government a progressive force on campus. This has been lacking in past senates, in my opinion.

I would now like to voice my opinion on several matters. This I am not supposed to do in legislative meetings; therefore, I will use this chance.

Despite the fact that I am beating a dead horse I would severely criticize the Legislature for appropriating the food money they did for the New Orleans trip by five student government officers. I have heard the argument that they are representing the entire SGA but that doesn't change the fact that they are first students and no one is forcing them to represent anyone—they volunteered. I am sure that there are any number of students on campus who would represent us without money at New Orleans, or anywhere else.

I would like to start now a move to have the Editor of the Seahawk popularly elected for a one-year term. This is the most powerful position on campus and shouldn't be left to succession. The Editor is now paid from student fees; therefore I feel that he should be responsible to them as well as representative of them. In addition to this I would like to see a recall provision put into the student constitution for all elected officials.

Our student government is a microcosm of the real government. The things wrong with the U.S. government have a way of showing up in ours. When a government such as the U.S. gets control of too much of the wealth they become wasteful and loose sight of why they are there. We in the student government, I feel, have run into the same problem one of the last acts of former President Karlin Whaley in office was to ask the Administration to raise the student government fees. She did this as a result of hearing that the athletic fees were going up (thanks to Coach Brooks).

To this raise, I say no thanks. Students and their parents know how to spend their money for their benefit far better than I or other legislators. I would like to see the student government fund those things that all students have equal access to, and not those to which a limited number of students may participate. Our budget is slightly larger than it needs to be. If it wasn't for wasteful allocations, we could get by fine on less.

I urge all students to think about these things and talk to their legislators. A directory is being prepared in the SGA office. This will aid in locating your representatives. Till next time, enjoy yourself.

Apathy foils SG foes

When the University of Texas-Austin abolished its student government last spring, organizers reported that many other campuses contacted them for how-to advice. Recently, students at Stanford University borrowed UT's technique and slogan, but unlike Texas, they bombed.

"Most students think the student senate is a joke," said Committee to Retire Aspiring Politicians (CRAP) organizer Doug Bandow. "But 80 percent voted with their feet—by not voting." In the campus-wide referendum, abolition was defeated 904 to 1,382. It needed a two-thirds majority.

Bandow said that CRAP "didn't expect to win," but wanted to bring attention to widespread apathy about student government. This year, only 10 graduate students ran for 20 seats in the student senate, and at the undergraduate level, 26 competed for 20 seats. Voter turnout for election was down a third.

Fine Arts feature is 'Death Race'

In writing about the movie "Death Race 2000," Andrew Sarris of the Village Voice said, "Paul Bartel has directed this murderous cross-country auto race on a 42nd Street level of comic ferocity."

"Death Race 2000" will be the ninth movie offered by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee this semester. It will be shown at 8:00 p.m., Tuesday, October 31, in Kenan Auditorium. "Death Race 2000" is a major cult film on campuses across the country. It has even inspired a pinball arcade computer game. This science fiction film won the motion picture award which is the Grand Prize at the Paris International Fantastic and Science Fiction Film Festival.

"Death Race 2000" was filmed in 1976 and is rated R. Except for those with season passes, the admission will be $.50 for students with ID cards and $1.00 for non-students.

Volleyball team wins

Two UNCW seniors sparked the volleyball team to victory in their final home game here Saturday. As the Seahawks won convincingly in three games over Chowan College, 18-18, 18-1 and 17-15.

Betsy Massari and Aida Vincent, playing what was termed by coach Judy Peel as "a significant role in the victory," are the two lone seniors on the team this year. "These two fine players will be sorely missed next year," concluded Peel. The Seahawks improved their record to 3-14 with the triumph.

Swim - a - thon set for Nov. 12

The first-ever UNCW Swim-a-Thon, a combination promotional and fund-raising brainchild of Seahawk swim coach Dave Allen's, will be held Sunday, Nov. 12 in the UNCW aquatic facility.

The entire UNCW men's and women's teams are the featured participants in the event, with each athlete seeking to log the maximum 200-length distance (2.8 miles). Each swimmer will be sponsored by area merchants and individuals who have pledged to contribute a specified donation per lap.

"The funds that we raise will be used toward a Christmas holidays training trip," Allen explains. "More than likely, we'll spend nearly two weeks in the Ft. Lauderdale (Fla.) area this year."

While that might sound like a vacation-of-sorts, Allen quickly denies any such notion.

"The December holidays are the prime time for concentrated swimming," he says. "Without the academic pressures on our kids (UNCW is between semesters), we can devote unlimited time for training, probably five-to-six hours per day."

"This is by no means a time for fun and games, but rather a period of intensified hard work and conditioning."

Allen says that a long-course (50-meter) outdoor pool, which is available in Ft. Lauderdale, is also of real importance in the training sessions.

"If we are to develop the Division One program that we have committed ourselves to, a holiday trip of this nature is essential. But such a trip costs money, of course, and that's why this swim-a-thon is so vital."

For more information on the UNCW Swim-a-Thon, contact Dave Allen in the athletic department at UNCW.

Crew team completes row-a-thon

On Sunday Oct. 22, the UNCW Crew Team rowed from Wilmington to Wrightsville Beach, in four hours and 15 minutes—a distance of 26 miles.

Jointly sponsored by the UNCW Rowing Club and the Cape Fear Rowing Association, donations for the Row-a-Thon were pledged for per mile that was rowed. The reason for this awesome feat was to raise money for a new racing scull. The 61 foot by 2 foot wide hand-made racing scull costs $7,000 and is made in Seattle, Washington.

The UNCW Crew Team launched at the Cape Fear Towing Company in Wilmington around 7:30 a.m. The air was filled with a chilly morning fog, which made it necessary for the river patrol boats to ride ahead and to the sides of the racing scull to scout the water. It was very difficult to see the large ocean freighter that passed by. In order to avoid Frying Pan Shoals at the mouth of the Cape Fear River (where many a ship has gone down with all hands) the Crew: a demanding sport.

UNCW Crew maneuvered its way through to the inland waterway. By this time, all the rowers glistened in the morning sun as sweat poured off their bodies. From there is was a straight shot to the Wrightsville Beach Yacht Club at Wrightsville Beach (only 10 miles).

Injuries occurred throughout the entire Crew Team such as sore and strained muscles, extreme fatigue and most painful of all, two rows of blisters on every finger of every hand.

Those who rowed and strained: Dawn Depencier, Rich Haislip, Mike Gallagher (stroke man) Billy Bridges, Geoff Faulkner, Skip Swanson, Rob Burks, Kelly Swing, Paul Weaver (coxswain).

Those who rode in power boats and relaxed were: John Anderson (coach), David Smith (community volunteer), Bart Swarr, Danny Skrobowski, and Tom Raines.

Seahawks go for the ball.

Indians stop Seahawk win streak

The William and Mary Indians not only halted the Seahawk win streak at six straight games, but also clouded UNCW's playoff hopes as they defeated the Seahawks, 5-2 last Saturday. Earlier, on Tuesday, the Hawks shut out St. Andrews, 5-0.

The Seahawks dominated the entire game against St. Andrews. Eddie Brock scored two goals in a two-minute span towards the end of the first half on assists from Dennis Davis and Chi Chi Mercado. Gil Castilla made it 3-0 when he scored with three minutes remaining in the first half on an assist from John Miller. In the second half, UNCW got two more goals from Mercado and Ed Donahue to close out the scoring. Castilla assisted on both goals. UNCW outshot St. Andrews, 23-4, enroute to their second shutout of the year. Charlie Ingold, Rusty Russ, and Tom Prestia all saw action in goal for the shutout.

The tables were turned when the Seahawks faced a strong William and Mary team. It was the Indians who dominated the game, outshooting the Hawks, 23-7, and throttling the Hawk offense. UNCW tied the score in the first half at 1-1, when Chi Chi Mercado scored on an assist from John Miller. The Hawks pulled within one, 3-2, with 28 minutes left in the game on an unassisted goal by Ed Donahue. The Indians, however, roared back to score two more goals and the victory.

"We were beaten by a very fine soccer team here today," Coach Calvin Lane said following the match. "They were quick to the ball all day long and we seemed to be a step behind."

"This is the second year in a row that they have knocked us out of the playoff picture, but we can still come back and have an outstanding year."

UNCW is now 10-4 on the year and faces two more matches. Saturday, Nov. 4, the Hawks play host to South Carolina for a 2:00 p.m. contest. The following Wednesday, the Hawks play Duke in Durham for their final match of the year.

Intramurals growing

Their are more sports at UNCW than the big scholarship athletics. Many people can participate in the athletic programs such as cross country, track, and club football. Also, the intramural program at UNCW is on the upswing. More and more sports are being opened to the student body in the way of intermural competition.

Currently underway are football intermurals, a racquetball tournament which is scheduled soon, and later comes about any other type of sports competition anyone would want. During the entire school year enough sports will come up to fill everyone's needs.

But the intermural program needs people. Officials, scorekeepers, and especially participants to fill the player rosters. The Physical Education Department promotes exercise, (some say that they promote it too much) saying that it is even good for you. Now there's news! Finally, something that is not only fun but good for you, too! So recreate! Or, if you can't make it out to participate, go watch the action. Believe me, intermural participants are just as serious and intense as anyone. Oh, and don't forget about all the big sporting events, either. They can be pretty fun to watch, too.

Congratulations to the winner of UNCW's newest sport. (or recognized sport) David Kellum is the newest chug-a-lug champion of the area. He proved he deserved his title at the Octstrohberfest a couple of weeks ago and is currently resting on his laurels, but we all keep telling him to get off his laurels.

The UNCW soccer team is going places. One of those places could be the post season playoffs. If they keep their record well above .500, they will be in strong contention for one of the playoff invitations.

Also in contention for the playoffs is UNCW's football team. The football team would be even better off if Wake Forest would show up for a game. They have canceled out on three games in two years. This costs the team money for officials which could be put to better use in other ways.

Seahawk football action

Football team aims toward playoffs

A UNCW—N.C. State matchup for the Eastern Conference Championship became realistic this week as the Seahawks defeated the Tar Heels from UNC 12-7 in Chapel Hill in football action.

In the pivotal conference contest, Doug Browning, Mark Doll, and Tim Owens paced the Seahawks to a convincing (more than score indicates) triumph.

With the day being bleak and overcast, it seemed things would be the same for the Seahawks. Taking the opening kickoff, the Hawks returned the ball from the 5 to the 33 yard line, only to be forced to punt after three running plays. Steve Underwood got off a 51 yard punt which the Tar Heels returned 14 yards. After 3 plays and only 2 yards the Heels punted the ball back to the Seahawks who in turn were forced to punt after 3 more plays.

After another exchange of punts, the Seahawks got the big break. With David Hooks and Hamp Hardison hitting the quarterback with a bone crunching tackle and free safety Mark Doll shooting the gap, the quarterback fumbled. Doll picked up the ball and ran the ball 26 yards for the touchdown. The try for the extra point failed and the Hawks led 6-0.

The Seahawks ensuing kick off went out of bounds giving the Tar Heels possession on the 40 yard line. But by now the whole Seahawk defense seemed alive and ready and after three plays forced the Tar Heels to punt.

A Browning to Wood pass for 15 yards put the Hawks on the 40 yard line. On first down Browning took the snap from center, turned and pitched the ball to Doll on a sweep left. Doll spotted Wood open down the left side and lofted the ball over the defenders arms. Wood scampered down the side line to the 6 yard line before being tackled. The Tar Heels dug in and held the Seahawks for 3 plays. On 4th and 3 Moore took a counter left and slipped in the end zone untouched. The extra point was no good.

With time running out in the first half, the Tar Heels went to the air. With the ball on the 49 yard line, big Donald Borden slapped a Tar Heel pass out of the air and into nose guard Joe Meckley's arms. Meckley fought off three tacklers and carried people to the 11 yard line. With less than a minute left in the half, the Hawks went to air on the first down. UNC-CH's free safety made a diving, turning interception in the end zone to take away any hope the Hawks had of widening the score.

As the second half started, so did the Hawks offensive line—Morrow, Ray, Quate, Poulos, Owens, and Fox. They started blowing holes in the Tar Heels defense and the runners, (Doll, Moore, Herring) kept pounding away and the Hawks moved the ball deep into Tar Heel territory. But every time it looked as if the Hawks would blow the game open, they gave up the ball. Four fumbles and one interception inside the 25 yard line killed the Hawks scoring chances. But still the Hawks controlled the ball and the Tar Heel offense.

Leading 12-0 and time running out in the fourth quarter, the Seahawk defense went to sleep and let a Carolina end slip down field and complete a pass play of 64 yards for a touchdown. The extra point made it 12-7. Each side had the ball again but were unable to move against each other.

This was our biggest game and the greatest team effort we've had this year," said Seahawk coach Don Corry. "They were a big, physical team and played a great game but we were emotionally ready and knew what we had to do. This is the first game we have really taken charge of. Usually we run and pass about 50-50 but today we only passed 12 times and ran 50 times. I think this was a big difference and it proved to the team we can control the ball and move on the ground."

Corry stated that next week's UNCW—N.C. State game will be a great game and should provide some of the greatest hitting of the year.

"State is a big, fast and strong team, but we can beat them if the team stays as emotionally high next week as they were this week," Corry said.

If UNCW wins the Conference Championship, they will host the play-offs at home which will begin Nov. 18.

Next home game for the Seahawks is November 12 against Robbins.

UNCW finishes fifth in cross-country

The UNCW cross-country team finished fifth out of a seven team field at a cross country meet in Laurinburg at St. Andrews College Saturday. It was the Seahawks last meet of the 1978 season. Their top finisher was Paul Lupica, a freshman from Mass. He finished fifteenth out of a field of fifty-one runners. Lupica ran the 5.1 mile course in 27:32.

Host St. Andrews won the meet with Francis Marion finishing second.

Resident Assistant's job includes counseling and dedication

by Ray Warrner
Features Editor

Well, it's been tried. Hour after hour has been spent thinking of a job description for the position of Resident Assistant. Those kids just don't have simple jobs. Suffice it to say that if you are a Resident Assistant (called, among other things, RA's), then you are likely to engage in a great number of varied activities.

An RA (for those of you who have been living in a shell) is the student who is in charge of a particular floor of a dormitory. He or she enforces university dorm policy, reports mechanical failures of dorm equipment, helps students with their problems and adjustments to dorm life, and performs some minor dorm maintenance.

In addition to RA's, each dorm is presided over by a chief Resident Assistant who in the words of Belk Hall Chief RA Tom Hunt, serves as "a general supervisor and go-between" for the students to the deans.

Each April, Deans of Students Ralph Parker and Helena Cheek take applications for those students wanting to serve as RA's or chief residents. According to the deans, there are several things they look for in screening these students.

"We don't want them to neglect their classwork," says Dean Cheek, "so we require them to have at least a 2.0 average."

Since an RA must get along with many students of varying backgrounds and temperaments, personality is very important. Says Cheek, "We want somebody with an outgoing personality who can work with students from a variety of backgrounds."

Adds Parker, "We look for somebody who can get along with students but can enforce the rules and at the same time be tactful."

In order to serve as an information resource for students, RA's must also be knowledgeable in services and activities of the UNCW campus.

"We have a lot of freshmen here," explains Parker, "and they just don't know about campus services like counseling or Vivian Martindale" (the campus minister)."

RA's must also have a ready ear. As Parker sympathetically puts it, "A lot of these kids are away from home for the first time and just need a friend to talk to."

Prior to the beginning of the fall semester, the RA's attend a two-day workshop to prepare them for their jobs. There, they learn of their duties, hear from representatives of campus services (such as counseling), learn the physical mechanics of the dorm buildings, attend a session on handling medical emergencies (sponsored by Wilmington Health Associates), and even take a course in sex education.

When the students arrive, the newly indoctrinated RA's practically run the check-in of students on their own.

A spot check with this year's RA's reveals that they have indeed become "Jacks and Jills of all trades."

Belk Chief Resident Hunt finds his major problem to be mechanical failure of dorm equipment. This year washing machines, the ice machine and the elevator have all gone on the blink. Hunt is responsible for reporting these problems to the Housing Office and the Physical Plant for eventual repair.

Hunt attributes the quiet atmosphere of Belk Hall to the large percentage of upperclassmen housed there. The freshmen, who tend to be more rowdy, are mostly housed in Galloway Hall.

Hunt says he is occasionally bothered late at night by students wanting to be let into their room because they have lost their keys. He doesn't mind, though, saying that those who ask him instead of their RA are generally close friends anyway. Besides, he keeps late hours himself.

"I like to check the doors late at night," he says, "because I worry about outsiders coming in and causing trouble."

Referring to students who prop open the outside doors after they have been locked, Hunt adds that "they put themselves in great danger when they do it because it allows intruders access to the whole building."

Blake Carter, first floor RA in Belk Hall, echoes Hunt's assessment of that dorm as a quiet place. The only excitement he recalls is having to take one person who was sick to the doctor.

RA's from all dorms characterize Galloway Hall as the most rowdy and difficult dorm to work in.

"I'm not saying they (the freshmen who comprise 75 percent of that dorm's residents) are worse than I was," says Hunt, "but we had upperclassmen to tell us when it was time to go in. Without that control, it's a zoo," claims Hunt, adding, "They raise hell and party all the time."

One of the persons in the middle of the Galloway situation is fifth floor RA Pam Reinauer.

"Sometimes we (the Galloway RA's) get very little sleep because we are quieting noise late at night," Reinauer says.

"People complain to me and I have to try and get them to quiet down."

Because Galloway rooms have no individual lobbies and open directly into the common hallway, visitation violations are harder to conceal. Reinauer tries to be lenient with violators and generally gives them two warnings with the third incident, however, going to the deans for disciplinary action.

Reinauer says she has learned a lot on the job. Referring to several serious altercations with menacing male students, she says she would react differently now than she did at the time.

"You learn by experience," she observes.

Peer pressure can be a very difficult strain when RA's must enforce unpopular rules.

LIVING BY THE SEA

Reinauer feels that life became "uncomfortable for a few days" when she recently had to report a male who had many female friends on her hall.

"I've been called every name in the book," Reinauer allows, "but I've tried to do a good job. After all," she adds, "a name is only a word."

The pristine corridors of Hewlett Hall are, like those of Belk Hall, relatively quiet and subdued. Melissa McIntosh likes it that way.

"I worked in Galloway last year and had terrible problems," she says.

The main problem she sees in Hewlett is that students there, like those of the other two buildings, don't notice which RA is "on duty" each night.

"The reason we are on duty different nights," she explains, "is so the rest of us can sleep and catch up on school work. The students go to the nearest RA, though, and prevent us from doing so."

Mechanical problems are not common in Hewlett, but McIntosh complains that walls are already cracking, the fire alarm goes off at odd hours without cause and a water pipe burst and flooded four rooms earlier this semester.

Most of the time, McIntosh indicates, goes toward helping students cope with college life.

"I've done a lot of counseling this year," she says.

All of the RA's feel that the pay for the job is inadequate. RA's receive minimum wage, but may be paid for no more than 35 hours a month, even though they actually work nearly 24 hours a day. Chief residents, with greater responsibilities, earn more and receive (except in the case of Belk Hall) a private apartment.

Deans Parker and Cheek seem appreciative of the students' efforts.

"We have excellent RA's this year," says Cheek, adding that it is "probably our most successful year with RA's and chief residents."

Indeed, the RA's do seem to be a special breed. Despite long hours and little pay, turnover is low.

"We only lose one or two persons between semesters," says Parker.

Dedication, it appears, is part of the stuff of which RA's are made.

Congratulations, Mike Pandich

The first Great Stroh's Suds Search officially ended at 3:45 on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 25, 1978. Mike Pandich was the lucky detective who found the Stroh's beer bottle taped to the bottom of a stool on the second floor of the library.

But despair not fellow beer seekers. You too can be the envy of your neighborhood (like Mike) by participating in the Second Great Stroh's Suds Search.

Late Tuesday night, under the cover of darkness, the second Stroh's bottle was hidden, but be careful—we made it harder this time. Instead of a large, easily seen beer bottle; we hid a 7 ounce pony bottle.

So, stuff a six-pack of Stroh's into your refrigerator and ponder over this clue:

It's hiding place can be seen from our Civil War relic.

Las Vegas night is special event

Under dusky houselights, candlelight glimmered starlike from every table. White tablecloths flashed fluidly under each fire and fell in torrents to be swallowed by shrouds of darkness along the floor.

Normally drab windows were shiny suits of aluminum, intermittently emblazoned with paper pumpkins and reflected light while center stage rose up and up into the happy gloom and commanded attention.

Almost religiously the multitude was ushered into this scene to partake of the festive communion and await the high priest (Ronnie Dove) and his three con-celebrants (his band) to appear and harmonize the rite. Three formal hosts (chief RA's Brad Dawson, Tom Hunt and Ernie Lynn) were instrumental in getting everyone seated quickly and comfortably.

Each participant was soon served their dinner by moonlighting angels (approximately a dozen good-looking coeds). The specially printed menu offered New York sirloin steak, stuffed breast of chicken and beef tips burgundy. Drinks were drawn from fountains at the refreshment center.

The stage, laden with many sacrificial offerings, including pumpkins and cornstalks, remained vacant until communion was nearly over, when the high priest (Dove), apparently satisfied by the offerings, took to the stage.

He sang several songs and then introduced Wilmington's mayor, Ben Halterman. Halterman presented Dove a memorial picture of the Wilmington waterfront which he graciously accepted and then continued his performance.

Bringing his years of experience and mature performing style to the stage, Dove excited the audience with such hits as "Mountain of Love," "One Kiss for Old Times Sake," "Cry," "Happy Anniversary Baby," "Lucille," "My Way" and an excellent song written by Phil Welsh, director of dining services and Ronnie Dove's brother-in-law, "The Angel in Your Eyes (Brings Out the Devil in Me)." At one point in the show

Ronnie Dove explained that he was brought up on Elvis Presley and that his son was a chip off the old block. This worked as a perfect transition to introduce his son, Ronnie Dove Jr., who appeared on stage and commenced singing his hip swinging version of "Blue Suede Shoes" and "Proud Mary."

When the show was over Dove and company were roundly thanked with a standing ovation.

The event, billed as "An Evening in Las Vegas" and presented as a Halloween special, is sure to be considered the entertainment treat of the semester. It is also Welsh's latest in a long line of additions to cafeteria dining that is sure to be remembered as a masterpiece of organization and planning.

Bryan Ferry releases fifth solo album

Have you ever heard of Bryan Ferry? Did someone say yes? If so, this is only because Ferry was the founder of Roxy Music, not for his own music.

After starting his solo career in 1974, Ferry has just released his fifth solo album. The Bride Stripped Bare.

Have you heard of any of his other LP's—In Your Mind, Let's Stick Together, Another Time, Another Place, and These Foolish Things. Don't feel bad if you haven't.

Ferry sounds like he comes out of the Byrd's music of the late 60's and early 70's. This sound is very unique if you can imagine a cross between Jim Stafford and Frankie Valli!

As for the cuts on the disc, the opener contains the title phrase, "Sign of the Times" is also one of the off beat songs.

"Can't Let Go" reveals the story about a guy hooked on drugs who wants to get off but "can't let go."

"Hold On (I'm coming)" is a redone version of the Isaac Hayes/David Porter tune and that's all it has going for it.

J.J. Cale's "The Same Old Blues" is also on the disc and tells of a guy who can't get out of a rut-like the album being that there is not much emotion in his voice and the music involves a basic beat.

Ferry composed some of the cuts on the LP but the only decent one is "When She Walks in the Room". The music has some substance and tells of lovers and how they think the other feels about them.

"Take Me to the River" talks of taking him to the river and cleansing his soul and while he is at it he also needs to clean up the music and the words which seem like they came from two different pieces.

"What Goes On" is a Lou Reed cut which reveals everything has a purpose. Well—What about this album?

"Carrickgergus" reveals that a guy wants to be with his girl but can't because she is across the ocean and he dies without ever seeing her again.

"That's How Strong My Love Is" is direct and tells "how strong his love is." This piece features a fairly good sax solo by Mel Collins.

The final cut is "This Island Earth" and is the best of Roxy Music (which isn't much). The music is mysterious and strange but adds a little to the piece.

What more can I say?

NOTES

A new club for martial arts is now forming and will meet at 4:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday in the back of the old gym. New members are welcomed.

Sigma Alpha Beta will host a Job Resume and Interview Workshop on November 15 and 16, 2:30 p.m. in King Auditorium. All interested people are urged to attend.

The Recreation Majors Club will be having a Hershey bar sale next week. For more information contact any member of the Recreation majors club or Mark Blanton. Sociology majors—we are now forming a club of sociology majors.

Please come to our first meeting on Thursday, November 9 at 2:30 p.m. in Hill. The group could sponsor speakers, career and social activities. FREE REFRESHMENTS. Direct any questions to D. Miller at X-2433. Durkheim, Marx, Goffman—all of your sociological pals will be there.

To all clubs—any student organization on the UNCW campus that wishes to have their picture taken for this year's yearbook, pick up forms from the bulletin boards in the Pub or the cafeteria.

Catholic students are organizing for fellowship and mutual help! Those catholic students interested in forming a Newman Club are urged to attend an organizational meeting in room 418 of Galloway Hall at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 2. The purpose of the club will be to encourage fellowship, a deeper understanding of the apostolic faith, and a chance to help each other adjust to the local community.

Candidates to appear

The Department of Education will sponsor a forum for candidates for the New Hanover County Board of Education today from 1:30 to 3 in King Auditorium.

Candidates for the local school board will appear to present their positions and answer questions from the audience. All students, faculty and staff are invited to attend.

The candidates will include Harold Hulon, Bill Landen, Lamar McIver, Marjorie McIver, Dan Parham, Dr. Rhinehart, Carl Unsicker, and Gloria Willis.

Wed., Nov. 8
Mr. Chuck Richards
Majors: All

The Career Planning and Placement Office, in cooperation with two student organizations, Sigma Alpha Beta and Phi Beta Lambda, are sponsoring a Resume/Interview Seminar on November 15 and 16 at 2:30 in King Auditorium.

Appointments with recruiters should be made in the Office of Career Planning and Placement, 207 Alderman Administration Building. Sign-up sheets for recruiting interviews are available beginning Monday mornings, three weeks in advance of the scheduled interview.

Students must be registered with the Placement Office in order to sign up for interviews and are expected to honor appointments scheduled. To avoid disappointment, interview appointments should be scheduled as early as possible. Come by or call the Placement Office if there are questions or for additional information.

Pulitzer-winning poet to present reading

W. D. Snodgrass, a major contemporary American poet who received the Pulitzer Prize in poetry in 1960, will present a reading of his poems in Randall Library auditorium Monday, Nov. 6, at 8 p.m. The reading is sponsored by the UNCW Department of English. Everyone is invited to attend at no charge.

Poems by Snodgrass have appeared in many leading literary magazines, as well as his translations and essays. He has given readings at major universities in the United States, Canada, eastern and western Europe, the Middle East, and north Africa.

His song translations have been performed in concerts in New York, Boston and Pittsburgh by groups specializing in early music.

Snodgrass has published a number of books beginning with Heart's Needle in 1959, a volume of poems which won the Pulitzer Prize in 1960.

His next two volumes of poems were After Experience in 1967 and The Fuhrer Bunker in 1977.

He translated, with Lore Segal, Gallows Songs by Christian Morgenstern in 1967 and his translated two volumes of songs to sing: Six Troubadour Songs (1977) and Traditional Hungarian Songs (1978).

Snodgrass earned two graduate degrees from State University of Iowa — the M.A. and M.F.A. He has taught in the English departments of Cornell University, University of Rochester, Wayne State University and Syracuse University. He is currently a visiting professor in the department of

W. D. Snodgrass

English at Old Dominion University.

Recognized as one of America's leading poets, Snodgrass has received, in addition to the Pulitzer Prize, a number of awards for his poetry, including the Ingram—Merrill Award, the Guinness Poetry Award in Great Britain, and the Miles Modern Poetry Award.

He has received grants from the National Institute of Arts and Letters, a Ford Foundation Grant for study in the Theater and a grant from the National Council on Arts.

He has been awarded a Hudson Review Fellowship in Poetry, a Guggenheim Fellowship and a fellowship from the Academy of American Poets.

Volumes of Snodgrass's poetry will be on sale at the University Bookstore.

Campus organizations need charters

In order to use campus facilities for meetings or other purposes, or to receive SGA funds, clubs or organizations must have a charter or constitution approved by the SGA Charter Committee, and then by the Student Legislature. This must be done every year. Charters of the following bodies have thus far been submitted to the SGA: Football Club, Earth Science Club, Chemistry Club, Government and Politics Assn., Biology Club, English Club, Social Workers' Assn. For People

Criminal Justice Majors Club
Chess Club
Surfing Club
Coastal University Diving Assn. of Wilmington
Kamishin-Ryu Ju-Jitsu Club
Fencing Club
Motoburyu Karate Club
N.C. Student Legislature
Rowing Club
Rugby Club
Psychology Club
Of these, only the last few have been chartered for this year, and of course the preceding are only a portion of the clubs on campus. If the SGA does not have your charter, or if it has been amended, a copy should be submitted as soon as possible, along with a list of current officers of the organization. With an up-to-date copy of the charter a written request for reapproval is needed, as well as officers. All charters must have a clause prohibiting discrimination on basis of race, religion, sex, or ethnic origin. Charters and requests may be taken by the SGA office (upstairs in the Pub) or to John Wiley, SGA Charter Committee Chairperson, in 318 Galloway Hall.

Department to offer new course in spring emphasizing chemistry in economics and business

Next semester, Dr. David L. Dean of the Chemistry Department will be offering a new course entitled Industrial Chemistry. This course will probably be significantly different from any other chemistry course offered by the department. Other chemistry courses emphasize chemical reactions and chemical behavior. This course, on the other hand, will emphasize the interface of chemistry with business and economics.

The course will emphasize the concepts of developing new products and new processes or modifying old ones in order to make these new products. It will cover governmental regulations on worker exposure to chemicals, on air and water effluent standards, and on shipping. It will explore where and how raw materials are obtained, the processes by which they are converted to more familiar intermediates, and the final products that are made from these intermediates with their respective processes.

Some of the characteristics of the chemical engineering required to make these processes work will be discussed. Finally, there will be a brief survey of the employment opportunities open to chemists.

For those desiring more information, a brief course outline may be obtained from Dr. Dean or the Chemistry Department office. The course carries three hours of academic credit.

Preregistration begins this week

Preregistration for the spring semester will be held as follows:

Seniors and Special Students-Oct. 31 to Nov. 1
Juniors-Nov. 2, 3
Sophmores-Nov. 6, 7
Freshmen-Nov. 8, 9, 10
Unclassified-Oct. 31-Nov. 10

Preregistration Procedure

1. Pick up your master card and schedule card in the Registrar's Office. (Schedule cards may be obtained only on the dates you are scheduled to preregister.)
2. Go to your adviser to plan schedule. Standard department abbreviations should be used. The schedule card must be signed by the adviser.
3. Take your master card and schedule card to each department involved and pick up a course card for the class in which you wish to enroll.
4. After the schedule card is initialed by each department, you will return the packet with the master card, schedule card and the course cards to the Registrar's Office.

The completed packet must be returned to the Registrar's Office by Nov. 10 in order for you to be preregistered.

Bills for tuition and fees for the spring semester will be mailed Nov. 22 and must be paid by Dec. 15.

New student union plans discussed

by Julie Russ

Anyone who frequents the Pub is aware of the over-crowded conditions that exist there. This medium-sized building, which was never intended for use as a student union, is now housing none student-oriented departments as well as the large recreational area.

Now located in the Pub are the following departments: the office of the director, assistant director, and secretary of the office of Student Activities; the student government office; the Seahawk, Fledgling, and Atlantis offices; two small conference rooms; and the Goodwood Tavern. Also soon to be located in the Pub is the Counseling and Testing Office.

As a result of the limited space provided by the Pub's confines, a special committee convened by Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jairy Hunter has been established to consider all aspects involved in planning and erecting a new student union. The Student Union Planning Committee consists of students, faculty members, administrative staff and alumni.

According to Hunter, the planning committee has been divided into three subcommittees. The purpose of these subcommittees are to (a) develop program specifications, (b) to explore possible building sites, and (c) prepare a financial analysis of potential income and other expenses associated with the project.

Emphasized Hunter, "This project is still in the preliminary stages. We have not chosen a building site but the committee is accomplishing as much as can be expected at this time."

Director of Student Activities Linda Moore is chairperson of the subcommittee that is responsible for developing program specifications. Moore is collaborating with Dr. Michael Bradley's tests and measurements class to produce a survey relating to student needs. The results of this survey will be influential in determining the facilities that will be included in plans for the new student center.

According to Moore, some facilities that may be provided are: a cafeteria, a relocated bookstore, lockers, a post office substation, and some form of banking services. Moore stated that one of the functions of a student union is to provide complete, modern facilities for student gatherings.

"My subcommittee is open to any interested students who wish to contribute input to this project," concluded Moore.

The planning committee held its first meeting about two weeks ago and will meet again next week. Each subcommittee was to have met during the interim and bring back a report to the full committee.

Committee members will be using information gathered from a date bank maintained by the Association of College Unions International, an organization which brings student union officials together for the exchange of ideas.

The group will also probably tour union facilities at other campuses in the state to see what has been included in their buildings.

Administration officials are reportedly considering two sites for the proposed union. One is the area north of the University Bookstore. The other possible location is between the main campus and the dormitory complex, near the athletic fieldhouse.

Financing of the new union will probably be accomplished through the issuance of bonds since the debt on the facility must be self-liquidating according to state budget procedures.

Lecture committee to present authority on bio-ethics

On Thursday Nov. 9, at 8 p.m., Dr. Edmund Pellegrino, M.D., will give a lecture in King Hall Auditorium. He will speak on such things as Bio-ethics, mercy killing and medical ethics.

Dr. Pellegrino is the president of Catholics University and has a host of honorary degrees from such universities as St. Benedict's College, St. John's University and Yale University. Pellegrino is married and is the father of seven children.

In an attempt to bring and improve the lectures on campus the lecture series is trying to choose speakers that are of interest to the students as a whole. By doing this the committee hopes to attract more student participation.

The lecture committee invites all UNCW students to come this Thursday at 8 p.m. to

Edmund Pellegrino

King Auditorium to hear Pellegrino. Admission is free to all students and $1.00 for non-students.

Job skills seminar planned next week

The Career Planning and Placement Office and Sigma Alpha Beta, the honorary business fraternity, will co-sponsor a two-day seminar directed toward improving job search skills. The seminar will be held Wednesday, Nov. 15, and Thursday, Nov. 16. Both seminars are scheduled for 2:30 p.m. in King Auditorium.

On Wednesday a panel of employers will present effective resume writing techniques in a resume seminar. The panel will include Bob Caudle, branch manager of Burroughs Corporation; June Johnson, revenue agent of the I.R.S.; Robert Stewart, personnel manager of W.R. Grace & Co.; and Sandra Harkin, director of Career Planning and Placement of UNCW. Keith Hedrick of Sigma Alpha Beta will act as moderator.

On Thursday another panel of employers will share insights on interviewing strategies in the job interview seminar. This panel will include David Buchanan, Ph.D., the department head of the School of Textiles at North Carolina State University; Jean Bridger, the minority relations and training analyst for General Electric; Tom Caperton, the manager of training and personnel development for Waccamaw Bank & Trust Co.; and Robert Stewart, personnel manager for W.R. Grace & Co. Steve Burt and Jackie Shanklin, both of Sigma Alpha Beta, and Dr. Steven Harper, seminar consultant and faculty advisor of Sigma Alpha Beta, will preside as moderators.

All majors are invited to attend these seminars with seniors particularly encouraged to participate.

New student union is welcome and needed addition to campus

Finally, UNCW is moving toward concrete plans for a new student union facility to replace and update Hinton James Building—a long overdue project which will hopefully show the university community a better example of the "union" as it should exist. Although several more years of planning, financing and construction are still ahead, the important thing is that what was once talk and dreams has now become action and reality.

The talk was put into action with the appointment of a committee which is now meeting to consider the initial plans for the new union. Many things have to be worked out that will involve a lot of ideas, a lot of people and a lot of considerations.

The first task of this committee is to devise some concept of what a student union should provide and how it should provide it. It should be obvious to everyone that the present facility is almost completely inadequate: a rec room, a snack bar and offices do not a union make.

A student union should be the center of non-academic activity on the college campus. It should combine services, recreation, fellowship and entertainment not only for the students but for the entire university community. The union should, indeed, be the force that makes the university a community by bringing together its people, not just the numbers and statistics.

It true to its purpose, the student union becomes part of the educational process by giving students the opportunity to grow socially and culturally through the introduction of new people and the interchange of new ideas. A student union is much more than a mere building; it is a unity of people, feeling and thought that touches every person within the university.

With these abstracts in mind, the planning committee is charged with the duty of drawing some particulars in the form of specific facilities in the new student union. An important fact for committee members to keep in mind is that this building is not only to be designed to meet present demands but should be planned to accommodate the university well into the future so that we are not left with an obsolete facility a few years after it opens.

Since UNCW has very little to build on as far as a real student union goes, the planners will find that their best bet is to look at other unions to find out what can be done. The committee should begin by taking in every suggestion it can get its hands on, then, through careful research and consideration, finding out just what suits this campus and its people. There will be nothing quick or easy about the process, but the most important thing is the result, not the speed with which it was reached.

This is not to say that university officials have an excuse for dragging their feet. The project had been put off too long already, and with any further delay the problem grows greater. There are some definite encouraging signs that the administration is not going to let this happen: recently appointed Vice-chancellor Jairy Hunter has named this project his number one priority, and Mr. William Hill, chairman of the Board of Trustees, has not failed in more than two years to express his ardent support for a new union at every board meeting.

The growth of on-campus population over the last several years has made the lack of an adequate union an increasingly important problem. Students are becoming more and more campus-oriented, thus demanding more and better facilities from their university.

There is a lot to be done before the new student union becomes a reality at UNCW. Five years is a very liberal estimate of the time it will take. A survey will be conducted among students and faculty in an effort to increase participation in the planning. An important decision will be the selection of a site, hopefully somewhere in the center of campus. Financing must be arranged so that the facility is self-liquidating in accordance with state budget procedures.

But it is good to see that the promises of the last several years are now being put into action. For the university and its people, this could be one of the most important growing steps this university takes for many years to come.

LETTERS

Treasurer disagrees with vice-president

To the Editor:

I would like to express my opinion on the vice-president's report last week and other student government problems which have come to my attention. The matters at hand include the trip to New Orleans by five student government officials, the so-called wasteful allocations by the senate, and the extra funding given to the student government this year.

When the Student Legal Rights Conference in New Orleans was in the planning stage, it was thought that five people would be needed to adequately represent the university. These students were selected on the recommendation of President Wayne Dunlap. The money recommended by the Finance Committee was allocated to the Executive Fund, whereupon it was distributed to those students taking the trip. Additional funds were allocated for food on this trip. The SGA does have a general policy that funds allocated should not be spent on food, unless there are unusual circumstances surrounding the allocation. In this case, there definitely were unusual circumstances.

Five students were traveling to New Orleans to represent our school. We could have sent several paper bag lunches along with them, or told them to spend their own money. But, as it usually is and was, none of the students could have afforded to eat on their own funds. The prices were exorbitant. As chairman of the Finance Committee, I thought that the payment of meals was justified, in good judgement, and a very necessary part of their expenses.

The second part of this letter concerns the so-called "wasteful allocations" by the "powerful and mighty" student government. I am perhaps being sarcastic, because the above accusations are very far from the facts. As treasurer this year, I am also in charge of the Finance Committee, which includes four senators. The senators are Glen Downs, Patricia Blanton, Jon Fail, and Mike Sanders. As a committee we work cohesively as a group, we represent the students as a whole, we are very conservative, and we are possibly the best working committee in the student government.

So far this year, we have met about nine times, each meeting having groups, clubs, and organizations requesting appropriations from the student government. Every request has been examined, deleting the unnecessary expenditures and demanding a good explanation on how the allocated funds will be spent. Our job is to examine each request and to make a recommendation to the senate. The senate then votes on our recommendation. Thus far, from my position as treasurer of the SGA, I regard accusations of unwise spending as being very misguided and untruthful.

The final part of this letter concerns the extra funding of the SGA. The SGA, before this year, had not received additional funding in seven years. In other words, last year we operated on the same budget as in 1970. The SGA conducted a study on the possible need of extra funding, and submitted the study to Vice-chancellor Malloy, without knowledge of the Athletic Department's attempt to raise fees. The study was put in transcript and presented to the Board of Trustees of UNCW. The request for additional funding had several reasons behind it: (1) inflation, (2) the growing student body, and (3) the SGA went from funding seven clubs and organizations to funding 28. This study was accepted by the Board of Trustees and our badly needed funds were appropriated to us.

The SGA has a club or organization under its wings for just about any type of activity, whether it be sports or entertainment. The SGA funds those clubs and organization, that all students have access to and which benefit the school or the students.

As a rapidly growing university, we need to be aware of our needs and be in a position to change them if possible. Thus, the allocation to the student government was needed, the SGA was aware of it, and sought the additional funding. The SGA has the burden of allocating funds, and if we try to operate on the Campus Chuckles: Everybody loves a dog

by Julie Russ

Who doesn't like dogs? Everybody I know does, and that includes my bachelor uncle who hates everybody, including all three of Charlie's Angels. To return to the subject, all dogs have their useful points, even those wire-up poodle puffballs. (I'm told they make great teething toys.) And me, well, I love dogs one and all... but I have a shameful secret to confess to Dogdom at large. My puppy is a punk.

There, it's off my chest. My dog is a delinquent, a disgrace to his race and a failure in the eyes of his family. Within the home circle he is sneeringly referred to as the Happy Hoodlum. And since he is my dog (listen, he was a present, which only goes to prove that it isn't a gift horse you should be wary of!) I am the one forced to punish him and listen to his screams for mercy. (Hey, a rolled-up newspaper can do terrible things to a dog.)

About two weeks ago this lovable scrap of fluff ate my bedspread, mangled the rosebushes, sampled a neighborhood child, and tried snorkeling in the horse's watering trough. After ordering a new bedspread, giving last rites to the rosebushes, bribing one hysterical kid with candy, and fishing my doggie diver from a watery grave, I was on the verge of Nuttville. On the spur of the moment, I enrolled the mutt in an obedience class.

I figured as long as he was going to be a candidate for reform school, he might as well go in style.

The next night we arrived, my little criminal and I, full of fleas and apprehension. In the course of a one-hour lesson, my little button-nosed baby learned how to maul on command and how to tinkle cheerfully in the face of discipline. I, as his handler, was enlightened as to the finer aspects of dog training: I learned how to operate a choke collar gracefully and how to deal with a confirmed bed-drooler.

At the end of the next lesson, my puppy had become an expert at the Silent Snarl and I in turn had perfected the art of the Desperate Dodge. Now I don't want to sound like a quitter, but those lessons were cultivating (a) one milk-toothed monster and (b) one hunchbacked handler. I ask you, have you ever tried to restrain a dog who wanted to proposition the daschund across the ring? It ain't easy, folks.

I decided to quit while I was ahead: that obedience class was teaching both dog and owner that it takes two to make a personality clash. So my dog flunked out of obedience school! So what? I didn't want his diploma on the wall next to mine anyway.

the cynicism and skepticism on the part of the marshals toward the audience? What was the difference in this concert?

In point of fact, the major difference was that one audience was predominately black, the other was predominately white. I will let your imagination decide which audience got the harsher treatment. Still, this is not merely a matter of racism. True, no one can deny that race was not an important variable but there were other factors as well.

Maybe the marshals were incorrectly forewarned. There could have been a misunderstanding from both sides. Maybe I am paranoid and this is all in my head.

Questions: Why is it that the marshals were not incorrectly forewarned at the Outlaws concert? Why was there not a misunderstanding at the Outlaws concert? True, indeed, I was not paranoid at the Outlaws concert.

We the students at UNCW must make it incumbent upon ourselves to make sure school policy is administered fairly.

Simple issues made difficult

To the Editor:

It seems to me that when a student studies hard and understands the material being presented in class, he should be able to expect a "good" grade on a test. When the opposite is true, and the majority of the other students in the class feel the same way, one can't help but question the instructor.

I'm not one to beat around the bush. I'm speaking of a problem in the Economics Department. One instructor, in particular, feels that he should make even the simplest issues difficult. Hence, his tests reflect his pomposity in the command of self-coined phrases, and his irregular interpretation of the English language, as well as the text.

I, like many other students, am here to learn (and maybe have a little fun in the process). My parents have a limited amount of money allocated for my education; therefore it would be desirable for me and others to finish a four-year degree in four years.

I believe that men such as this give the department and the school a bad name. His type tends to discourage students talented in other fields to succeed in his.

I personally would like to have an honest chance to prove my knowledge, rather than to have to interpret ambiguous test questions and worry about how Clemson did on the football field.

Vice-president's suggestion a joke

To the Editor:

After reading the column written by my fellow colleague in the senate, Francis DeLuca, I wondered if it could have been no more than tongue-in-cheek humor. Surely Francis had to be kidding. Maybe Francis wrote the article after attending a party. Francis is upset over the fact that the editor of this newspaper simply told it like it was. If you remember, Francis, I was there too. Francis' proposal that the student body elect the editor is only a mere plea for revenge. Vengeance should not

In summary of this letter, I would like to hope that I have set the facts straight. Francis DeLuca, the vice-president, was apparently misguided and misinformed of the actual facts as they happened. This letter hopefully informed you of the events in question and was representative of my opinions and judgements concerning each case.

Concert marshals said stringent

To the Editor:

On Oct. 17, 1978, I attended a concert featuring Wet Willie and Outlaws. Needless to say it was an evening well spent. The concert marshals at this particular concert provided excellent and courteous service for those of us in attendance. Although the crowd was somewhat numerous, the marshals were very liberal in letting the crowd "do their own thing."

On Nov. 1, 1978, I was again in attendance at a Mother's Finest concert in Trask Coliseum. This time the marshals on duty were very stringent, dictatorial and plain out dogmatic in their treatment of the people in attendance. The most astonishing part of this concert is that there was not even a third of the people at Mother's Finest that there was at the Outlaws concert. The tactics employed by the concert marshals were not that of marshals employed at the Outlaws show, but something this side of what was used by the Gestapo in Nazi Germany. Almost everyone was confined to one space despite the fact that there was room for mobility. Marshals were ordering, not asking, the people to remain silent and in place. Have you ever heard of such at a rock concert?

Questions: Why the about-face in the Mother's Finest concert? Why the flashy lights shining at the people? Why

"I WROTE THAT SONG."

Corrections

In a cutline last week, the Seahawk stated that the Halloween dance of October 28 was sponsored by the SGA Dance Committee. The dance was jointly sponsored by the Dance Committee, Resident's Action Team and OutHawk Committee.

In a story in the October 25 Seahawk, it was stated that WLOZ radio would need a $2000 operating budget in its first year as a 100-watt station. The correct figure is $20,000. The Seahawk regrets the errors.

Procedural matters dominate discussion of Student Legislature

By Bobby Parker
Editor

Procedural matters dominated discussion at the Student Legislature meeting Thursday night, while the hour-long meeting was recessed as one of the shortest this year. Senior class President Patricia Blanton presided in the absence of SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca.

Junior Vice-president Jack Allen re-introduced a motion which would allow clubs and organizations requesting funds from the SGA to go directly to the Finance Committee without being referred to the Legislature. The motion was defeated.

Allen said that his motion would make it easier and faster for groups requesting money. The current procedure mandates that the group come to the Legislature, which will take direct action or refer them to the Finance Committee. The committee then meets and brings a recommendation back to the Legislature at its next meeting.

The initial appearance before the Legislature, Allen said, is "silly" and "ridiculous" because the groups are almost always referred to committee. Allen's motion would have also required money requests to be sent automatically to committee unless a majority of legislators overrode this provision.

Allen said that the legislators had become "high-brow" in their own procedures" and were wasting the time of representatives of groups asking for money.

But Representative Wes Armstrong pointed out that there is only an eight-day period for the current procedure and suggested this is not a long delay.

Other legislators said that the Finance Committee does not meet regularly, but only meets when business has been referred by the Legislature.

The vote on the motion was solidly against, despite Allen's assertion that SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan, who also chairs the Finance Committee, supported the new procedure.

The Legislature also conducted a lengthy debate over a change in the operating rules proposed by Vice-president DeLuca. DeLuca had asked that those legislators arriving late or leaving early for meetings be charged with one-half absence.

(Any legislator who accumulates three absences faces removal from office under current SGA rules.)

The motion failed as most legislators raised objections to the provision concerning leaving meetings early.

In other business, the Legislature adopted a resolution proposed by Senior Vice-president Karin Whaley concerning equal funding of women's athletics under federal regulations (Title IX).

Whaley reported that while attending a student rights conference in New Orleans last month, she had learned that Title IX requires funding of a women's team if the school maintains a corresponding team for men and there is interest expressed in a women's team.

The motion was directed at UNCW's soccer program.

Currently, there is a men's soccer team funded by the Athletic Department and a women's soccer team supported in part by SGA.

Whaley's motion passed without opposition.

The Legislature approved a request for $150 from the Biology Club for travel expenses and a tropical fish and plant show scheduled this weekend. An $80 request for the show was approved without change, but the request for travel was reduced from $125 to $70.

The club is planning a camping trip which will be open to all students but aimed toward biology students.

A request for travel money from the Sailing Club was not acted upon because of a flaw in the club's proposed charter. The charter, submitted to SGA for approval Thursday, did not contain a non-discrimination statement which is required of all SGA-chartered organizations.

Absent from the meeting in addition to Vice-president DeLuca were legislators Sarah Deen, Dan Osborne, Karin Weise, Tammy Lancaster, Ray Blackburn, and Bob Loomis.

The Legislature meets Thursday at 7 p.m. in C218.

National Endowment expands research fellowship program with emphasis on teaching

The National Endowment for the Humanities announced that it is expanding its program of research and study fellowships to put new emphasis on helping undergraduate teachers further their own scholarship and strengthen their teaching abilities in college humanities courses.

The Endowment will continue to offer fellowships enabling scholars, teachers and others to undertake fulltime independent study and research in their fields and to offer them the opportunity to produce works in the various areas of the humanities.

The National Endowment, established by Congress in 1965, is the government's principle agency supporting scholarship in a wide array of academic pursuits and aiding projects designed to foster broad public participation in cultural and educational programs.

A new division of the fellowship programs (known as category "B") is aimed at scholars primarily engaged in undergraduate teaching, in the early stages of their careers. The fellowships, offered for periods of six or twelve months, are designed to free those scholars to pursue studies that will broaden their abilities in teaching humanities courses and, at the same time, enable them to make their own contributions to scholarship in the humanities.

The stipends for this category range up to $10,000 for the six-month fellowship and a maximum of $20,000 for the twelve-month study period.

The application deadline for the approximately 100 fellowships to be available in 1979-80 is Oct. 30, 1978. For the 135 fellowships expected to be available in 1980-81, the deadline is June 1, 1979.

The Humanities Endowment is also continuing its Category "A" fellowships which are designed to provide study and research time for scholars teachers and non-academics whose work seems "likely to lead to significant contributions to humanistic thought and knowledge." These fellowships are also for six- and twelve-month periods with maximum stipends of $10,000 and $20,000, respectively. It is hoped that 135 fellowships in this category will be available in 1980-81. The deadline for applying is June 1, 1979. Forms should be available in early 1979.

A third category of continuing Endowment fellowships, Category "C", provides opportunities to undergraduate teachers to participate in seminars with distinguished scholars and undertake further work on their own beyond the seminars. Preference is given to applicants who have been teaching at the college level for three years. This is a year-long fellowship with a maximum stipend of $20,000. Approximately 65 such fellowships will be available in 1979-80 with an application deadline of Nov. 13, 1978. The deadline date for applying for 1980-81 awards is Nov. 12, 1979.

Further information and application forms are available from the Division of Fellowships, Stop 101, National Endowment for the Humanities, 806 15th Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20506.

Tutoring in business available

Sigma Alpha Beta is once again offering tutoring services to students in the Business Department. Tutors will be available to help students in the following courses:

Accounting 201-202, 301-302
Business 304, 335, 461-462
Economics 251-252
Math 121-122

English Business Reports

The tutoring services has been changed somewhat since last year. Now the student desiring a tutor should call the tutor and together they can agree on a time. The list of tutors and their phone numbers can be found on the SAB bulletin board downstairs in Bear Hall.

Persistent radical of sixties seeks to stamp out illiteracy by Dr. Richard Meisler

ANN ARBOR, MI. (CPS)--You can be certain he sets his sights high: "I've never written a book without intending to change the world." The speaker was Jonathan Kozol, the prize-winning author, much-lauded teacher, a persistent radical who doesn't believe the sixties are over.

After you listen to him for a while, especially as he spins his tales of the Cuban revolution and speaks of the possibilities of change in America, you begin to think he may be right.

Kozol's energy and enthusiasm are enormous. A very youthful 42, he is thin, short, behind wire-rimmed glasses, and a compulsive talker. At breakfast, for example, he drinks large quantities of tea, but leaves his bacon and eggs untouched. The reason is obvious: it isn't necessary to chew tea, so the monologue need not be interrupted.

Although the monologue is Kozol's natural form of speech, it's easy to take because his positions are intelligent and deeply felt. The ego tripping is there, as it is with almost every public figure, but in Kozol it is well controlled and subordinated to the issues.

Besides, he's talking about nothing less than ending illiteracy in America within 12 months.

His newest book is about literacy and education in Cuba. Kozol was not only moved by his experiences there, but, being Kozol, he was inspired to apply what he learned in Cuba to the United States. And being Kozol, his Cuban lessons are the point of not just his book, but a national movement he's trying to start by touring college campuses this fall.

The book is Children of the Revolution—A Yankee Teacher in the Cuban Schools. In it Kozol describes Cuba's 1961 "Great Campaign," in which 100,000 students—virtually all between the ages of 10 and 19—went to live in the mountains and villages of the nation to teach their uneducated elders how to read. In nine months, basic literacy rose to the highest level in the hemisphere. Kozol goes on to describe how, in the ensuing years, the Cuban educational system was re-structured on the Great Campaign's accomplishments.

GROOVY DOMES

Kozol's dream is to make the same thing happen here, and to make it happen within 12 months.

He's already visualized it: "High school and college students and teachers, working for subsistence wages, will teach their fellow students to read, giving them the power of the word."

Not only will the adult students learn to read, but their young teachers will come to know America deeply, and they will, Kozol expects, be radicalized.

Kozol, not coincidentally, sees himself as a radical, a

Jonathan Kozol

...seeking an end to illiteracy socialist, and also as a patriot. "I like my country. I even like my father, despite the fact that I'm Jewish and not supposed to."

Most radicals, he believes, put too much energy into talking about the distant future.

"They talk about groovy geodesic domes rather than about the actual leaky roofs where people live today." Kozol tries to look at the middle distance, urging people to choose "battles that are big enough to matter but small enough to win." The literacy program, he thinks, is such a battle.

"Teaching reading is not the mystery we pretend that it is," Kozol says. The Cuban experience shows that the commitment must be total, the teachers must not be condescending and the subject matter must be real. The primers, which Kozol hopes to help write, might start with sentences like, "The country is rich but food prices are very high," or "We must wait hours to see a doctor in the emergency room."

Kozol's Cuban trip was made possible by Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.), who helped him get the visa he'd be requesting for six years. McGovern himself has proposed a National Literacy Commission, and Kozol sees his volunteer campaign as a natural first step. He hopes McGovern's bill will pass in early 1979, that student volunteers can be recruited by the spring and that their work can begin in the summer. If so, he thinks "adult illiteracy in America can be eliminated by Christmas of 1979."

He's working on recruiting teachers right now. Thus far, his campus receptions have been warm, perhaps helped by the critique of conventional education in his first book, Death At An Early Age, still a big campus seller. Kozol, moreover, is a compelling speaker. When he lectures, he ends by collecting names and addresses for his list of literacy volunteers. He claims hundreds of people sign up at each lecture.

"You will hear from me," he pledges, and there's no doubt about it: he means it.

NCNB to offer savings fund transfers under new law

North Carolina National Bank has announced details on the new NCNB Max Account, its version of the pre-authorized transfer of funds from savings to checking.

NCNB will offer the service beginning Nov. 1 under an amended regulation issued by the Federal Reserve Board. The regulation now permits banks to link customers' savings and checking accounts so they can keep all their funds in an interest-bearing account and have access to the money by writing an ordinary check.

NCNB officials said Max Accounts are expected to appeal most to customers who can maintain more than a few hundred dollars on average in their savings accounts. The Max Account has no service charges for a customer who maintains an average monthly savings balance of $2,500 or more.

Charges for a Max Account with an average balance between $2,000 and $2,499 will be $1 a month, ranging upward to a $5 monthly charge for balances of less than $499.

Interest earned at the daily compounded rate of 5 percent on savings balances may provide a benefit greater than any service charges.

An NCNB spokesman said,

"The Max Account is designed to provide our customers interest on every dollar they put in the bank. And it permits them to earn this interest right up until the day they withdraw funds by writing a check."

The Max Account will be offered by the university branch of NCNB in Wilmington, located at 502 South College Road.

Football team takes title with defense

The precision execution of the Seahawk defense enabled the Hawks to win against a very talented and strong Wolfpack team.

The victory was UNCW's fourth in as many outings in conference play and gave the Hawks all four ACC schools they played. Wake Forest, Duke, UNC Chapel Hill and N.C. State.

The Wolfpack managed a 9-0 lead, in a hard fought defensive battle, first half. Taking the opening kick off on the 3 yard line, State returned the ball to the 20. On first down the State quarterback found his wide receiver open in the secondary of the Hawks and completed the pass for a 50 yard gain. After three more plays, the Wolfpack had gained only one yard, so on came the field goal unit, the kick of 44 yards was good and the score stood 3-0, NC State.

After each team had tried twice and failed to move the ball, only having to kick it away, the break came for NC State. The Hawks had the ball 3 down, 8 yards to go on the 33 yard line when Doug Browning fumbled. A State linebacker scooped up the fumble and ran 33 yards for the score. The extra point was blocked wide by big Dan Joye. So the Wolfpack had a 9-0 lead and things seemed bleak for the Hawks.

The Hawks offense came to life and began to take charge. Starting on the 21 yard line the Hawks ran 27 plays in a row and moved the State 1 foot line only to be stopped short and empty handed. The half ended 9-0 State.

Late in the third period and still down 9-0, the Hawks had the ball on their own 19 yard line with fourth down 8 yards to go. Steve Underwood went back in punt formation, on the snap he faked the punt, ran left, spotted Mark Doll on the side lines and lofted a pass into Doll's waiting arms. Surrounded by four State players, Doll broke right, picked up a block by Chris Nichols which opened the hole, started across the field and picked up a wall of Seahawk blockers and scampered into the end zone for a 81 yard touchdown play. Underwood kicked the extra point and the Hawks were alive, trailing 9-7.

Early in the fourth quarter,

Steve Underwood picked off a Wolfpack pass and returned it down the sidelines for a 28 yard touchdown. Extra point by Underwood was good and the Seahawks were ahead 14-9.

With time running out, State tried but the Seahawk defense would not let them move the ball and time ran out.

The outstanding offensive player for the game was Mark Doll. The entire defense played a strong game, with Steve Underwood.

Next home game for the Seahawks is Sunday, Nov. 12 at 1:00 p.m. against a fine team from Robbins N.C. Robbins record is 5-2. The only common opponent is UNC-Chapel Hill. The Hawks won that game 12-7. Robbins defeated UNC-Chapel Hill 32-6.

Coach Don Corry said the Hawks will be ready and looking forward to this game as a "tune up for the State Playoffs. Robbins defeated UNCW last year and we would like to even the score."

Tennis looks toward winning year

by Craig Way
Staff Writer

The women's tennis team upped their season record to 6-5 with a 9-0 shutout of Mt. Olive College on October 30th. Freshmen Gigi Trelinski and Connie Gemboys led the way to the victory, Trelinski winning her match 6-3, 6-1 and Gemboys taking her contest, 7-5, 6-4. Other winners in singles matches were Brenda Kalevas, 6-1, 6-2; Lowrey Sorensen, 6-1, 6-3; and Carolyn Bender, 6-0, 6-1.

In the doubles matches, Trelinski and Gemboys teamed up for an 8-3 victory; Bender and Theresa Reaves matched that with another 8-3 triumph, and Kalevas and Sorensen easily took their match by an 8-0 count. The Seahawk's next action is tomorrow against Wingate College.

Defensive standouts stars of football squad

by Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

As you probably know by now, the 78-79 Seahawk football team are the Eastern Champions. Two reasons for this are defensive back and team captain Mark Doll, and standout linebacker Tim "Tinker" Owens.

Doll came to the UNCW football team via Hibritten high school up in the mountains near Boone, N.C. Doll was a star athlete in track as well as in football. Doll played both these varsity sports for four years.

Doll is no stranger to college football having played football at Marquette University. Doll came to UNCW in the spring of 1977. In the fall of that year, Doll tried out for the UNCW program that was still in its infancy. Mark eventually won a starting position and almost instantly became a defensive standout.

Doll says the difference between this year's team as opposed to last year's squad is that this team responds to emotion. Emotion, says Doll, is the key to igniting the present Seahawk squad. Doll admires his teammates. He is especially proud of defensive tackle Donald Borden, and defensive back Steve Underwood. Doll comments on the fact that both of these players have never played before, but have been excellent thus far. Doll himself has played under adverse conditions. A fact that bespeaks this is that Mark broke his leg in the second game of the season, but returned four weeks later to be an integral part of the Seahawk program.

Owens is another athlete who can be counted on in the clutch. Owens hails from Easton, Mass. where he went to Oliver Ames high school. Owens played four years of varsity football. He started at the linebacker position his final two years. Owens was good enough to receive letters from several colleges, but opted to come to UNCW because of the Marine Biology program.

At 5' 11", 170 pounds, Owens is not considered your average college linebacker. Note the fact that he is always in on every tackle and has the speed to stay with speedy tailbacks. Owens likes life down south and visits the beaches before every game. Owens says this is his way of getting psyched for a game.

Volleyball team closes season with tri-match

A season of experience gained but matches-lost for the UNCW women's volleyball team comes to an end this Tuesday (Nov. 7) when the She-Hawk spikers travel to N.C. Central for a tri-match with NCCU and High Point.

Coach Judy Peel has seen her first-year club compile a rather disappointing 3-14 mark, with very few highlights of the won-lost variety, but still the young coach has seen some things that have pleased her.

"The number one thing that has been rewarding for me this season is the consistent desire to improve on the part of the team," Peel says. "With only a few exceptions, we have hustled and played hard every time out, but when you're outmatched in experience, sometimes even giving your best isn't quite good enough."

Peel loses only two seniors off of her first UNCW squad—Aida Vincent and Betsy Massari. Massari has been the top individual performer on the team this year, but the majority of the other club members will return.

Seahawks lose tough match to Gamecocks

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The Seahawk soccer team dropped a tough, 3-1, decision to the South Carolina Gamecocks this past Saturday in their final home match of the season. Earlier, on Tuesday (Oct. 31), the Hawks shut out Methodist, 2-0.

The Methodist-UNCW match developed into a scoreless affair until late in the game. With 2:40 remaining in the game, Eddie Brock broke the ice as he scored the Seahawks first goal. Then, with less than a minute left, Chi Chi Mercado scored the Hawk's second goal on an assist from Ed Donahue. UNCW outshot Methodist, 21-4, in recording their third shut-out of the year.

The Seahawks lost to an "extremely physical" South Carolina squad in a very hard fought contest. UNCW scored the game's initial goal when John Miller headed in a corner kick from Eddie Brock, 11 minutes into the match. South Carolina tied the score at 1-1 before the first half ended. The two teams played evenly for much of the second half until the Gamecocks scored their second goal with 15 minutes remaining. USC scored their third and final goal on a break-away with one minute to go, as the Hawks were trying to tie the game.

"I'm very proud of our team for the way they came back in the second half," UNCW coach Calvin Lane said. "South Carolina is an extremely physical team and they banged us around pretty good early, but we hung in there and gave them a real battle."

The loss, which leaves the Hawks at 11-5 for the season, casts serious doubts on any post season play for the team. Both UNCW and USC were in the playoff picture prior to the contest. The Gamecocks are now 11-3-1 and in the running for a playoff spot.

The season's finale for the Hawks will be against Duke, in Durham today at 3:00 p.m.

November, December, and January are the "big" months as far as sports are concerned. Football begins to wind down. The big Turkey Day match-ups decide who goes to the bowl games. So when you are home, eating cranberry sauce and potato salad, check out the big games. There will be several college games and one or two pro football contests and everyone seems to give a little bit more on Thanksgiving. After those games, the New Year's Day bowl events are what everyone looks forward to. Then the really big one, the Super Bowl.

Also coming to a close is the soccer season and the playoffs. Everyone is keeping their fingers crossed, hoping UNCW will get an invitation.

On the other hand, just starting up is the basketball season. All over the country, very tall people will be bouncing a basketball from one end of the hardwood to the other. In the North Carolina-South Carolina area, basketball mania will run rampant. UNCW's own men and women's basketball teams are in the middle of practice for the upcoming season. Coaches Mel Gibson and Eve Carmen are looking forward to the new year.

The swimming team has opened practice, preparing for the first meet on Nov. 18 against Pfeiffer College. Coach Allen believes that the Seahawks will be very competitive again in 1978-79.

UNCW begins second year under Carmen

By John Justus
Sports Information Director
UNCW

The UNC-Wilmington women's basketball team, under the direction of second-year coach Eve Carmen, has begun preparations for an expanded and demanding 24-game schedule in 1978-79.

With four starters returning (all of them sophomores) from last season's 9-9 club, which finished strong by winning its final five contests, Carmen is cautiously optimistic.

"It sounds strange to say that we're inexperienced with four starters coming back," Carmen points out, "but that is very much the case. Those four have only one full season of college competition behind them, and we have just one senior and no juniors on the team."

"We're going to have to develop real fast, or we'll wind up in the same place we were in last year--having to win a lot just to get even."

"The teams on our schedule, for the most part, are well-established. I think we have the talent to play with them, but asking freshmen (nine of them) and sophomores to play like juniors and seniors is a mighty big request."

Top players returning for the Lady 'Hawks are forwards Jenny Allen (17.3 ppg) and April Lewis (13.3). Last year's starting backcourt of Jennifer Heath and Kathy Lothspeich also returns, but the twosome combined for only 12 points per game last season. The lone senior on the roster is guard Terri Kirby, who saw a good deal of action in 77-78 as a reserve and parttime starter.

The nine newcomers bring some much-needed size to the UNCW team, and Carmen indicates that all 14 players could be used in games this season.

"We don't have any superstars," the coach says. "We have been stressing fundamentals and the team concepts of basketball in our preseason work. Everyone on this team has the ability to contribute to our effort this season and I'm looking forward to watching this squad develop."

The 78-79 opener for UNCW is Nov. 28th at Duke with the first home game following two days later versus Peace College. A complete schedule will be released next week.

to be offered

A snow skiing class will be offered by the Physical Education Department Dec. 17-21 at a cost of $85. Students must sign up at pre-registration, Oct. 31-Nov. 10, in the P.E. departmental office in Trask Coliseum.

The course includes four sessions of skiing at Appalachian Ski Mountain in Boone, N.C. All instruction, equipment (skis, boots and poles) and slope and lift fees are included in the registration cost. Also included will be three nights lodging (three to a room).

An orientation session will be held in Hanover Hall on Nov. 16 at 6:30 p.m. All participants must attend the orientation, at which time a $20 deposit is due.

For more information, contact Ann Kroft in the P.E. Department. The course will carry one hour of academic credit.

Service fraternity to conduct rock-a-thon

by Ray Warren
Features Editor

To a large segment of the public, college students seem to be a totally self-centered, hedonistic lot. This weekend, however, a group of students will attempt to alter this dim public image. Alpha Phi Omega, which bills itself as UNCW's only coed service fraternity, will be sponsoring a rock-a-thon at Long Leaf Mall.

The recipient of the proceeds from the fraternity's efforts will be Odgen Rescue Squad. Odgen, one of two volunteer squads in the county, serves the area north of Oleander Drive. Although it receives some funds from county government, the rescue group's existence depends largely on public donations.

According to Marion Eppler, publicity chair for A.P.O., a rocking chair will be in continuous operation from 10 a.m. Thursday until 10 p.m. Saturday. Various volunteers will take their turn in the moving seat. The marathon will not break a record, (that, according to A.P.O. project chair Robin Rombland, would take seven days), but it seems to be something of a first for Wilmington.

The local community has become involved in this project also. According to Rombland, "We have posters up from the Hampstead liquor store to Long Leaf Mall." At 10 a.m. Thursday, numerous local dignitaries will be on hand to cut a ceremonial ribbon. Present will be Wilmington Mayor Ben Halterman, City Councilman Joe Dunn, Vice-chancellor William Malloy, and representatives of Odgen Rescue Squad. Several elderly women have also called to offer their rocking expertise after things get under way.

A.P.O. spokesmen report that entertainment will also be featured during the marathon. Two UNCW students, Wendy McLean and Jeff Jones (winner of the OcalaHawk open mile competition) have already agreed to appear, and several other acts are being lined up.

Whether this year's rock-a-thon is a success or not depends largely on support from the student body. Says Rombland, "We just want the people to know that college students do more than drink beer and raise cane. We want to show the community we have something constructive to offer."

LIVING BY THE SEA

The Stillpoint: Catholic students organizing

by Vivan Martindale
Campus Minister

There is something new under the sun. As UNCW grows we attract more and more out-of-town and out-of-state students. With this influx of new blood come students from a variety of religious traditions. One of the fastest growing groups has been those who are a part of the Roman Catholic Church.

A number of Catholic students (Larry Hewlette, Cindy Cole, Cindy Duchame, Brian Redman) have come together in recent weeks and expressed an interest in providing an opportunity for Roman Catholic students to identify themselves to one another. They sense a need for community, a need to affirm and celebrate their tradition and to join in a common expression of their faith.

In an effort to bring this about they met with me and Fr. Frank Moeslein of St. Mark's Catholic Church. The result is special Thanksgiving Mass which will be held Thursday, Nov. 16, at 5 p.m. at St. Mark's Roman Catholic Church on Eastwood Road going toward Wrightsville Beach. Anyone from the UNCW community is heartily invited.

Following the Mass there will be a wine and cheese social with special guest, Mr. Rick Haraway, director of Young Adult Ministries for the Diocese of Raleigh. He will explore the possibilities of forming a Newman Club with those who attend. Give it a try, and celebrate together. More next week.

Review

Mother's Finest presents masterpiece

Last year it was Brink heading the "Rock and Soul Inaugural" with the unknown Controllers playing first, and a little known but coming-around group named Mother's Finest playing second. When Mother's Finest was through the crowd wanted more. Instead, much to the crowd's as well as my displeasure, we received Brink trying to top a fantastic performance. They couldn't.

On Nov. 1, 1978, Mother's Finest appeared in Trask Coliseum to do an encore. It was a masterpiece.

First, a soothing Atlantic Star played music similar to Earth, Wind & Fire and Ohio Players. They have good rhythm and strong vocalists. Although they might never be a very popular band they still put out excellent music.

Then came Evelyn "Champagne" King. At 18, Miss King has the vocals, band and dance steps to be a big star. The crowd appreciated Miss King's efforts as if she were the headliner of the show. Climaxing her performance was "Shame," the song that made her popular. Miss King mixed her talented voice with her dancing to end a perfect performance which the crowd seemed to love. For an encore Miss King did a short reprise of "Shame." It was an enjoyable performance done to perfection by such a young star.

The moment everyone was waiting for had arrived. Mother's Finest had come on stage. For the next hour and 45 minutes everyone would be dancing, screaming and jamming to some funky rock and soul music.

The performance Mother's Finest put out was fantastic. Lead singer Joyce "Baby Jean" Kennedy has a funky voice much like Tina Turner. Bass player "Wizard" has hands quicker than the Six Million Dollar Man. Co-lead singer Clehn Bailey Murdock III has more moves than O. J.

Simpson and an excellent voice. Guitarist Moses Mo was fantastic as was drummer "B. B. Queen" Borden and keyboards player "Mike."

Mother's Finest is a professional group and cares about the music they put out. They are a close group and should be more popular than they are. I enjoyed the concert as much as any other I've ever heard (except Jackson Browne).

Only a crowd of around 2,000 showed up, which is typical of Wilmington's support of concerts, but they responded very well. David Carter and Wes Knappe work very hard on these concerts, but nobody realizes it. Both being students, they must divide their time between studies, work and the concert committee.

When Walker O'Quinn left school last year he left the vacancy of Concert Committee chairmanship. David Carter filled that role and has done a magnificent job. We've had Heatwave, Outlaws, Wet Willie and now Mother's Finest. There hasn't been decent ticket sales at any of these concerts because the public is a little slack. Six dollars for three hours isn't bad at all. If you drink beer, a six pack will last an hour at a cost of $2.00-$2.60 per pack. For three hours that would be around $6.90 average. So instead of sitting at home drinking, come to a concert and enjoy yourself—and come out cheaper. Nantucket will be here the first week of December so get off your tails and be there.

Mother's Finest was a helluva concert and we owe it all to David Carter and Wes Knappe.

Meeting set tonight

In conjunction with Father Frank's efforts toward forming a Newman Club, some local Catholic students have already begun to meet together. This group hopes to be the nucleus around which to form a Catholic-oriented fellowship. Concerns they would like to emphasize are providing transportation to Mass on Sundays and holy days, joint observance or such events such as Advent and Lent, and discussion of moral and religious attitudes and problems. These Catholic students will meet in room 418 of Galloway Hall tonight at 6:30.

Even a minor accident can be deadly

Campus Digest News Service

An experience few are able to avoid is involvement in at least one minor car accident. Lately, with the increase in these fender-benders there has been a rise in the violent reactions of the victims.

This year in Chicago alone there have been five incidents of killings following a minor accident. The city of Los Angeles reported 84 instances where cars were used to physically assault other drivers. One example, which occurred on a California freeway, involved four drivers who chased each other for over an hour and in the process damaged more than 100 other cars.

Firefall release blends rock, easy listening

Firefall, released in 1976 was the beginning of a band destined to become one of the great bands of the 70's. In 1977 Luna Sea was released and showed a continual climb in talent and maturity. In early October the third disc appeared on the music stands for Firefall. Elan is a classy album blending rock & roll with easy listening with the central theme being the pleasures and despairs that relate to love and romance.

In 1974 the band was started by Rick Roberts (guitar, lead vocals) and Jock Bartley (guitar, vocals). Roberts along with Larry Burnett (lead vocals, guitar) composed most of the cuts put on the vinyl although other members wrote compositions also. The other half of Firefall are Mark Andes (bass guitar, vocals), Michael Clarke (drums, formerly from the Bryds), and the multi-talented David Muse (reeds, keyboards).

The single release, "Strange Way" (Rick Roberts), opens the LP. Many couples can relate to this problem. She only loves him when she needs him but he won't accept the love in that way or give any under those conditions.

"Sweet and Sour" (Jock Bartley & Rick Roberts) is the contrast between his "sweet love" and the bittersweet memories that remain after the romance went "sour".

"Wrong Side of Town" (Larry Burnett) gives a brief profile of the folks which reside on the "wrong side of town."

"Count Your Blessings" (Rick Roberts) is a moving cut that reveals that if you lose your love, don't look back and ruin your life thinking about what you lost but what you can have and "count your blessings."

Someone who is always used tries to "Get You Back" (Larry Burnett) because he can't understand what happened. In this cut she wants to come back and he wants to be different and "get her back."

The second side of the disc begins with a rocker, "Anymore" (Rick Roberts and Mark Andes). It reveals that sometimes love makes you blind. You can't tell the difference between love and war because she changes her mind so much. He also doesn't know what she thinks about him "anymore."

"Baby" (Larry Burnett) is a beautiful cut and is my favorite. "Baby" reveals a situation that many can relate to in that many drift away from each other even though it is not what you want to happen.

A destined classic is Rick Roberts' "Goodbye, I Love You", telling of a man who feels he can't give enough love when his lover really needs it. He will leave her so she can find someone who will be able to do this for her.

"Sweet Ann" sums up the theme of the LP with the message that everyone should be with the one they love.

The final cut of the disc "Winds of Change" tells that things change as frequently as the wind.

Firefall has changed only for the better and I'm looking forward to their 1979 release.

'Smokey and the Bandit' screened by Fine Arts

"It's all action, laced with Citizen Ban communiques, and made solid with those sterling personalities—best in the biz—Reynolds and Gleason." So wrote the New York Post regarding the next movie to be presented by the Fine Arts Committee at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium on Tuesday, Nov. 7.

The movie is entitled "Smokey and the Bandit." Variety Magazine refers to it as the "Screwball Comedy."

This box office moneymaker stars Burt Reynolds as the Bandit and Jackie Gleason as "Smokey" who is out to catch him. The Bandit must get a truckload of Coors Beer from Texas to Georgia so that he can collect his $80,000 reward.

"Smokey and the Bandit" is filmed in color and hurtles along at a breakneck pace starring Sally Field along with Reynolds and Gleason. It is rated PG. The admission to this action packed movie, except for those possessing season passes, will be 50 cents for students with ID cards and $1.00 for non-students.

Anniversary series continues with organ recital by Wiley

The fifth organ recital in the Golden Anniversary Recital Series at First Presbyterian Church will be played by Frank Wiley on Sunday, Nov. 12, at 5:00 p.m. Dr. Wiley is a member of the faculty of the Department of Creative Arts.

The program will include compositions by Sibelius,

Parris, Mendelssohn, Kremer, Brahms, and Franck. The series commemorates the 50th anniversary of the installation of the three-manual E.M. Skinner organ in 1928. The instrument was recently renovated by the Thompson-Allen Company of New Haven, Connecticut.

'Born Again:' Trial and tribulation

How can one write a book, and then make a movie, on the controversial subjects of religion and politics without stepping on any toes?

Well, there are two ways: do some clever dance steps and don't ask for money, or appeal to everybody's better instincts and still don't ask for money. The movie, "Born Again," based on the autobiography (of the same title) of a former White House counsel to Richard Nixon, Charles Colson, semi-effectively accomplishes these two tasks. It appeals to every man's basic goodness, yet it also does some clumsy dancing and crushes a few toes. However, there is no need to repent this fact, as the toes ground by the heel of fate are those that have no basic goodness: for example, an ex-President, and some conniving aides.

"Born Again" follows the events just prior to the Watergate scandal, but focuses primarily upon the leak of the Pentagon Papers to the American public, courtesy of Daniel Ellsberg. Charles Colson, played by Dean Jones, is shown as Nixon's chief hatchet-man operating coolly and maliciously, in the Sin-City of Washington, D.C., as he carries out orders for the break-in at Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office as a retaliation measure for the leak of the Pentagon Papers. But we get another glimpse of Colson's personality besides being Nixon's right-hand man. He is shown in private moments as a man searching for some degree of spiritual awareness. With the aid of a close friend (Dana Andrews), Colson finds God just as all hell breaks loose in Washington.

There is some moralizing and agonizing as Colson tries to determine his responsibility in the Ellsberg break-in. But eventually he must testify, in front of God and Country, to his misdeeds. He is found guilty, by both, and is sent to Maxwell AFB Federal Work Camp to break spiritual rocks. It is in the federal work camp that Colson seals his faith and even adds two more to the heavenly roster: a tough inmate who is actually a peacemaker in prison disputes (Raymond St.-Jacques), and a quiet, deliberate strong-arm (Robert Gray).

This movie has some genuinely touching moments as we follow Colson's trial and his later tribulations as a convict. The screenplay, by Walter Bloch, does not overdramatize the religious aspects, but works with the irony of a powerful man reduced drastically in public and private stature. But even with the religious aspects toned down, the political implications are a tad trite. Nixon, played in an unintentionally humorous way by look-alike Harry Spillman, is represented as a modern-day Julius Caesar with ante-diluvian morals. Henry Kissinger (Peter Jurasik) is reduced to a mere yes-men; in fact, his only line was, "Yes, Mr. President." There must be some semblance of truth, but it is amateurishly distorted for a certain effect which they seek to achieve with a minimum of revealing dialogue and a maximum of biblical imagery.

Dean Jones is sensitive in his portrayal of Charles Colson. He affects a back-stabbing cold-bloodedness of the pre-Ellsberg trial Colson, yet can show the inner ambiguity with a mere expression of movement.

"Born Again" is now showing at the New Centre Cinema.

Omega Psi Phi fraternity emerges on UNCW campus

In October of 1911, four enterprising young men on the campus of Howard University in Washington, D.C., got together and decided to create a fraternity. The four men, Brother Love, Brother Coleman, Brother Just, and Brother Young, organized the Omega Psi Phi fraternity. Life on most of our colleges and universities throughout this great land would never be the same again, the organizers promised.

The Omega Psi Phi fraternity (nicknamed Ques) has dominated campus partying fraternal life since its inception. Known for their flamboyant lifestyle, Ques are most infamous for their ways of attracting attention. Stepping, a movement of unison by the fraternity, is what Ques are most noted for. Ques are legends on black campuses and the fame is now spreading to other campuses that have a black population. UNCW is one of those campuses that can now claim that there is a Que faction on it.

On Dec. 17, 1977, three UNCW students were inducted into the Omicron Alpha chapter of the Omega Psi Phi fraternity. They were Derrick R. Anderson, Paul Hardison, and William White. In April of this year four more UNCW students crossed the burning sands. These Omega men were Carl Bragg, Sinclair Harris, Maurice Smith and Captain Newborn.

Johnny can read, chemistry up in smoke

Campus Digest News Service
While the fictitious student Johnny is starting to return to the three R's there seems to be an interesting gap in his scientific education:

A recent study funded by the National Science Foundation indicates there has been a decline in the emphasis of science in the elementary and high schools. Two University of Illinois professors headed the team of researchers who spent one to three months studying 11 schools districts across the United States.

The survey indicated teachers have begun to reemphasize reading and writing skills at the expense of many of the new experimental programs developed. Teachers are now aiming toward a more liberal education that prepares students for the responsibilities of the world.

$1000 paid for answer to 'What is a clamato?'

Feel creative?

Well, you can earn $1,000 for a good imaginative idea according to Raymond M. Anrig, president of the Duffy-Mott Company. Anrig will pay that much (plus second and third prize awards of $500 and $250) to the college student who comes up with the winning answer to "What is a Clamato?"

Where is it found? Does it grow? Who invented it? Do you eat it, drink it, pickle it? Where do you buy it? In a hardware store, a supermarket, an apothecary shop? Is it sexy?

This unusual research challenge has been hurled at America's college population to find the most intriguing and humorous definition of a Clamato, whatever it is.

A panel of famous judges will select the winners, according to Anrig, who said the competition will be extended until

Dec. 15, 1978.

The contest is open to any current full-time college student in the United States.

The answer to "What is a Clamato?" can be submitted in the form of an article, short story, fable, a painting, cartoon, jingle, photograph, sculpture, or any other means a student may employ. Contestants may enter as many times as they wish and no proof of purchase is necessary.

All entries should be sent to: What is a Clamato Contest, 17th Floor, 1212 Avenue of the Americans, New York, NY 10036.

Entries and ideas cannot be returned and will become the property of the Duffy-Mott Company. Decisions of the judges will be final. Be sure to provide your name and address as well as the name of your college or university with your entry.

Marine Science journal now being distributed

Forum is a quarterly student publication of current undergraduate research in the marine sciences conducted at UNCW. The journal is produced by the Marine Science Program and funded by the Student Government Association.

The journal bears the name of one of the most ubiquitous organisms found in the ocean.

Forum was chosen to exemplify the aspirations of the journal's first editions: that is, to devote the publication to the multiple facets of the seas and, like forums, to be truly representative of marine sciences.

A special edition containing UNCW student reports of the National Science Foundation student-originated studies is now available in the Marine Science Program office, the library or the SGA office, free of charge.

War display open at county museum

The streets of London were the scene of bustling activity on the morning of May 1, 1851. People of all classes were hurrying to the opening of the great exhibition in Hyde Park, a 26-acre expanse of green lawns and English elms. The object of interest was the Crystal Palace, a vast and glittering building designed to display "The Works of Industry Of All Nations."

It was an age of progress, and progress was a thought much in the minds of 19th century men--and justifiably. Never had men been more conscious of triumphing over the world about them, and never had they advanced at such speed. No one would have speculated that the next 63 years would witness the onset of two world wars which would drastically change the order of Victorian Europe and its influence on the United States.

The New Hanover County Museum at 814 Market Street is currently exhibiting a collection of World War I and World War II artifacts. Included in the display will be period uniforms, weaponry, a collection of World War II watercolors by Henry J. MacMillan, photographs, political campaign buttons, and other memorabilia associate with this period of world history. Museum hours are Tuesday-Saturday, 9-5; and Sundays, 2-5. Admission is free.

Federal agency to conduct energy research here

by J. Dillon Bryant
Staff Writer

UNCW has been chosen as a site for a geothermal experiment expected to start within the next few weeks. Gruy Federal, Inc. has a contract with the U.S. Department of Energy, specifically with the Division of Geothermal Research, to drill a 1000-foot well behind the campus and monitor the temperature for one year.

Carl Dempsey, assistant to the vice-chancellor for business affairs, says, "We received a letter from Gruy Federal saying they were under contract to drill a series of bore holes along the Atlantic coastal plain from New Jersey to Florida. The purpose of the drilling is to conduct a scientific geological study, attempting to find sources of residual heat in the coastal bedrocks. They requested and received permission to drill, case and cement one heat gradient bore hole of a thousandth foot depth at a site that I chose which is located behind the school.

"Approximately one acre will be required for the site during actual drilling—five days—but only a four foot by four foot by four foot cement-lined pit with a hinged steel cover, flush with the surface, will be left after drilling is over," Dempsey added.

Some soil disturbance will occur, but according to Dempsey "Gruy Federal has assured us that any such disturbance of soil will be looked after when drilling is completed."

Asked about procedures for measuring the temperature,

Dempsey said, "After the well is drilled they case it and seal the bottom much like an oil well casing, fill it up with water and check the temperatures at one-foot depths after it has become acclimated for awhile. They keep doing this on a monthly basis and the differential between the top of the well and the bottom enables them to plot a curve and the direction of the curve will show them if any water or steam is lower or near the bottom.

"In New Jersey they found a place with a 60 degree differential from the top of the well to the bottom, which in their estimation was terrific."

The well here will be located on the back half of the campus and according to Dempsey will be 92 feet tall and "pretty spectacular."

Dean's List changes reaffirmed

by Bobby Parker
Editor

The Faculty Senate reaffirmed its decision to change requirements for Dean's List at a meeting last Tuesday, rejecting a plea for reconsideration from the Student Legislature.

The new requirements were put into effect this semester after being approved last spring by the faculty and administration. Under these guidelines, a student must be enrolled for a minimum of 15 hours, maintain a 3.2 grade average for the semester and receive no grade lower than "B."

Formerly, the requirements were a minimum of 12 hours, an average of 3.0 and no grade lower than "C."

According to Dr. Roger Hill, chairman of the Faculty Senate, the changes were made because "Deans's List was not as meaningful as it should be."

Hill said the purpose is to make Dean's List standing more of an honor for students. He indicated that this was no longer possible under the old requirements because so many students made the list each semester.

According to administration records, 864 students made the Dean's List in spring 1978.

Hill denied allegations that the faculty had acted improperly in instituting the changes. Some faculty members and students had charged that the Faculty Senate had not researched the issue thoroughly and not announced that it would be discussed for the original meeting last spring.

But Hill said that the proposal had been placed on the agenda which was circulated before the meeting. The issue was discussed by the senate as a whole, not in committee.

Several weeks ago, the Student Legislature began investigating the changes and passed a resolution urging that the hours-in-progress requirement be returned to 12 hours. Hill said that he had read that resolution to the Faculty Senate before they voted on the matter.

SGA Investigative Committee Chair Karin Whaley said, however, that if students still object to the new policy next semester, the Legislature would continue to push for revisions.

"Nobody has objected to the raise (in requirements)," Whaley stated, "but everybody is upset about one aspect or another of the new standards."

Whaley said that administration and faculty have "done a poor job of researching" the issue in an effort to "make our school look more competitive."

Whaley indicated that she and other SGA officials agree that the Dean's List has become less meaningful because so many people have met the old requirements. But, she added, the faculty has gone too far with its three-fold revision of the standards.

Dr. Hill said that there is probably no solution to which "there would be no objections."

He stated that although there is a chance of changing the requirements back to their original form, the current standards are "fairly well set" as university policy.

According to Hill, the instigation for the changes came from officials in the Academic Affairs Division and faculty members. He said that there had been research in the matter, including checking with other universities for comparison.

Hill added that he personally favored the changes.

A check on the requirements at other schools revealed that UNCW's standards, by comparison, are somewhat more stringent than at least three other schools.

At East Carolina University, the requirements are a 3.5 average with no grade lower than "C" (no requirement for hours-in-progress).

Appalachian State University requires 12 hours with a 3.25 average, and UNC-Greensboro requires 12 hours, a 3.5 average and no grade below "C."

Full-time students should have equal opportunity for Dean's List

By reaffirming its decision to upgrade the requirements for Dean's List honors, the Faculty Senate has extended its policy of discrimination against many full-time students who, by all rights, should be given the opportunity of achieving this distinction.

The changes first came at the end of the last academic year when faculty and administration decided that there were too many students on Dean's List each semester. In order to make it a more exclusive designation—by limiting the number who obtained it—the standards were stiffened.

Last year, to make Dean's List required a 3.0 average, no grade below a "C" and a minimum of 12 hours. This year, it takes a 3.2 average, no grade below a "B" and a minimum of 15 hours.

Almost no one argues with the need for some kind of change. The old standards were, in fact, too lenient for this university.

However, in the effort to reform the old system, it appears that the problem solvers went for the overkill rather than a reasonable solution to the situation.

An average of 3.2 is probably the bare minimum that should be required of Dean's List students on any campus. Similarly, it is hard to argue with the low grade requirement which eliminates a student making below a "B."

But the minimum hours requirement is a different case altogether. By setting a completely arbitrary limit, the university is discriminating against a large number of students taking 12, 13 and 14 hours who deserve the opportunity of making Dean's List as much as their neighbors taking only a few hours more.

The administration in fact blatantly contradicts itself when it sets a 15-hour requirement for Dean's List, then turns around to say that 12-hour students are considered full-time.

What, then, is a full-time student? Is it only a category which tells the accounting office how much to collect in tuition and fees?

We think not.

A full-time student—by that designation alone—has an inherent right to every service and opportunity that this university has to offer. It is the same with the rights that go with full citizenship; once that has been obtained, there are no arbitrary limits set up to say that one has this privilege and another does not. There are no such things as first- and second-class citizenships.

We are told that there are those faculty and administration members who feel that since this is a Dean's List, neither students nor faculty should have any say in the matter. Well, that makes little difference to our argument. If Dean's List is the province of the Dean, then it is the Dean who is being discriminatory by imposing this new requirement.

The best chance now for reconsidering the changes will be a decision by the Chancellor or the Vice-chancellor for Academic Affairs to override the Faculty Senate action. We don't see this as a likely prospect, however, so we must assume that for now, at least, the new standards will remain in effect.

But just because they will not change doesn't mean that they should not change. We urge the faculty and administration to see that the 15-hour requirement is wrong—that it is discriminatory—and give all full-time students the equal opportunity they deserve.

LETTERS

Candidates fall to clean up mess

To the Editor:

I know that the content of this letter may seem trivial and even utterly ridiculous, especially in the light of all the problems in our government today; however, I feel that I must express my views on what I shall call the "Issue." What is this issue that has moved me so that I have taken time to write a letter that is destined to be filed in the nearest waste basket almost immediately after it has been read and clearly recognized and declared unimportant? The issue is, now that the election is over, who is going to take down all the campaign posters that seem to be on every tree?

I believe that a visitor from outer space would be led to believe, through observation, that the trees on earth grow campaign posters instead of leaves, and a very understandable mistake.

How long must I look at Jan Morgan hang from every tree, when will Fred Pickler remove his little pencil that clutters the scenery of what I believe to be the most beautiful and serene time of year? If one was to take a close look he could almost see beyond the posters that block the vivid colors of autumn that bloom with the romantic tranquility that nature and only nature can produce. Instead we must watch candidates' faces and pleas for votes as they fade away as nature takes its toll, much in the same way that so many campaign promises fade away once the winners have all gotten settled in their perspective (sic) offices, and forgotten all too soon why they are there and who put them there.

I thought that after I wrote this letter I would feel better for having gotten it off my chest, but it is too late, the election is over and I know that the crying out of one individual on such an unimportant issue as this could never be heard. But don't they even care enough to clean up the mess they left behind?

Senator misquoted on description of SGA

To the Editor:

I really feel that I must protest the misquoting of my speech on the senate floor. While the majority of senators may, in fact, be "high-bound," this was not my intent. To wit: hide-bound adj. 2. Obstinately conservative and narrow-minded. 3. Having the bark so close that growth is interfered with. And the senate, bless their black flabby little hearts, have lived completely up to my expectations. By not passing the Finance Committee bill, they have made it necessary for students requiring funds to wait eight days as opposed to three, and to attend three boring meetings when they need only attend two. Apparently, the senators feel that since they are required to attend the senate meetings, anyone who wants money should also have to attend. The question here is not "is eight days to get money too long?", because the answer is "no, it's not." The question is, why take eight days when three will suffice? By not passing this bill the senate demonstrated one out of two things: (1) They have no desire to truly serve the students, and are interested only in perpetuating their barbaric

by Ray Warren

North Carolinians suffer from tradition of one-party, straight-ticket rule

One had to feel sorry for North Carolina's Democratic leadership. They didn't ask for John Ingram. Nonetheless, in a state where the leadership is dependent on the natural loyalty by the electorate to a single party, few could afford to oppose the insurance commissioner. Therefore Tarheel voters were treated to the spectacle of intelligent men such as Governor Jim Hunt and Senator Robert Morgan mouthing support for an unrepentant demagogue.

Everyone knew Ingram would lose (though a heavy black vote swelled his total considerably), but the party leadership tried to keep the damage to a minimum. The tactic employed was a so-called "unity" campaign.

The thrust of the "unity" effort was to get registered Democrats to vote a straight party ticket. Two arguments were advanced to support the effort. Both were bad.

One television commercial featured North Carolina's own "country boy senator," Sam Ervin. Ervin drew out how the Democratic party had been, from the days of Jefferson and Jackson, the "party of the people" and Senator Sam knew better. Both Jefferson and Jackson championed limited and frugal government. Both would be horrified at the massive federal centralization and whopping federal deficit promoted in the name of the Democratic Party. In addition, the North Carolina Democratic Party has historically been controlled by machines and the state's industrial interests, not "the people."

If our former Senator had wanted to be truthful he would have told voters that the Democratic dominance of state politics is a direct result of the Democrats openly racist "white supremacy" campaigns of the early 1900's. In county after county with a large black population, whites were told that voting Republican meant "Negro rule." Even today the area of greatest Democratic strength is the so-called "black belt." True, many blacks are now Democrats, but the backbone of the party is still the descendants of those whites who joined it when it was a "white man's party."

Occasionally, real "people's men" won the Democratic primary, but even if they lost to the machine candidate nobody dared turn to the Republican alternative. Fear and ignorance left North Carolina with no choice in general elections for many years.

Today's Democrats are no more responsible for the "red shirt" campaigns of the early 1900's than modern Republicans can be held accountable for Reconstruction. New conditions require new allegiances. But, if Mr. Ervin does wish to appeal to history, he should look at history truthfully and not through partisan distortions.

State Senator Bill Smith took a different tack in his appeals for straight ticket voting. Smith called Republican legislators "honorary pallbearers" because he said "they've got to be in the ceremony but carried no weight." His argument was that the Democratic legislature would not appropriate funds to districts represented by Republicans.

The problem with Smith's argument is that it puts a premium on going along with the majority and says "qualifications be damned." One must assume that no matter who held a majority in Raleigh—Nazis, prohibitionists, or John Birchers, Mr. Smith would advocate "joining the crowd" rather than being in the minority. Besides, how is the composition of the legislature ever to change if some counties don't begin electing opposition members? But then Smith hopes it doesn't change, ever.

There is no unbiased evidence that minority party legislators are ineffective in working for their districts. North Carolina's Democratic factions court every legislator's vote—including Republican ones. Observe the next time Lieutenant Governor Jimmy Green and Governor Hunt engage in a fratricidal battle how united the majority party is—or isn't.

Contrary to Smith's argument, New Hanover County, which has elected a Republican legislator for the past eight years, has gained, not lost, state aid. Once the voters served notice they demanded accountability from their officials, then both parties begin to support aid for the state ports and local highways.

For another example of the fruits of two-party competition, observe Congressman Charlie Rose. Prompted by his opponent's showing at the polls (31 percent of the vote in a district only 9 percent Republican) Rose announced he would "listen better" to his constituents in the future. Obviously, even if they only make a good showing, but lose, Republicans can prod the Democrats to become more responsive.

As long as the Democrats can be all things to all people, they will not be responsive to the people. Two-party competition will assure that they either become responsive or lose elections.

The concept of responsible citizenship is based on the assumption that voters are intelligent enough to use their own judgment in general elections. The 40 percent of Tarheel voters who regularly listen to "Senator Sam" and vote the straight party ticket do violence to that concept—and to responsive government.

remnants of a red-tape jungle, or (2) They have no real understanding of what is going on, and did not pass the bill because of ignorance. (This viewpoint is borne up by the number of senators who have come up to me saying if they knew then what they know now, they would have voted for it. Ignorance is bliss.)

So, students, once again the senate has made life just a little bit more difficult for you. I predict that these people will have a long future in politics; they are already trying to maintain their corner on the red-tape market. Or, as I said earlier, hide-bound.

Economics faculty defended

To the Editor:

I would like to express my opinion of a recent misleading letter. "Simple issues made difficult." Any attack on the Department of Economics as being unfair is totally and undoubtedly unjustified.

"Complex issues made simple" would be much more representative of the Department of Economics.

Hard study doesn't necessarily justify a good grade. More should be required of a student than a simple regurgitation of class material.

Students should be able to practically apply class material to a real world situation, where relevant. When students are unable to apply class material then a lack of knowledge is revealed. The Department of Business and Economics is exceptionally proficient in preparing students for the real world by providing opportunities for practical application.

In my 30 hours of economics, I have yet to encounter a test that contained poorly designed, self-coined phrases or an irregular interpretation of the English language. Instructors such as those in the Department of Economics have positively enhanced the reputation of the department and the university. The Department of Economics maintains unparalleled academic standards. Many departments have experienced inflationary pressures concerning student evaluation (an excess demand for "good" grades has driven the equilibrium grade level up). As expected, the Department of Economics has avoided these inflationary pressures, as it requires an acceptable competence level for successful course completion.

In order to obtain a specific good (economics course), one must be willing to pay the market price (tuition, time, opportunity cost, etc.). I hope that one student in particular will realize this relationship. Hopefully, the student will allocate his future resources more efficiently by studying economics rather than crying the Editor of the Seahawk.

Legislature hears reports of representatives to rights conference

by Bobby Parker

Editor

Five SGA officials who represented UNCW at a national student rights conference in New Orleans on October 20-22 gave reports of their trip to the Student Legislature during the regular meeting of that body last Thursday.

The students—Attorney General Glen Downs, Secretary Karin Wainsley, and Legislators Karin Whaley, Mark Beanblossom and Jon Faill—attended many workshops during the conference dealing with specific areas of student rights.

These workshops included the following topics: collective bargaining of university faculty; student consumer protection, rights of the handicapped; minority rights and reverse discrimination; student lobbying; student government; student press; women's rights; and student legal rights.

The representatives will submit a written report to the SGA which will more completely detail the conference.

In addition to attending the workshops, Attorney General Downs reported that the group also had a good time. Said Downs of New Orleans: "Bourbon Street is just as sleazy as they say it is."

The SGA financed the trip at a cost of more than $1300.

The Forensics Union was allocated $2275 for travel expenses to ten debate tournaments over the rest of the year. The group had requested $5000 but that figure was cut by the Finance Committee which recommended the amount approved by the Legislature.

The Finance Committee eliminated $1971 which had been requested for food expenses on the trips, and also subtracted $1800 from the Forensics request, which is the amount they received at the beginning of the budget year.

Forensics coach Bob Rosenthal told legislators that there are no funds available for the debate team from the Department of Drama and Communications. Rosenthal explained that although academic credit is given to students in the Forensics Union, the team is activity and not eligible for academic funds.

An allocation of $513.40 was approved for N.C. Student Legislature. NCSL members Mark Beanblossom and Michael Sanders, who are also SGA legislators, said that membership in NCSL on campus had more than tripled since last year, from 6 to 20 members.

Sanders outlined the NCSL budget at $2041.50 which includes travel and operating expenses. NCSL delegates travel to statewide meetings each month and also spends a week in Raleigh each year for a legislative session.

Sanders said there was just over $1000 in NCSL's account now and the group expects to raise more than $500 through donations.

Reporting for the Investigative Committee, Senior Vice-president Karin Whaley told the Legislature that the Faculty Senate had met and reaffirmed the recent changes in Dean's List requirements.

The requirements now stand at an average of 3.2, minimum of 15 hours and no grade lower than "B." Formerly, they were an average of 3.0, minimum of 12 hours and no grade lower than "C."

The Investigative Committee had been researching ways to amend the new requirements. The Legislature passed a resolution several weeks ago urging that the minimum hours requirement be returned to 12.

In other legislative business:

—Charters were approved for the Forensics Union, Football Club, Recreation Majors Club and Sailing Club.

—A motion was passed to override the decision of Concert Committee Chair David Carter to charge Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity for the use of SGA platforms at a fundraising event last weekend.

According to Student Activities Director Linda Moore, the Concert Committee normally charges $2.50 per platform per day. Several legislators said that because APO was using the platforms for a charity fundraiser, they should not be charged.

Carter had agreed to charge APO half price for the platforms. Moore said he was concerned about possible damage to the platforms because they would be used outside over a period of several days.

—SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca announced the resignation of Sophomore President Harry Pilos. The class vice-president, Brad Williams, will assume the presidency leaving a vacancy in the sophomore vice-presidency.

Any sophomore interested in filling the office must petition the SGA within a specified time period. More information can be obtained from the SGA office, upstairs in the Pub.

Absent from the meeting were Jim Godwin and Bob Loomis. The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in C-218.

SGA doesn't have copy of its own amended constitution

by Bobby Parker

Editor

What if they wrote a constitution and nobody knew what it said?

That is the apparent dilemma of the Student Government Association. Or, at least, no one is exactly sure what it says.

Last spring, SGA officials decided that their constitution was outdated and needed a complete overhaul. A committee was appointed to rewrite the constitution.

That being done, the new document was submitted to the Student Legislature for approval. However, as in any project of this extent, there were compromises made on certain parts of the constitution resulting in several major and minor amendments.

And that is the trouble.

It seems that no one has a copy of the amended version of the new SGA constitution.

Although the proposed new constitution which came out of the committee was printed and duplicated, no one bothered to have the amended document printed in its final form.

At the beginning of the year, SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca had the only copy of the new version, a copy of the original proposal with handwritten revisions and amendments. That copy, however, is now missing, apparently due to the fact that it was passed around among SGA officials because it was the only one.

DeLuca blames the situation on SGA Chief Justice Ray Warren, who chaired the constitution committee last spring. Warren, on the other hand, blames DeLuca because, he says, it was DeLuca's responsibility as president of the Legislature to have the copies made.

Meanwhile, there still is no copy of the constitution available.

Warren will reportedly attempt to go back through the original constitution and fill in the amendments and revisions by memory. Other SGA officials will also use notes taken during last year's meetings to put together the constitution as near the amended form as possible.

Campus Chuckles:

Defining the Superstudent

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

In today's world of super-models, superjocks and super-sensitive egos, there comes a new hero. Ladies and gentlemen, may I introduce a flourishing cult figure: the Superstudent!

Now I'd be the first to admit that Cheryl Tiegs has done more for advertising than Morris the Cat. And I'll even admit to a sneaking fondness for Jimmy Connors. But when was the last time Cheryl made Dean's List? And how many times was Connors expelled from prep school?

Yes, friends, the Superstudent has come into his own at last. Once considered a rarity (there are still a few on display at the Smithsonian) they are now increasing in number... their tribe is growing stronger every day!

Let's clarify an important point: what makes a Superstudent? A Superstudent is the girl or guy who pulls down eighteen hours a week, holds down a part-time job and lives to moan about it all. True Superstudents actually read those textbooks that cost $62.46. And these same hardy individuals walk resolutely past the latest fashions to buy a backpack to carry all those lovely volumes.

Most Superstudents are easy to spot in a crowd. They're the ones with "Genius at Work" stamped on their foreheads. They usually have wild eyes and permanently grinning mouths as a result of listening to a professor's moldy jokes for an entire semester. A large percentage of these stalwart souls have badly-chewed fingernails (a few of the more maniacal types have started in on their toenails as well).

Ever wondered how Superstudents look in action? Well, if you should ever spot a guy carrying thirteen textbooks running for the library doing fifty miles per, get out of his way. He's a Superstudent and he means business, hey. The next time you pass a recumbent figure snoring beneath a pine tree, please tip-toe by and refrain from giggling—it's just a Superstudent recharging his intellectual batteries. And from now on, when you're munching out in the cafeteria, try to ignore the sleepy student eating his lab notes and reading his hamburger. He's not really crazy, just a little tired from the pressure of maintaining his status as a bona fide Brain.

Before the female factor begins screaming in outrage, let me say that the use of the word "him" in this article is just for the sake of convenience. After all, I am fully aware of the fact that girls have something of an edge over guys in the smarts department. We just don't spread it around as much!

Financial aid available to students in many forms

by Susan Parnell
Staff Writer

Are you looking for help in financing your college education and expenses? Then the Financial Aid Office would be the place to find out about receiving this help.

The Financial Aid office administers a program of financial aid which seeks to meet the needs of all enrolled students. The operation of the program is based upon a concept of needs-analysis that expects a student's family to meet educational expenses as much as possible. The amount of assistance received by a student is determined between the full cost of attendance and the amount a student's family can pay.

There are also several different grants and scholarships available for students. A student's award is different depending on if a student is a part-time, three-quarter or full-time student.

Work programs provide students with jobs on campus or finds jobs off-campus at nearby businesses.

Also, there are loan programs which allow a student to borrow money to finance a college education and enable the student to repay the loan after graduation.

If anyone is interested in finding out more about the financial aid programs that are available, stop by the Financial Aid Office in Alderman Building.

Science foundation to select minority candidates for awards

The National Research Council will advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of Minority Graduate Fellowships. Panels of eminent scientists and engineers appointed by the National Research Council will evaluate qualifications of applicants. Final selection of Fellows will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced in March 1979.

The NSF Minority Graduate Fellowship Program is open only to persons who are citizens or nationals of the United States as of the time of application, and who are members of an ethnic minority group underrepresented in the advanced levels of the nation's science talent pool—i.e., American Indian, Alaskan Native (Eskimo or Aleut), black, Mexican American/Chicano, or Puerto Rican.

Initial NSF Minority Graduate Fellowship awards are intended for students at or near the beginning of their graduate study. Eligibility is limited to those individuals who, as of the time of application, have not completed post-baccalaureate study in excess of 30 semester hours or 45 quarter hours, or equivalent, in any field of science, engineering, social science, or mathematics. Subject to the availability of funds, new fellowships awarded in the spring of 1979 will be for periods of three years, the second and third years contingent on certification to the Foundation by the fellowship institution of the student's satisfactory progress toward an advanced degree in science.

These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, in history or social work, for work leading to medical, dental, law, or public health degrees, or for study in joint science-professional degree programs. Applicants will be judged on the basis of ability. The annual stipend for Minority Graduate Fellows will be $3,900 for a twelve-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

Applicants will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test aptitude and scientific achievement.

The deadline date for the submission of applications for NSF Minority Graduate Fellowships is Dec. 8, 1978. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

Affirmative action workshop planned

A workshop designed to provide the latest information on affirmative action requirements of the federal government, and an opportunity for developing a model written affirmative action plan will be held Nov. 30 through Dec. 1 at the Hilton Inn in downtown Wilmington. The workshop is being co-sponsored by the Human Relations Department of the City of Wilmington, the Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce and the Lower Cape Fear Personnel Association.

On Thursday, Donald Webster, assistant regional administrator of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance of the Department of Labor, from the Atlanta regional office, will speak and lead a discussion on "Contract Compliance Under Executive Orders—Where Government Enforcement is Going and How Employers will be Affected." Richard Baldeau, chief of the operations division of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, of the Atlanta regional office, will speak and lead a discussion on "Steps Required for a Successful Affirmative Action Plan." Also speaking on Thursday will be an industry representative, not yet confirmed. The topic will be "Contract Compliance from the Employer's Position—Why Affirmative Action?"

The Friday session will provide an opportunity for personnel managers and others responsible for affirmative action provisions to increase skills in developing a model affirmative action plan for their agencies. Equal opportunity officers and personnel managers from local industries will provide technical assistance in developing these plans. To close the session on Friday afternoon, Albert Nelson, director of the Human Relations Department of Orlando, Florida, will speak on "The Role of Human Relations Departments in Assisting Employers in the Development and Implementation of Their Affirmative Action Plans."

This is one in a continuing series of workshops designed to help employers in the Wilmington-New Hanover area to understand and properly respond to the various requirements in equal opportunity in employment and affirmative action programs. Registration will be limited to 75 persons with a registration fee of $30, which includes two lunches, reception, and workshop materials. For further information, contact the Human Relations Department (William R. Jessup, director).

Snodgrass poetry reading reveals motives of author

Although his voice cracked and he occasionally swigged from a bottle of cough medicine, W.D. Snodgrass performed one of his works with introductions as entertaining as the poems themselves. After the reading, sponsored by the Department of English, Monday, Nov. 6, Snodgrass held a question-and-answer session that introduced the audience to the motives and methods of his poetry.

The performance included selections from all three of his books: Heart's Needle, After Experience and The Furber's Bunker. The form of the poems introduced a variety of areas from symbolic fantasy to historic literalism. His poem, "The Examination," was a parody on the self-assigned importance of university professors. The language of the poem took on a surrealistic attitude that in no way hindered the poem's intent. The removal of his criticism to an analogous event required the professors in the audience to suffer the insults in good humor. The poet's brilliant use of symbolism permitted his discussion of delicate and controversial points of view. One poem compared love's manipulations to that of tuning a musical instrument, while another symbolized intense emotion in the frivolous action of kite flying.

Snodgrass's major effort of the evening was an intense and literal presentation of his exploration into betrayal and loyalty in human beings. He read three poems from his recent book, The Furber's Bunker. This book marks a break with his previous work since the poems are different visualizations of a major theme presented in the strictness of historic literalism. Every poem in the book concerns itself with the same specific time and place: the last days before Hitler's suicide in the bunker he had built in Berlin. Snodgrass explores the degrees of loyalty in Hitler's most ardent followers. He attempts to speak from a point of view within the mind of the human beings facing certain death, and explain their individual feelings on the cause or purpose of their deaths.

Some of the poems present a cowardly attitude about death, others, one of responsible indifference. Most resolve around feelings these followers held for Hitler. Somehow in his readings, these attitudes could not find the proper emotional voice needed to convince the audience of their reality. Perhaps such voices are only possible within the throws of the actual consideration of death or within the ability range of a very few actors who can superimpose these voices. And it may be to Snodgrass's benefit that he can not convincingly present these voices on stage, since it is obvious that he wrote from these positions. Once into that arena of evil is enough.

The question-and-answer session that followed introduced the audience to the attitudes and manner of the poet. Questions on limits were raised by a number of people. To whom does the poet write? Who is his intended audience? How many revisions does the poet make? How many poems exhaust a theme?

How many images are necessary to communicate an idea? Most all these questions implied that there is a formula for success that Snodgrass could apply. But it appeared that he had no formula, for he floundered in answers. He suggested that only history could guarantee success; a poet can only look to actual events for inspiration. If a poet is good he doesn't know what he is doing.

He answered questions about rhythm and meter. He is attempting, as poets have since the imagists, to explore new methods of imposing meter on language. The hooting of an owl, the chorus to the song "Heat Wave," and a quotation from a dying painter have presented to him forms in which to write. He is also exploring the forms of early music for new poetic rhythms.

The reading was well attended; in fact, the room was overcrowded. The audience was very appreciative of his presentation. It seems a response like this one ought to convince the university and the city fathers of the growing number of people who attend and support these events with a consistency that demands more outlets.

Food fights follow 'Animal House' around country

(CPS)--As Lane Glaser remembers it: "Some guy stood up and yelled 'food fight!' and about five other guys started throwing food with him." Thus, Glaser, a University of Texas-Austin student became involuntarily embroiled in a recent food fight in an Austin Burger King. During the melee, which resulted in eight arrests, Glaser's suite-mate "even got hit by a cheese whopper."

Glaser escaped with clean clothes, but her story is only the latest in the saga of the runaway campus success of National Lampoon's "Animal House." College students not only want to see "Animal House" (they've helped it make over $17 million thus far), they want to BE "Animal House." Food fights, in short, are becoming very popular again.

It all started when Universal Studios and National Lampoon put on a dozen promotional toga parties at various universities. Then other college unions took up the idea, and threw their own campus toga parties--complete with unlimited beer, jello eating contests and John Belushi look-alike contests--all against the background of "Louis, Louie," with unexpurgated lyrics.

Although there seems to be an upsurge in "Animal House"-type behavior (Kent State officials, for example, were compelled to warn dorm residents that "House" inspired noises and drinking violations would result in dreaded "white slips"), the movie's most popular legacy appears to be the traditional food fight.

At Texas A&M, a dining hall food fight caused $900 in damages, and prompted the resignation of three food service employees. Eight students were expelled from the board program, recounts food services director Ron Blatchely, but not before students began asking for transfers to other dining facilities.

So far, Blatchely says, food fight action has been contained, but hard-core food fight devotees have found other ways to express themselves. Now many can be seen engaging in imaginary food fights in which they pretend to throw food at each other, Blatchely explained.

Volunteer Opportunities

Help make the Christmas holidays more enjoyable for others by helping with the many tasks during a telethon for a national health organization the week after Christmas.

Volunteers are needed to help man stations at grocery stores give nutrition and menu information on Saturday, Nov. 18, 10 p.m.

Help cheer-up the elderly--Volunteers are needed from time to time, at Bowden Nursing Homes, who can entertain residents, musically or with other programs suited for this age group.

Seahawk Basketball 78-79

Coaches aim for another good year

Directing the Seahawk for noted for 1978-79 is Coach Mel Gibson, the man who has led UNCW's ultra-successful transition from NAIA ranks into NCAA Division One competition. Now entering his seventh season at the university, Gibson has achieved a high degree of respect in the eyes of his players and the many Seahawk fans, as well as building an ever-growing recognition for UNCW basketball throughout the Southeast. Foremost among his accomplishments are the UNCW stack offense, which led to the Hawks lofty national ranking in shooting percentage the past two seasons, and also his "tease delay" game tactic, a strategy which has been emulated by many coaches who have fallen victim to the late game offense.

Mel Gibson

In the last two years, Seahawk teams have won 35 games and won a 67.3 winning percentage as a Division One school. Prior to Gibson's arrival in Wilmington, UNCW had won only 38 games in six straight losing seasons. During Gibson's six-year tenure, Seahawk squads have captured 80 victories against 73 losses. After just 10 seasons as a collegiate head coach Gibson should surpass the 150-mark this year.

The personable young coach came to UNCW in 1971 as an assistant before assuming the head coaching responsibilities one year later. In his previous position at Baptist College in Charleston, S.C., Gibson led his teams to an excellent 57-38 history. He accomplished the same feat last year at UNCW, guiding the Hawks to a 19-7 season, which is the best ever at the school since it became a four-year institution back in 1963. The 1977-78 club established many team and individual records, the most impressive being the eight-consecutive wins mark which gained statewide attention for the squad and the university.

Coach Gibson's basketball success as a coach is but a continuation of the tremendous career he built as an All-American performer at Western Carolina in the early sixties. After winning all-state honors in both football and basketball in Rockingham, N.C., Gibson entered WCU in 1959. During his three varsity seasons with the Catamounts, he topped the team in scoring, served as squad captain and was named MVP on the team each season. In his senior year, he led Western to the NAIA national finals and was named to the NAIA All-American unit. That spring, he participated in the Pan American Games and was the number two draft choice of the Los Angeles Lakers. After one year of professional ball, he returned to WCU to work on his master's degree and pursue his career in coaching.

Rick Holdt

As Mel Gibson's number one assistant, Coach Rick Holdt fills many roles in the UNCW basketball program. His many responsibilities include scouting Seahawk opponents, heading up the year-round recruiting campaign to bring the best athletes to UNCW, and, of course, assisting Coach Gibson in practice instruction as well as actual game strategy. A sound knowledge of the game and a contagious enthusiasm for working with young student-athletes are two of the youthful Holdt's most obvious qualities.

His background is one of constant success. He has never been associated with a losing team throughout his career as a player or as a very successful coach. After earning prep All-American recognition in his native Paramus, N.J., Coach Holdt accepted a scholarship to North Carolina State where he became a starting forward for three seasons under Norm Sloan. In 1972-73, he captained the 27-0 Wolfpack team which finished the year as the second-ranked squad in the nation. Following two years of coaching on the high school level, Coach Holdt took the head job at Kings Junior College in Raleigh, N.C., and guided that team to an outstanding 23-2 seasons. This year is his second at UNCW.

Student ticket information

by Craig Way
Staff Writer

Okay, all you Seahawk supporters, pay attention, because here's how to get your tickets for Seahawk basketball '78-79. Students can enter the Coliseum from the Northeast gate, which is the far back lobby. Game times are at 8 p.m., and the gates will open at 6 p.m. Students must present their validated ID, from whence they shall be given a ticket. Students must sit in the seat no. printed on the ticket, so if you plan to sit with someone or with a group, you'd better go together. Non-student tickets are $3.00, and signs will be posted at the Northeast gate, which Ticket Manager Greg Dalton describes as "an ideal location." "Last year, many students were dissatisfied with the entrance policy, which forced long lines with many students becoming unable to get tickets," says Dalton. "This year we seem to have a much better situation."

Media coverage of basketball extensive

The UNCW basketballers will receive extensive coverage by the local media. Radio station WGNI will broadcast all the games on the schedule, including the away games. Mike Fenley will be doing the play-by-play and at home he will get help from Bob Townsend, and Mark O'Neil, as well as an occasional guest analyst. These could include UNCW's women's basketball coach Eve Carmen, New Hanover High School coach Jim Hebron and Jim Hebbe, coach of Wilmington Hoggard High School.

"We wanted to get local experts to help on some games," said Fenley. "We may have more, but do not have commitments yet." On away games, Fenley will be traveling with the team. UNCW's own Sports Information Director John Justus will help out on the road game broadcasts.

This is the first year WGNI has decided to broadcast the entire schedule. They are also thinking of broadcasting some of the women's basketball games, which would be another WGNI first.

On the television side of things, WECT Channel 6 has expressed interest in broadcasting some Seahawk games. They also plan filmed reports and scoring updates on their news broadcasts.

1978-79 Seahawk basketball line-up

Seahawks await promising season

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

The 1978-79 college basketball season should be quite interesting. Several big questions have to be answered. Can Kentucky repeat as national champion? Can Duke win it all? Or, can UNCW match last year's outstanding showing? Of course the answers to all these questions won't be known until March, but that does not stop people from speculating.

The early part of the schedule should be the most important to the Seahawks, because it instills a certain attitude in the players' minds. After beginning at home with Baltimore University (in its first year at Division I play) and South Carolina State, they take off to Florida for the Sunshine Doubleheader, taking on Division I stalwarts Stetson and Florida U. Also in their first ten games they play N.C. State, South Florida, and South Alabama. A big win here or there could make a sizeable difference in the season.

Of course, the major topic of conversation relating to this year's basketball team is the loss of four big seniors, who were also much of the scoring and leadership. Denny Fields, the top scorer with an average of 22.5 ppg last year, was also number six in shooting percentage with a 62.8 average. He is gone.

Billy and Bobby Martin were also scoring leaders as well as floor leaders. They led the team in assists too. They are gone.

Lonnie Payton was counted on for crucial points or rebounds and he, too, is gone.

Well, who is to replace these people? Start with the returning stars, such as Dave Wolff, a 6'5" front court man who averaged in double figures last year. Or Delaney Jones, another 6'5" player who will contribute to the inside game.

Keep going until you come to big Gary Cooper, the 6'6" junior who came on strong last year. Cooper can leap with the best of them, and is going to be counted on for many points.

Other big men such as Danny Davis (6'7"), Chuch Verba (6'9") and Art Paschal (6'7") will help round out the inside game.

The backcourt will be up for grabs at the beginning. The point guard job could come down to a battle between veteran John McPhaul and newcomers John Calipari and Barry Taylor. The big guard role could possibly be filled by Ralph Peterson, Dennis Tobin, or Leon McRae.

Will UNCW have a good year? Well that depends on more than just the players and opponents. The Seahawks have a winning attitude. After such a good year in 1977-78 the returning players know what it's like to win. Also, many of the newcomers came here because the program was on the way up. So with their talent and attitude, this should be a fine year for Seahawk basketball. If the students get out and give them the support that the North Carolina—South Carolina area is famous for, there could be a whole new mania breaking out. Tar Heel mania, Broncomania, Blazermania and now Seahawk mania!

GARRY COOPER
6'6", 220 lb., junior, Merritt, N.C.

Budding star ready to accept role as a leader this season... has all the tools to become one of UNCW's best before he is through... tremendous strength and leaping ability... has worked diligently to develop accurate medium-range jumper... holds school record for blocked shots in single game (5 vs. Citadel) and for a season (52)... both set last year... shot 60.3 percent from the field in 77-78... true crowd-pleaser with his variety of slam dunks.

JIMMY DENTON
6'6", 205 lb., sophomore, Weaverville, N.C.

Came off bench to spark team on numerous occasions as a frosh... excellent jump-shooter, especially from baseline and corner spots... runs extremely well for a big man... had rookie high of 10 points in 92-66 win over East Carolina... was top high school player in western North Carolina in 1977... outstanding attitude and hard worker.

DANNY DAVIS
6'7", 215 lb., sophomore, Alliance, N.C.

Could surprise many fans with his rapid improvement since last year... logged playing time in 21 games as a freshman... tremendous leaper with good timing... worked hard over the summer on outside shot and upper body strength... can play post or big forward (wing) position... attended the same high school as teammate Garry Cooper (Pamlico).

JOHN HASKINS
6'4", 195 lb., junior, Raleigh, N.C.

Transfer from Lees-McRae J.C. where he was an all-conference player last season... will likely be a swing player for the Seahawks... hard-nosed competitor who specializes in defense and hustle... average 15 points a game in 77-78... attended Sanderson High in Raleigh where he was all-conference in both basketball and football.

DELANEY JONES
6'5", 180 lb., senior, Council, N.C.

Another three-year player and frequent starter throughout his UNCW career... started first half of 77-78 until giving way to teammate Garry Cooper midway in year... jumping ability and quickness are his biggest assets... blocked 37 shots as a soph and 13 more last year... keeps team loose with his humor and friendly personality... looking forward to senior season as his best ever.

DENNIS TOBIN
6'3", 175 lb., freshman, Hopatcong, N.J.

Sharp-shooting freshman from Hopatcong High, N.J., where he earned many honors as a prep performer... prolific scorer with a 27-point average last year and better than 2,000 points scored during his career... adept penetrating guard who is also a very accurate passer for a big guard... has the talent to become an outstanding college player.

RALPH PETERSON
6'2", 185 lb., senior, Kinston, N.C.

Has earned three letters as a Hawk and is ready for successful senior campaign... worked hard over the summer to improve on strength and quickness... in only start last year, contributed vital 12 points in UNCW win at Campbell... connected on six-of-seven from the floor in that contest... a good jumper with accurate outside shot... played on state tourney team for Paul Jones at Kinston.

LEON MCRAE
6'3", 185 lb., sophomore, Durham, N.C.

Came to UNCW as a sophomore this season from Ft. Scott J.C. in Kansas... as an all-league guard, he average 14 points and eight rebounds per contest last year... good jumper with soft shooting touch... has uncanny ability to use either hand to score on the inside against bigger opponents... played on state semi-finalist team at Durham Hillside.

CHUCK VERBA

6'9", 208 lb., sophomore, South Whitley, Ind.
Came on to make sizeable contribution near end of last season...grabbed team-high eight rebounds in victory over Fairleigh Dickinson and was leading scorer in final game at UNCC...exceptional quickness for a man his size...tallest player on squad and the only left-hander...averaged 21 points per game as a high school senior.

BARRY TAYLOR

6'2", 188 lb., junior, Durham, N.C.
Transfer from Brevard (Fla.) J.C. where he average 10.7 points and seven assists per game with a year ago...brings added dimension to backcourt with his strength and size...not a great scorer as a juco but his shooting skill will be utilized more this season...can play either point or wing position...was all-state guard at Durham Northern.

ART PASCHAL

6'5", 185 lb., senior, Whiteville, N.C.
Most accurate shooter from the perimeter on this year's squad...became eligible in January last season after transferring from Lenoir-Rhyne...will be very effective offensively versus zone defenses...once scored 46 points in single game at Oak Ridge Prep...played sparingly in 77-78 but should contribute much more this season.

DAVE WOLFF

6'5", 210 lb., senior, Indianapolis, Ind.
Begins his fourth year as a starter for the Seahawks...was a co-captain last season as a junior...leading returning scorer (11.1 ppg) and rebounder (5.1 rpg)...also an outstanding defensive player...always matches up with opposition's top-scoring big man...intense competitor who gives supreme effort in practice as well as games...top rebounder in seven contests last season...has led 'Hawks to 48 wins in his three varsity seasons.

JOHN MCPHAUL

5'10", 135 lb., junior, Fayetteville.
Extremely quick player with good jumping strength for a player his size...provides much-needed depth at the point guard position...fine shot from outside and also possesses quickness to penetrate well...had outstanding high school career at Terry Sanford High where he earned all-state honors...used sparingly in a reserve role past two seasons.

JOHN CALIPARI

6'0", 158 lb., freshman, Coraopolis, Pa.
Intelligent, quarterback-type player who should help fill void of departed Martin twins...averaged 20.1 ppg at Moon High School (near Pittsburgh) last year...also led team in assists (6-plus avg.)...possesses true leadership ability so necessary in a point guard...expected to contribute early.

BILL PARKER

6'5", 200 lb., freshman, Asheville, N.C.
...could be big surprise. Only walk-on on team this year...averaged 12 points and 10 rebounds per game at Asheville High School...broken hand forced him to miss 1/2 of senior year...jumps well and good on fundamentals.

N.C. State highlights Seahawk schedule

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

Defending NIT runner-up N.C. State heads the schedule for the UNCW basketball team, which also includes games against South Florida, Baltimore University, and a trip to Florida for the Sunshine Doubleheader.

State, led by Clyde Austin and "Hawkeye" Whitney has a wide open attack and a lot of players back from a team which went to the NIT finals before losing to Texas. The inside game of State could be trouble for UNCW.

The Seahawks also take on UNCC, which is fast becoming a big rival. This year's game is in Charlotte and the Seahawks hope to stop the domination that the 49ers had last year.

South Florida is in UNCC's conference (Sun Belt) and is a very competitive Division I team.

Perhaps the highlight of the schedule will be the trip to Florida. The Seahawks will have to take on Stetson University in the first game of that doubleheader and the University of Florida the following night.

Soccer team closes season with tie

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

UNCW closed out its 1978 soccer season with a 1-1 tie against the Duke Blue Devils, last Wednesday in Durham. The Hawks finished the season with a 11-5-1 mark.

The Seahawks scored first, at 5:17 into the first half on a goal by senior Eddie Brock with Ed Donahue assisting. Ten minutes later, Duke's Richard Murray scored to tie the match. The first half, which ended at 1-1, was "loosely played" by both teams, according to Coach Calvin Lane. The action picked up considerably in the second half, although neither team was able to score. Likewise, both teams ended two overtime periods with the final 1-1 deadlock.

Duke outshot the Seahawks 26-24 for the game, while UNCW led in corner kicks, 9-6.

In retrospect, the UNCW soccer team had quite a good year. The Hawks finished the year with a 11-5-1 mark as compared with an 11-4 mark for 1977. But this season saw the Hawks involved in matches with at least 10 teams that at one time or another were ranked. The Seahawks themselves rose as high as seventh in the South and as of last week they were ranked 11th in the South.

The Hawks did well both at home and on the road. At home, the team was 4-3, while away they were 7-2-1. That good record on the road proved instrumental because the Hawks played 10 of their 17-game schedule on the road. The team can point proudly to big victories over UNC-Chapel Hill (4-1), Old Dominion (3-2), James Madison (6-3), and Maryland-Baltimore County (4-2).

Certainly, there were several major highlights for the UNCW soccer team in the '78 season. Probably the biggest moment came during the Harbor Front Classic, played in Norfolk, Va. on Oct. 6-7. UNCW posted wins over two tough opponents, Old Dominion and James Madison, in route to the championship. Senior Eddie Brock was named Most Valuable Player for the tournament and UNCW placed four men on the all-tournament team. Those two victories at Norfolk started UNCW playing its best stretch of soccer for the year. For a two-week period of October (Oct. 6-24), the Hawks reeled off six straight victories. Another highlight was the team's early season road trip to Florida. That trip included not only soccer, but a very enjoyable excursion to Disney World.

"I was very pleased with the year," commented Coach Calvin Lane, following the season's finale at Duke. "We played our best soccer in the first two weeks of October." During that period, the Hawks won six straight. Coach Lane said he felt it was fortunate that the team had few injuries during the course of the season. Coach Lane also stated that the increase in attendance at UNCW soccer games and student body support this season were much appreciated factors in the season and he hopes for more fan support in the future.

Individually, the Hawks were led by Gil Castilla, Chi Chi Mercado, and Eddie Brock. Castilla totaled 71 shots, 13 goals, and 6 assists for the season. Mercado totaled 67 shots, 13 goals, and 5 assists; while Brock had 55 shots, 11 goals, and 8 assists. As a team, the Hawks scored 53 goals while limiting their opponents to 31 goals. In corner kicks, UNCW totaled 97 while holding the opposition to just 59. Goalie Charlie Ingold, who played in all 17 games, had 161 saves, and allowed 30 goals for a 1.73 goals-per-game average.

The prospects for next year seem good. The Hawks will lose their captains, seniors Eddie Brock, Ted Kort, and Gary Wade due to graduation. The rest of the team returns next season, however, and with needed halfback and fullback help on the recruitment agenda, the Seahawks will be tough again next season.

Three players lead

By Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

The football season has now come to a halt for most schools, but not for UNCW. With an abundance of talented football players such as cornerback Steve Underwood, defensive end Chris Nichols, and split end, Paul Wood, UNCW can look forward to more than adequate representation in the playoffs.

Steve Underwood is what the Seahawk coaches termed "A pleasant surprise." A native of Virginia, Underwood did not participate in high school football. Underwood stated that a lack of size at that time was his reason in abstaining from football. Underwood eventually left Virginia to attend Cape Fear Technical Institute. After leaving Cape Fear Tech, Underwood came over to UNCW in the spring of 1977.

In that same spring, Underwood participated in spring football. Underwood impressed the coaches so much to the point where he won the starting cornerback position. Underwood also won the punting job. This year Underwood has made several key interceptions and numerous fumble recoveries.

Underwood believes the team can go all the way in the playoffs. Underwood believes that hard work in practices will be an important factor in the Seahawk's quest for the championship.

If past history proves to come true to form, Steve Underwood will have no problem getting ready for the games.

Paul Wood is one of the more talented wide receivers in the conference. A native of New Bern, Wood played his high school football at New Bern Senior High School. Wood came to UNCW in 1976. He bypassed football in the team's first year, but came out this summer to win a starting berth at the split end position. With the regular season over, Wood has a great year statistically. Thus far this year, Wood has had 26 catches for 490 yards and six touchdowns. This comes out to a phenomenal 22 yards per catch. Wood's ability to make the big play gives the Seahawks a definite advantage over most defenses.

Wood says he is already feeling the pressure of the playoffs. Wood believes the defense is responsible for the success of the Seahawk team, but adds that the offense is now playing up to par.

Chris Nichols (not pictures) is also a vital asset to the Seahawk team. Blessed with size, speed, and good football knowledge, Nichols is an athlete who very rarely makes mistakes. A veteran of last year's squad, Chris has been called upon to perform in the leadership role. He has not let the team down in this capacity yet. Chris is most appreciated by his fellow teammates who play with him every week. Chris can also play offensive tackle and has been called upon numerous times to fill in at that position.

UNCW blanks Robbins in club football, 32 - 0

By Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

The UNCW football team combined a near perfect offense and defense to crush Robbins 32-0 in football action played Sunday.

The Seahawk offense seemed to move at will, scoring early in the first quarter on a ten yard scamper by halfback Mark "mad dog" Doll. Steve Underwood kicked the extra point to make the score 7-0.

The Seahawk defense, playing its customary tough game in the trenches, continued their shutout making it six quarters since the devil dog defense has given up a score.

After a change of punts the Seahawks again got control of the ball. After a 22 yard pass play to split end Paul Wood, Doll tossed a 47 yard halfback bomb to Wood. The extra point failed with the score 13-0.

In the second quarter, Doll again brought the crowd to their feet with a 58 yard romp from scrimmage. The half ended with the score 19-0.

The opening of the second half saw Robbins drive down field to the Seahawk one foot line. The Seahawk defense did not budge. On perhaps the most exciting play of the game, defensiveback Ken Watson picked up a Robbins fumble one yard deep in the Seahawk end zone and went 101 yards for the score. This play all but took the life out of the Robbins team. Another score came after stand out linebacker Tim "Tinker" Owens intercepted a Robbins pass on the Robbins 40 yard line and returned it to the Robbins' 15 yard line. From there, quarterback Doug Browning marched the offense to the end zone capping the drive with a 8 yard touchdown pass to the fleet Wood.

The Seahawks are now looking ahead to the playoffs. An opponent as of yet has not been named.

1978-79 UNCW women's basketball squad

She-hawks looking good for season

by Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

One of the more enlightening aspects of UNCW is its basketball program. Girls basketball is no exception and this year's women's team promises to be one of the better Shehawk teams.

Coach Eve Carmen will be starting her second year as head coach of the women's basketball team. In her first year as head coach, Carmen's team was able to post a .500 season being 9-9 for the 77-78 season. Coach Carmen will have four returning players from that particular squad. She makes note of the fact that even though there are four returning players, they are all sophomores, thus questioning the experience of the team.

In truth, this Seahawk team promises to be a very exciting one indeed. First there is newcomer Janet Grady from East Duplin High School in Bevilville, N.C. Janet made the all east team last year and is considered by coach Carmen to be a real bluchipper. Another newcomer to the squad is Vertha Dixon, a freshman from Ayden-Griffith High School. Coach Carmen believes she is fortunate to have a player of April's ability and states that Vertha has the ability to play inside or outside. Moreover, she says that Vertha is a good all around ball player. The veteran players probably will provide the key to the Seahawk attack. Kathy Lothsbierte is a more than adequate performer at point guard. Coach Carmen will look to Kathy to lead the Seahawk fast break. April Lewis is a player with natural ability that can be called upon to play wing or the post position. Coach Carmen believes her as a very important clutch player. Jennifer Heath is a steady player returning from last year's squad. Carmen says that Heath has the knack of being in the right place at the right time. Her competence is coupled with good ball handling. Jenny Allen is a vital part of the Seahawk team also. Last year's leading scorer, Jenny averaged 17 points per game as a freshman. Coach Carmen says that Jenny has performed with shades of excellence and is expected to be nothing short of that this year. Terry Kirby is a senior who has played her entire four years at UNCW. She will be a key individual to the success of the Seahawk squad.

A pleasant surprise came to Coach Carmen this basketball season. An increased interest in the women's basketball team produced a large turnout. The large turnout was evidenced by the fact that Coach Carmen had to have a cut and some girls from last year's team were included in that cut.

Coach Carmen believes this team has a lot of potential as a team, but needs the use of practice to learn how to work together as a team. This year's schedule will be that of a tough one, states Carmen. "The Seahawk offense will fast break at times or play ball control, depending on the situation," Coach Carmen hopes that this team will be able to adjust to adversity and come back strong.

If pre-season games and practices are any indication of the upcoming squad, there will not be much of adversity.

Coach Carmen returns for second season

by Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

A reason for the upsurge in women's basketball at UNCW could be Eve Carmen. Coach Carmen is coming off of a 9-9 season which included the team winning 9 of the last 13 games.

As a high school student in Graham, N.C., Coach Carmen played on a successful volleyball ball and basketball team. Eve then went on to Appalachian State where she participated in basketball for two seasons before a broken hand sidelined her.

She has always been interested in recreational activities, she says, but never was certain that the coaching aspect of athletics was for her until she got a taste of it as a student teacher while at Appalachian.

"Working with the girls and sharing their excitement for the sport--that's what means most to me," Carmen says.

"Whether you have success or failure, it's all a very worthwhile part of life."

"In fact, my whole feeling about athletics is that it should be a relative part of living. It can't be everything, but you can't keep it separated from your overall personality either."

Carmen has obviously been successful in selling her philosophy to her players. Evidence clearly shows that Carmen employs this philosophy with a great deal of success. Note the strong finish by the women's basketball team of a year ago.

Carmen admits that what she accomplished last year was very pleasing to her, but not necessarily because the team won quite a few games.

"I feel that a lot of time you have to look deeper than winning for your goals," declares Coach Carmen. "A win lasts one night, or until you play again, but the attitudes and personal characteristics you can build in a person--they last a lot longer."

Eve Carmen has given UNCW women's basketball a viable program, and for that UNCW should be grateful.

This week has been a rather hectic one at the Seahawk Sports Office. Putting together a special basketball section has made for a few headaches here and there. I would like to give special thanks to: John Justus, UNCW Sports Information Director, for supplying me with much crucial information and pictures; to Dillon Bryant for most of the pictures; Jim Martin, who designed the cover; to Debbie Hatem who had to type some pretty complicated stuff; and all the writers and photographers who helped.

Housing shortage brings questions about rental referral agents

Campus Digest News Service
On many college campuses across the country housing has become a severe problem, as a result of larger numbers of people attending college.

This housing shortage has most recently manifested itself in the form of a lack of student apartments at many universities. To try and deal with this shortage many rental referral agencies have sprung up, both on the campuses and in many of the country's larger cities.

This phenomenon has recently lead to some serious problems in several cities and college campuses. There have been allegations against these companies charging the listings they provide could be found in any newspaper and that they really provide no constructive help in finding an apartment.

The way the agencies operate is by charging the clients a one-time fee, which usually allows them the use of $15 to up to a high of $100 for some of the larger metropolitan firms. For this fee the company provides a list of apartments that are for rent in the area in a price range the renter specifies.

The user of the apartment referral agency is welcome to return any time in the year to obtain more lists of apartments if he wishes to move out of the apartment he currently lives in.

This type of service can have several benefits for the consumer if a reputable agency is employed. Often the rental agencies can provide exclusive listings, which the renter could not obtain elsewhere. This can speed the process of finding an apartment. A rental referral agency can also help renters who may be unfamiliar with a particular city by guiding them to the type of apartments they could expect to rent.

For the unwary, however, there can be great risks and problems associated with the employment of these types of agencies. Many of the allegations revolve around the question of the agencies actual help in finding an apartment. In some cases the renter is just handed a list of what has been listed in the newspaper for the past several weeks. Usually the renter signs a contract when he pays the fee stating that he will not ask for a return of the fee.

Often the apartments have been rented already and the clients end up pursuing a list of dead-ends. The renter still hasn't found an apartment and he has lost time and money.

The solutions to this problem are fairly simple for a renter who is cautious. First, in dealing with a rental agency, employ one that has been in business for a long time and has a list of satisfied customers who can be used as references. Many agencies have been known to operate for a few months at one location and then suddenly leave with their clients' money.

Secondly, check out any services the campus might offer to help its students and faculty find housing. Many universities maintain lists of landlords who could be contacted for apartments. Following these suggestions will give a greater chance of finding an apartment with a minimum of fuss.

Trips abroad can cost less than you think for students

Campus Digest News Service

In days past, the college education of a young gentleman usually concluded with an all expense-paid trip to Europe. Now, most students go on to graduate school or into the business world yet a trip abroad can still be integrated into the student's studies, generally at a lower cost than might be expected.

Today's rising costs make travel abroad much more expensive than it was years ago. Additionally, inflation has caused the value of the dollar to decline on the world market, making the exchange rate for foreign currency higher.

These factors, combined with the ever-increasing cost of a college education, have made a trip to Europe an impossibility for many graduating seniors. But there are still students who manage to travel abroad every year, so there are opportunities for those who want to go.

Many colleges now offer foreign studies programs in which students can attend an overseas college or university for a semester to a year. In this way the student can earn credit toward graduation while gaining the experiences a foreign country has to offer. Many of these programs contain special scholarships and grants which can greatly reduce the cost to the applicant. Even when scholarships are not available the cost is seldom more than the regular tuition at the sponsoring institution.

The greatest extra expense the student is likely to incur is the cost of the plane fare to the country. By careful planning this cost can be greatly reduced.

Often the college will arrange a charter flight, if there are quite a few students going overseas. A student left on his own can still reduce the price by booking a flight in advance. Generally the farther ahead the spot is booked, the less costly it is.

The second greatest costs most of the students face overseas is travel expenses around the country itself. Most students study and attend classes during the week, then travel through the country on weekends to see all the sights. This can be expensive because of the high costs of gasoline, food and lodging.

All these costs can be controlled as long as a careful study of the situation is made. Many places in Europe are accessible by train—which is much cheaper than a car—and a Eurail pass can be purchased for unlimited travel. This saves car expenses while giving the student a chance to study on the train or watch the scenery.

Food costs can be cut by purchasing food at smaller, less tourist-orientated restaurants. Additionally, super markets and stores can be used to buy the food for an inexpensive picnic.

While the student's room and board will generally be at the college during the week, the student who travels will have to find his own lodging. Often youth hostels offer an inexpensive room, and many towns have small rooming houses where a bed can be found for the night.

Costs of traveling abroad are high, but usually they can be controlled.

Career seminars

The Career Planning and Placement Office, in cooperation with two student organizations, Sigma Alpha Beta and Phi Beta Lambda, are sponsoring a Resume/Interview Seminar on November 15 and 16 at 2:30 in King Auditorium.

Food Crusade launched by CARE to raise $6.5 million for impoverished ATLANTA... As CARE launches its twenty-fifth annual Food Crusade this holiday season, our goal is $6.5 million to help provide nourishing food during the year to 25 million impoverished people, mostly children throughout the developing world," announced Frank L. Goffio, executive director of the international aid and development agency.

"For more than 30 years, CARE has put the needs of children in the forefront of its programming. We are particularly pleased, then, that the United Nations has designated 1979 the International Year of the Child when worldwide efforts will be directed toward improving the quality of life for children and their families everywhere, particularly those in dire need. By helping to free children from a disease-prone, marginal existence, CARE feeding programs—and related development projects—provide a lifeline for millions today and give them a chance for a better life tomorrow," Goffio said.

During the International Year of the Child and thereafter, CARE expects to help more children than ever before through feeding and other programs designed to build self-support for poor families in more than 35 developing nations in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East.

"As nutritious food improves people's health," Goffio explained, "we also teach them how to expand their agricultural production, develop income-generating projects and improve their communities. MEDICO, the medical arm of CARE, trains nationals in a number of the developing countries where the need for better health care is urgent."

He pointed out that CARE provided at least $9.93 in aid and supporting services for each dollar donated last year. Combining U.S. Food-for-Peace commodities, host government contributions and donations of labor, land and available materials from the people being helped made this possible.

CARE food is distributed to millions of children, pregnant women and nursing mothers at mother-child health centers, schools, orphanages, day care centers, hospitals and nutrition centers. Parents, teachers and home economists receive nutrition education and they, in turn, teach others. CARE also provides food for families of workers who help construct irrigation systems, wells, tree nurseries, schools, nutrition centers, sanitary facilities and roads.

Besides the regular feeding programs in 20 countries, as needs arise and resources permit, CARE supplies food to any of the developing countries where the agency operates. This includes emergency food to disaster victims.

CARE has regularly scheduled food programs in Bangladesh, Bolivia, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Jordan's East Bank, Panama, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Tunisia, and in Gaza and Jordan's West Bank where the program is administered by CARE/Israel.

Contributions may be sent to CARE Food Crusade, 2581 Piedmont Road, N.E., Room 23-A, Atlanta, Georgia 30324.

Book review: 'Fields of Fire' brings dignity to veterans of Vietnam Vietnam: it has been called the first war the United States lost. It was also the nucleus of an era: the troubled sixties and the early seventies when people like Jane Fonda traveled to Hanoi, the capital of North Vietnam, in order to enlighten the American public on the shattering violence inflicted upon the North Vietnamese by an "imperialistic oppressor," the United States.

However, what the Jane Fondas and the college protesters all seemed to ignore was the American forced to fight in Vietnam: the soldier who realized the senseless violence in Vietnam better than any campus protester could, yet by circumstance was forced to fight and kill, or be fought against and killed. At that almost four years since the American pullout of Vietnam, the story of these men is being told. The voice of Jerry Butler has long since subsided, and instead we hear the voice of the man who was transformed to college protests because he didn't burn his draft-card or flee to Canada, but went to Vietnam, and if he was lucky, came back to write about it.

"And who are the young men we are asking to go into action against such solid odds? ... They are not McNamara's sons, or Bundy's. I doubt they're yours. And they know they're at the end of the pipeline. That no one cares. They know." This is a quote from a novel by James Webb, Fields of Fire. Webb, who served in Vietnam as a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps, writes in novel form of the American soldiers' experience in the Vietnam War at the height of the fighting in 1969. He creates a fictional platoon of Marines operating in the area of An Hoa, a hot-spot in South Vietnam. Webb takes much pain in showing the squad members in their circumstances prior to enlisting and being sent to the war. In reading, one becomes aware of the type of men who were sent overseas to fight the Vietnam War. They were the small town boys attempting to make good, become heroes if you will, the officers from military families carrying on the tradition of their fathers and grandfathers, and the misfits who were sent to Vietnam, unprepared by sheer nature of personality to handle what was to inevitably come their way.

Webb lucidly depicts the physical and mental torture of fighting an enemy who more times than not couldn't be seen or heard before striking. A soldier must develop a hush-sense to survive, yet even the best would die in a moment as if never alive in the first place. It became a strict matter of survival and one could only hope to stay alive long enough to learn some basic lessons. Thus, many of the soldiers became embittered as the war was not like the one their fathers or grandfathers fought, but a nasty, violent affair that turned one into a killing machine.

As a novelist, Webb's ability is studied and refined. He is able to project a swarm of differing characters with remarkable precision. He is sensitive to the various events and circumstances surrounding a personality and the intricate motivations of each. With ease, Webb immerses us in the thoughts of an ex-Harvard enlistee nick-named the Senator, and shows us his deepening gulf from sanity due to the violence and seemingly senseless death, or as the Senator puts it, "It is like existentialism. There is no meaning to the suffering except in the suffering itself." Yet Webb can switch and show us another enlistee, Snake, who is the antithesis of the Senator, an expert killer with exceptional bush-sense, but also a hero in the only way Vietnam allowed heroes: the men who fought for their platoon's safety, and for their friends, and for their sanity.

Fields of Fire is a completely thorough novel in handling the different aspects of the Vietnam War. We see how the "World" treats the returning soldiers through the example of a Marine sergeant-major who has successfully completed two tours of duty in Vietnam (successfully means still alive). Upon returning to the U.S., he is harassed by anti-war people, and his own haunting sense that the "World" is not real, or at least not as real as Vietnam. This is a stressed point in Fields of Fire. Vietnam became the only meaningful thing in the lives of some of the men: the senses were sharper in battle, the fear and painful thrill of imminent death, and the value a person attained if his skills were good.

Webb dignifies the men who fought and died in Vietnam. He brings respect to the experience that left 100,000 casualties in the Marine Corps alone, and to those "who became casualties upon returning."

'Wild and crazy' Steve reveals secrets

Steve Martin is known as one of the greatest comedians of the '70's. Martin has gained much of his fame by hosting "Saturday Night Live." Martin just completed his sixth edition as host of "SNL" and after seeing these performances I thought I knew Martin quite well. But after listening to his latest album, A Wild and Crazy Guy, I found out a few facts that I'll pass on to you.

Did you know Martin:

is co-author of a serious book just released, How to Get Along with Everyone, that he wrote with a guy he can't stand.

tells dirty jokes to young innocent children; studied philosophy in college and learned just enough to screw him up for life; plays tricks on children--he talks all wrong around them so the children can't speak proper language;

plays a guitar;

issued a new law--The Comedian Disclosure; goal in life is to have tickets to see him cost $800.00 each;

makes audiences quote the "Crime Stopper" and the "Nonconformist" oaths; wants to band cat juggling but he doesn't mind the use of cat handcuffs;

was quarterback and a cheerleader in high school.

Other common facts brought out in the LP are:

records are kept in heaven (so watch out!);

the Mona Lisa was painted in one stroke;

different countries don't speak English;

Steve Martin is not his real name.

RECORDS

And the biggest news flash of all--to be a "wild and crazy guy" you must wear a scent that makes you stand out in a crowd of millions--scent of tuna fish. The album is great. Best fishes to you too.

Fine Arts Committee invites you to 'Do it all nite in the Pub'

DO IT ALL NITE IN THE PUB on Friday, Nov. 17! Everyone mark their calendars! That is the night when the UNCW Fine Arts All NITE Film Festival will be held in the Pub beginning at 8 p.m. and running until...

Four spectacular films will be shown: "Gone With the Wind," "Zardoz," "Kelly's Heroes" and "Rabbit Test."

There will be no admission charged but refreshments will be available. Popcorn and cider will cost 25 cents each. All are advised to bring blankets and pillows so that they can be assured of a cozy and comfortable resting place.

"Gone With the Wind" is more than a good movie. It is almost a classic, and one of the best-loved films of all time. Producer David O. Selznick spent three years preparing this reverent love story of a roguish gambler and a pampered Southern belle during the Civil War and the Reconstruction. This epic romance embodies all that grandeur that was Hollywood in the thirties. Clark Gable and Vivien Leigh are forever remembered as Rhett Butler and Scarlett O'Hara.

"Zardoz" is the science fiction movie of the All Nite Film Festival. The year is 2293 and the world is desolation except for the Vortex, a Utopian commune ruled by the Eternals who have everything except the right to die. Into their paradise comes Sean Connery as a kind of reverse messiah with the gift of death. Director John Boorman (of "Deliverance") creates a complex, futuristic allegory that is an early warning system for contemporary mankind.

"Kelly's Heroes" stars Clint Eastwood, Telly Savalas, Donald Sutherland, Carroll O'Connor and Don Rickles. The plot takes place during World War II when a wacky group of soldiers discover $15 million of German gold stored in a small French bank. Bulldozing through enemy lines, they launch their own attack against the Germans

Eastwood leads the unruly group, and Sutherland is a hippie tank driver whose "good vibes" and skill save the venture.

"Rabbit Test" is celebrated comedienne Joan Rivers' first directorial attempt, and she brings her wacky, painted humor to life in the story of the world's first pregnant man. Billy Crystal of "Soap" stars as the young man who forgot to take precautions in his dalliance with a backroom beauty and is now in a family way. Crystal must struggle against an incredulous and then hostile world as he tries to keep his baby-even though everyone, including the president of the United States, wants the whole dismaying phenomenon removed from the public eye.

So mark your date-DO IT ALL NITE IN THE PUB on Nov. 17. Admission is free, cider and popcorn provided at 25 cents each. So don't forget to bring a blanket and/or pillows and your date... and DO IT ALL NITE IN THE PUB!

ENTERTAINMENT

'Bobby Deerfield' featured as last movie

David Sheehan on CBS-TV said that the movie "Bobby Deerfield" is "a movie of great beauty that has something to say about love and death... and the necessity of the one before the other."

"Bobby Deerfield" is the eleventh and final motion picture to be presented by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee this semester. It is to be shown on Tuesday, Dec. 5, at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Al Pacino, the Academy Award nominee, makes his first appearance in this love story. As a Formula One race car driver, he constantly comes face-to-face with death on the gruelling Grand Prix circuit.

This tension of the race track causes him to be withdrawn and defensive, until he meets and falls in love with beautiful Marthe Keller who teaches him to live life to the fullest, every minute.

"Lovely, lively film... adult entertainment in the best sense of the word" wrote

Richard Schickel in Time magazine. David Dugas of UPI said that "Bobby Deerfield" is "a romantic winner... thanks to a literate script, sensitive direction and stunning performances."

Rated PG, "Bobby Deerfield" was produced by Columbia Pictures in color and was directed by Sydney Pollack. The admission to this movie, except for those possessing season passes, will be 50 cents for UNCW students with I.D. cards and $1.00 for all non-students.

Literary magazine staff prepares for publication of fall issue

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

Are you interested in creative expression? Do you enjoy reading material authored by fellow students? If you answered "yes" to the preceding questions, then be sure to pick up a copy of the Atlantis when the fall 1978 edition is distributed around campus.

For the ninth consecutive year the Atlantis, UNCW's bi-annual literary magazine, is being readied for fall publication. The magazine consists of student-submitted poetry, prose and artwork, and is produced by an all-student volunteer staff. Richard Long holds the position of editor-in-chief, while the editors for the three main divisions include: Patricia Blanton, associate editor; Lea McDaniel, prose editor; Bobbi Padgett, poetry editor; and Sharon Ely, art editor.

Although the deadline for student contributions ended several weeks ago, preparations for this issue of the Atlantis are far from at a standstill. After the student submissions were collected and divided into the three main categories, there still remained the task of sorting through and choosing material to be considered for publication. After many meetings and much discussion, appropriate contributions are decided upon and these are the ones chosen for publication in the Atlantis. Editor Long reserves the right to approve or reject any materials before they appear in print.

The actual process of printing and distribution of the Atlantis is a somewhat more complicated matter. According to Long, once the material is chosen for publication, it is typeset on galleys and then laid out page by page. Once it is satisfactorily arranged to the specifications permitted by the size of the magazine, Jackson & Bell Printing Company take charge of the printing and binding procedures. According to Long, David Peterson, an employee at Jackson & Bell, "has been very helpful in working with us. He explains what sort of materials will reproduce well and in general helps make the magazine a success."

The cost of this issue of the Atlantis, which will be approximately forty-four pages, will be in excess of $2,000. This sum includes the printing, binding and distribution routines, and will allow for 2000 copies of the magazine to be distributed to the student body. The funds for publication expenses are allocated by the SGA.

Explained Long, "This year we were allowed $5,000 to meet the costs of publishing two issues of the Atlantis. After paying for the Atlantis calendars that were distributed at the beginning of the year and meeting the expenses for the fall edition of the magazine, we are left with $2,500. This should cover for the spring issue of the Atlantis as well."

The fall issue of the Atlantis is scheduled to make an appearance on campus by December 6. Copies will be available in the library, Kenan Hall, the New Classroom Building and the Pub.

GRE fee waivers available for qualifying students

The Graduate Record Examinations Board is still offering fee waivers to UNCW students who qualify.

The Fee Waiver Program is made available for the benefit of students who aspire to graduate school but find the GRE test fee an economic barrier. Students eligible for fee waivers are those currently enrolled as seniors at the university receiving financial aid, and with an estimated parental contribution of $200 or less for their senior year of college.

Fee waiver certificates may be used by students to register for the National Administration (including walk-in registration), Special Administration Service, or the Summer Institutional Testing Program of the GRE. The certificates are submitted in lieu of the basic test fee of $13.00 for the Aptitude Test or an Advanced Test or $26.00 for both. Surcharges for walk-in testing ($10.00 over the test fee) and the Special Administration service ($5.00 over the fee) are not waived, nor are charges for late registration or additional score reports.

Fee waiver certificates for the Graduate Record Examination are available in the Student Affairs Office, Room 104, of the Administration Building.

CLEP, placement exams given

Students of UNCW may earn credit-by-examination. Credit is awarded for acceptable scores on certain CLEP and Advanced Placement examinations.

These examinations are offered to UNCW students twice a year—in August and in January. Students wishing to take any of the examinations must register with the Counseling and Testing Center. For the Jan. 8 test date, the registration deadline is Nov. 30, 1978.

Registration includes the payment of a service charge. The charge is $5.00 for each Advanced Placement test and $5.00 for one CLEP examination. Two or more CLEP examination may be taken for $10. Make check payable to UNC Wilmington.

Library hours extended

The Library will be open from 6 p.m. until 11:30 p.m. on Sunday, Nov. 26.

Also, the Library will remain open until 10 p.m. on Saturday, Dec. 9. On Sunday, Dec. 10, the closing hour will be extended from 11:30 p.m. to 2 a.m.

We hope that these extra hours will help you to prepare for final exams.

County referendum on liquor by the drink to be decided January 12

New Hanover County is gearing up for a liquor by the drink referendum scheduled for Jan. 12 in which voters will decide whether mixed drinks will be served in this county as provided by the recently passed local option bill approved in the General Assembly.

Both pro- and anti-liquor by the drink forces have lined up organizations which are expected to wage vibrant campaigns between now and election day.

For now, these groups will be concentrating on registering eligible voters by the Dec. 14 deadline.

New Hanover will be following the lead of several other counties and communities who have already held local referendums. While restaurant owners of such cities as Charlotte and Chapel Hill are already serving mixed beverages under recently approved regulations, voters in Black Mountain have rejected the option. Other localities have also voted on the issue.

The pro-liquor forces, led by the New Hanover Committee for a Better Way, have argued their case on a four-point advantage basis: better control of distribution and consumption; economic benefits of tax revenues; increased tourism and business; and convenience.

The anti-liquor forces, however, supported by the county's Christian Action League, have said that mixed beverage sales would lead to increased consumption and increases in alcohol-related crimes. They have also challenged the legality of the General Assembly bill, noting that absentee voters are not allowed to cast ballots.

The new regulations would require that the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Board continue to govern distribution and sales. Restaurants seating 36 or more patrons whose primary business is serving food will be eligible for liquor licenses, as well as private social or fraternal clubs.

Elections officials in the county have reported an increase in registered voters since early October, bringing the total to nearly 42,000.

One liquor foe has challenged supporters to an open debate on the issue, although the supporters have declined the offer.

An administrator with the ABC board estimates that as many as 40 businesses in the county could be mixing drinks by late February if the referendum is approved.

"Well, I feel strongly both ways."

Neither side is predicting victory in the battle, and both are pointing to a relatively large number of undecided voters to determine the outcome.

Petition is critical of department chairman, calls for changes

by Bobby Parker

Eighteen faculty members of the Department of Creative Arts have filed a petition with university administration officials calling for changes in the department to counter a "demoralizing and negative" atmosphere which the petitioners say has existed since Dr. Terry Theodore was named department chairman in August.

The petition alleges that there have been personal differences between Theodore and other department faculty, and also says that there needed to be a clarification of the authority of the chairman before his appointment.

The Creative Arts Department was organized this year combining the drama, music, art and communications curricula under one department label. Each curriculum maintains certain autonomies, although degrees are conferred by the department.

The petition was signed by all faculty members in the department except one.

Academic Dean Daniel Plyler, responding to the petition, has told the faculty members that a complete evaluation of the organization of the department will be conducted this spring.

Plyler said that a course of action had been devised for the remainder of this year, but beyond that the future of the department's structure depends on that evaluation and long-term plans.

Plyler said that the spring semester would be a "cooling off period" to allow department personnel to resolve personal differences which have flared because of the problems.

Several faculty members who signed the petition were contacted for comment, but all refused to discuss the issue for publication.

Dr. Theodore also declined to comment except to say he believes the administration has handled the situation in a proper manner.

Reports from various sources within the Creative Arts Department indicate that faculty members believe that Theodore had overstepped his authority in making unilateral decisions about departmental policy.

Among the immediate changes instituted by the administration has been a requirement that the coordinators of the four curricula be involved in decisions of the department.

The curriculum coordinators are the former chairmen of the individual departments—Dr. Terry Rogers of drama, Dr. Richard Deas of music and Claude Howell of art—and Betty Jo Welch of communications, which was formerly a part of the drama department.

Plyler said that the role of the department chairman would be "restricted" for the rest of the year, with specific duties assigned to the chairman and the curriculum coordinators.

The department's administration "has been specifically outlined, whereas it has not been in other departments," Plyler said.

According to Plyler, the situation is due to the "complex problems" of the reorganization process as well as a breakdown of communications among department personnel.

"Dr. Theodore moved into a situation in which there were obviously many problems already," Plyler said. He added that the problems dealt mainly with the readjustment of departmental personnel to the new structure.

Plyler stated that the university had been considering the reorganization of the three departments for some time to bring them under one administration.

Since the three departments can not confer separate degrees, university officials thought it more reasonable to combine the curricula into one department while retaining some of the autonomy.

Plyler said that the three former department chairmen had worked extensively with the reorganization effort since its planning stages.

The positions of curriculum coordinators were established to administer activities unique to each area of study, while the position of department chairman was created "to bring it all together and make sure there was . . . an overall thrust" for creative arts, the Academic Dean stated.

A search committee was formed to select a chairman which included the four faculty members who have since been appointed curriculum coordinators—Rogers, Deas, Howell and Welch—as well as Ann Conner of the Art Department and Lorraine Lueft of the Music Department.

Plyler said that the university had received an "avalanche of applications" which had been narrowed down to three by the search committee after a "laborious task" of reviewing the applicants.

These three, which did not include Theodore, were invited to campus for interviews. After the search committee could not agree on a choice (See Petition, page 11)

Liquor by the drink is the common sense choice

Local liquor by the drink advocates are calling it, quite simply, a "better way." They are right, because liquor by the drink is an issue of methods, not morals. Those who oppose it in the guise of a religious crusade against alcohol are missing the point entirely because the choice is not between liquor or no liquor; it is between one system of sales and another.

In many ways the decision for mixed drink sales comes down to a common sense choice. It seems so illogical to force consumers to buy an entire bottle of liquor when all they may want is one drink. It seems so illogical to require customers to bring their bottles, under wraps, into a restaurant and not allow them to buy it on the premises. And it seems so illogical to push drinkers into consuming an entire bottle in one evening because transporting it home unsealed is illegal when they could have their beverage served in the quantity they want.

The notion that liquor by the drink will automatically bring an increase in public drunkenness and driving under the influence offenders is purely off base. Studies have shown that these offenses have actually decreased in our neighboring states of South Carolina and Virginia since they adopted mixed drink sales by as much as 17 and 29 percent. Studies at UNC's Institute of Government also have shown no correlation between alcohol abuse and the method of sales.

If adopted by New Hanover County voters on January 12, there will not be a drastic change in the control of alcoholic beverages by state agencies. Sales will be strictly regulated by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board as they have been in the past. Mixed drink permits must be obtained, and only establishments whose business is mainly serving food and private clubs will be eligible. Also, a mixed drink licensee could not knowingly sell to a minor or an intoxicated customer, a significant regulation not presently on the books.

THIS NEWSPAPER'S OPINION

Then there are the economic benefits of liquor by the drink. For the state, there will be additional revenue in a new $10 per gallon tax on liquor sold to mixed drink licensees. The boost to tourism would soon become obvious when out-of-state visitors no longer consider it an inconvenience to stop over in one of the last states to allow mixed drinks.

Opponents of liquor by the drink like to think that they are fighting a moral battle to limit the spread of alcoholic beverages in a society whose values are generally going bankrupt. But not even the most ardent opponent would believe that if we vote against the liquor referendum, abstinence would prevail here or anywhere else.

And those who argue that the local liquor option bill passed by the General Assembly last spring amounts to state advocacy of liquor are totally unrealistic. Who, after all, operates liquor stores in this state anyway?

The trend of localities who have initiated early referendums on liquor by the drink has been positive: drinks are now being served in Charlotte, Chapel Hill and Pinehurst, among other places. We hope that New Hanover County--and, eventually, the entire state--will follow this lead and choose the logic of a better way.

Dean's List compromise

To the Editor:

In following the running battle on requirements for the Dean's List, I am struck with the obdurate attitudes of both parties. When one looks at the different requirements in various schools, it seems obvious that there is more than a single correct answer and that a soundly based compromise could achieve all objectives and satisfy all parties.

The Faculty Senate's requirements appear sound on the three points: no grade less than a "B," average grade of 3.2, and a minimum load of 15 semester hours. But the Student Legislature's claims of unfairness under some circumstances, in view of the established "full-time" load of 12 hours, also deserves more than cursory dismissal.

In arriving at 15 hours and 3.2 average, surely the Faculty Senate gave weight to both grades and number of courses.

The total effect of their considered judgment is 48 quality points per semester to be placed on the Dean's List. Then, why not simply state that 48 quality points is a criterion, with no grade less than a "B," and with a minimum average grade of 3.2?

For students with the nominal full time load of 12 hours, a 4.0 average would have to be achieved, for 13 hours, 3.7 average, and for 14 hours, 3.4 average. I do not believe that the Faculty Senate can say with professional certainty that four "B's" and one "A" is a more noteworthy achievement than four "A's" in the same time frame.

At the present time, the university is in a tenuous position where it may graduate a student Summa Cum Laude without his ever having been placed on the Dean's List. Surely, the Dean cannot afford to have been so short-sighted... or inconsistent.

Fred Smith

Yes on LBD

To the Editor:

On Jan. 12 the voters of New Hanover County will decide whether mixed beverages will be sold in local restaurants and social establishments.

Some people view the mixed beverage referendum as a moral or religious issue--and that is certainly their right.

However, others, including the New Hanover Mixed Beverage Committee, the Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce and DARE, see the issue in social and economic terms.

Supporters of the measure have identified four major benefits to the county--control of the consumption and distribution of alcoholic beverages, economic development, increased tax revenues and convenience, or being able to buy one drink instead of a full bottle.

Economically, passage of the measure will mean increased tourist and convention business. Tourist dollars reach many types of businesses, including retail outlets, service stations, grocery stores, restaurants and others.

The county will benefit an additional $10 per gallon tax under the mixed beverage system. Of this tax, which will be paid by licensed operators, $9 will go to the county general fund and $1 will be used by the N.C. Department of Human Resources for alcoholic rehabilitation programs.

Your vote is most important in this election. If the measure does not pass on Jan. 12, it can not be voted on again for three more years. If you are not a registered voter, you may register at the Board of Elections office, in the county building at Fourth and Chestnut streets, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, or on Saturday, Dec. 9, from 9 a.m. to noon. The deadline for registration is Dec. 14.

If you would like more information on the mixed beverage issue or would like to help us, please call the committee office, 762-4203 or 762-5622, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., Monday through Friday. The office is located at 107 Chestnut St.

VOTE YES - JAN. 12.

Thanks for success

To the Editor:

So many times the success of an event depends on the cooperation and concerted effort of numerous people. The All Nite Film Festival is one such successful occasion, and this is a sincere letter of thanks to everyone who has shared in this effort. To Debbie Doyle and Neva Godwin who have every right to say, "I told you so!!" To Mark Davis, Tom Prestia and Gary Beggs who did it all night and even into the early morning hours. To Linda Moore and Jon Greene who supplied me with invaluable ideas. To James Brown who always has a good word and never gets any credit for his hard work. To Tommy Long, Alan Capps, Pete Divoky, and Steve Parker, thanks for doing it when it was most needed to be done. To Doug Swink, I owe you one (I owe you a whole lot). To Phil Welch, thanks for a good deal. And to the students of UNCW, a special thanks to you for Doing It All Nite and we're going to Do It Again!!

Support football

To the Editor:

This year, UNCW club football is making history by playing N.C. State for the regional club football championship. There has been an interest in starting a Division III football program at UNCW; however, there has also been Athletic Department opposition based on a lack of student interest.

In order to convince the Athletic Department and the Board of Trustees that there is a genuine and sincere student support for a Division III football program at UNCW, a petition is being circulated today, Thursday, and Friday. Every student that has an interest in a Division III football program at UNCW is encouraged to sign the petition and show your support.

Petitions will be available at the SGA office in the Pub, cafeteria, all dorms and will be circulated by students. Also, petitions will be available Friday night at the pep rally at the Patio, at the club football championship game and the Christmas dance.

We hope that everyone will support the club football team this Friday night and support a division III football program by signing the petition.

Tragedy of Guyana hits hard on American people who just can't understand

It was the most bizarre news story in many years. When all the reports were in, the death toll had topped 900 in the religious cultists' commune tucked neatly out of sight in the jungles of Guyana. The riddle of Jim Jones and his People's Temple church puzzled the minds of Americans as the horror of mass suicide and murder reached home—striking hard and striking fast.

We will never know the real, absolute story of the tragedy of Guyana. We'll hear interpretations and speculation, but those of us who receive the news through newspapers and television can't possibly fully understand what happened, how it happened and why it happened. We can only think very hard about what we have heard, trying to accept it and trying to believe it.

The hundreds of followers who were led by the sick mind of Jim Jones were Americans—twentieth century Americans—and it is this fact which hit hardest as the nation learned of their deaths. Had they been members of an African tribe or a Far Eastern religious sect, we could have more readily accepted the story, explaining it away as something we just don't understand.

But the People's Temple was different. From the outside it displayed all the humanity and Christianity that our society looks upon with favor. Its members apparently broke down the barriers of racial hatred and espoused a sense of caring for the poor and unfortunate.

Those few Americans who had ever heard of the church before the tragic events could never have imagined the conditions that are now revealed to have existed in the People's colony at Jonestown. People held against their will, forced to sign over property and material wealth, induced to labor long hours in the fields—and convinced to sign a suicide pact and "die with dignity" by a man who claimed to be divine.

It really, really boggles the mind.

How could one man control the minds of hundreds of others to such a grand extent? What were the Jonestown victims really searching for? How much of their actions came from their own free choice and how much was the result of brainwashing?

The harshest critics of American culture would have us believe that this is an indictment of our society, that Jonestown is the result of a corrupt and corroded nation that has lost its moral and spiritual direction. But Guyana was not exclusively an American tragedy; it was a "people" tragedy which cannot be limited to political boundaries. Still, it is not difficult to understand that non-Americans would wish to adopt this "their problem" attitude to the situation; were the victims not Americans, we would probably make the same defense.

The fact is that the Guyana experience shows the emotional and psychological weaknesses of ordinary people. The Jonestown victims were mostly ordinary everyday people, and it is important for us to remember that.

Jim Jones knew that by espousing kindness and love he could use the basic insecurities of his followers to his own advantage. He gave those people precisely what they thought they wanted—something to hope and live for. And finally, when his following was threatened by outside interference, he led them to murder and self-destruction in an act of cruelest inhumanity. The irony will never be reconciled that one revered as the most caring leader could be capable of such unfeeling horror.

The big question will be, how many more such mad persons are there capable of exactly the same thing. Jones is indeed not without comparison in modern times—from Hitler to Manson.

If Jonestown is seen as representative of what can happen when a mad man learns to use psychological exploitation, then we can also find consolation in the fact that there were some, at least, who realized something was wrong and tried, no matter how belatedly, to help those trapped in Jones' community.

Congressman Leo Ryan and the three American journalists who were murdered when they threatened to disturb Jones' world paid for their humane concern with their lives. What Ryan and his party tried to do is representative of a society of people who really feel concern for their fellow human beings. Then actions were of their own choice; the people of Jonestown were deceived into action.

The incredible story of the People's Temple will be with us long after the initial shock waves are felt. Questions will remain in the minds of people everywhere who realize its significance not as a political or religious issue, but a major sociological question of our times. The implications are big, and perhaps we may never know or understand what they really are.

The biggest question that will continue to haunt us is this: could it have happened to me? Could I have been swept along by the power of a man such as Jim Jones? Could I have been convinced to commit murder and agree that suicide is "death with dignity"?

Most of us would probably say "no" quickly to all of these questions if someone asked us. But if we really thought about them and were completely honest with ourselves, the answer would more likely be "I don't know."

It is when the Guyana tragedy is viewed in such personal terms that it really becomes frightening.

The Stillpoint:

Vivan Martindale
Campus Minister

I have mixed feelings about writing this column because already we may be becoming desensitized by media exposure of the cultic occurrence in Guyana. At the same time, I am dismayed by comments such as that from a National Institute of Mental Health physician who said this was an isolated experience and there is really nothing to be concerned about. Is it sensational exploitation of a tragic event or a whitewash job by spineless bureaucrats? My suspicion is that the cultic phenomenon is much more complex than either.

It raises a multiplicity of Phenomenon of cults raises complicated questions questions—the crassly realistic one of why should taxpayers foot the multimillion dollar bill to bring "home" nearly 1000 persons who chose to leave the U.S.? There are some obviously differing theological beliefs dealing with the nature of God and human beings and the relationships between them. Fundamental freedoms and legalities seem strangely juxtaposed: the freedom of religion and the civil rights of individuals and/or communities.

Whose freedom is most important? My own Baptist tradition screams separation of church and state while my gut cries for protection from the manipulative abuse and exploitation of something called religion. My sensibilities have difficulty holding those two together.

We look at an event such as the People's Temple suicides and it seems far away from this sleepy river city. Yet even here there are friends of those who died in Jonestown, and the soldiers from Fort Bragg will not soon forget their task of shipping bodies back. In addition, a number of other cultic groups have been active on the UNCW campus in the last few years. One group successfully solicited funds throughout the dormitories at least once and possibly several times. Others have sold flowers and one group promised students answers to prayers and special divine gifts and revelations . . . for a rather sizeable payment.

All of us have a need to make sense out of our lives and that may leave us (even the "Rev") susceptible to cultic influences at one time or another. We allow ourselves to be manipulated daily by a wide variety of people and media stimuli. So how can we become more aware of what we will allow to influence our lives.

1. Know what you believe—not just going through the motions but those internal characteristics and assumptions which make you tick. If you are not sure, don't worry, but keep looking with someone you know and trust.

2. Be wary of someone who offers you "quickie," pat answers for your problems and all the worlds needs (particularly for a fee). The "charismatic" leader who offers freedom from freedom can quickly gain influence over those who wish to be free of the responsibility of making decisions.

3. Do not be afraid to use your critical, investigative thinking that should be a part of your research in philosophy, the science literature and other areas. It is handy for other reasons than simply getting a grade.

4. Be careful of groups that seem to have no employment, have special retreats, and seem to "love you to death." This sounds cynical but they are smooth as silk and any group worth it's salt should allow free and critical inquiry.

5. Do not hesitate to inquire of people you trust (campus ministry, clergy, close friends, faculty, counseling and testing, etc.) about the validity of a particular group. From my Christian perspective the truth will make us free!

Finally, let me recommend a book which seems to be the most balanced treatment of contemporary cultic influences. It does not deal with every group but does explore psycho-social, religious and legal ramifications. Joel A. MacCollam, an Episcopal priest in upstate New York, will publish The Weekend That Never Ends in the spring of 1979 through Seabury Press.

Legislature hears report, orders investigation of yearbook

by Bobby Parker

The Student Legislature heard a report from senior business seminar students who have been studying the operations and planning for campus radio station WLOZ-FM at its meeting last week.

The group had sought SGA approval of their study earlier this semester and received it after questions were raised about WLOZ's operations and organization.

Paul Denison, a member of the study group, told the Legislature that they had received good cooperation from the station's staff in compiling their report.

Denison said that staff members had learned that "running a radio station does not mean turning a record and letting it go but wear the air." Denison added that the staff seems "willing to change" in light of some of his group's recommendations.

One of the major changes urged by the study is the method of selecting a station manager. The group suggests an advisory board of two faculty members choose the manager and approve other appointments.

Currently, the manager is chosen by the Media and Publications Board, which also chooses editors of the Seahawk, Atlantis and Fledgling.

Denison said that the change would improve the present system by combating the "cliquish" nature of the current staff.

The study also recommends increasing WLOZ's broadcast power to 100 watts, improving its business operations and implementing long-range planning.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap reported to the Legislature that an initial meeting of a graduation committee had been held with himself, Senior Class President Patricia Blanton and administrative officials present.

Dunlap said that committee will make recommendations to the Chancellor for location of graduation exercises, procedures for receiving diplomas and who will speak at commencement. The Chancellor will make the final decisions, Dunlap stated.

Dunlap reported that the issue of UNCW's club football team becoming an NCAA team will again likely come up at the January meeting of the Board of Trustees.

The trustees approved a feasibility study last April on the football matter, but they reversed that decision in July because interest had reportedly waned.

Dunlap also announced that Homecoming will be held the second week of February with the Tuesday, Feb. 13, basketball contest with East Carolina being the Homecoming game.

Investigative Committee Chair Karin Whaley asked for approval to look into the increased cost of yearbooks this year and why over 300 books from last year still remain in the Fledgling office. The Legislature directed Whaley to conduct this investigation.

Whaley also reported that an earlier investigative effort had turned up a "catch 22" situation in the matter of women's soccer. She explained that although a school must provide a women's team in any sport that it supports a men's team, a team must also have competition.

In the case of women's soccer, there are no teams in North Carolina to compete with UNCW if it had a team.

Representative Jon Fail announced his resignation to accept a spring internship with state government in Raleigh.

Representative Wes Armstrong announced his resignation after the meeting due to his plans to attend UNC-Chapel Hill next spring.

This leaves two representative-at-large legislative seats to be filled. Any full-time student is eligible and should contact the SGA office if interested.

Absent from the meeting were Dawn Dickers, Karin Weise, Patricia Blanton, Nancy Malpass, John Wiky, Ricky Gunter and Derrick Anderson.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in room C-218.

Campus Chuckles: Pant, stumble, gasp: the art of running

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

Running. Isn't it great? With everybody hitting the footpaths these days it's kind of hard to ignore the jogging factor. Oh, I run now and then, but frankly, I just don't think it was meant to be. After three stifle bruises and two shin splints, I've come to the conclusion that running will never last.

I can hear the screaming masses already. Before I'm stampeded by a wave of muscled marathoners, let me explain. The uninitiated athlete naively assumes that the only detriment to jogging is exhaustion, pure and simple. Nothing could be further from the truth. And as proof that running is about as uncomplicated as pre-calculus, I offer A Runner's Schedule, taken from the true-life experiences of a former road-runner.

6:30 a.m. Our man leaps out of bed as soon as the alarm goes off, further proof that joggers are a breed apart from normal men. (I can't tell you what I'd do if some sadist set my clock for six-thirty in the morning!)

6:35 a.m.: Fresh and eager, our athlete pulls on his macho imitation leather warm-up suit, yanks up his joggers support socks and laces up his specially-made runner's shoes in a frenzy of anticipation. The O.J. calls! Between deep-knee bends he might gulp a glass or two of that wonder juice; if he is a particularly rugged specimen, he may manfully swallow a couple of raw eggs. (The squeamish are advised to not observe this last.)

6:45 a.m.: Out in the sleeping neighborhood, our runner pounds the pavement, ignoring the stinging rain and his stinging calves. True athletes are immune to cramps, so he grits his teeth and patters on.

6:50 a.m.: Here comes something even Bruce Jenner couldn't ignore: Igor, the neighborhood terror. Igor is a Doberman Pinscher whose favorite snack is a sweaty runner.

6:52 a.m.: Our man learns the real meaning of the word sprint. Alas, Igor is a sprinter too, with lots of staying power. Yet even Igor doesn't have the Winner's Edge that comes from wearing Adidas sneakers. Nor can Igor's four man-eating legs keep up with two legs propelled by stark terror. The runner draws ahead, leaving certain mutilation far behind. Once again man has triumphed over beast.

6:57 a.m.: Can man triumph over the elements as well? The former stinging rain has turned to slashing sleet, and ice is forming on our hero's sweatband. Yet still he perseveres, slogging onwards through the slush and cold.

7:00 a.m.: The runner runs over a little old lady coming out to get the morning paper. He does not stop. By this time his arches are set on Automatic Response and he can't stop.

7:05 a.m.: The end is in sight! One brave runner staggers weakly into his own beloved driveway, slavering and wild-eyed.

7:08 a.m.: A former runner begins applying liniment to every inch of his whimpering body. Iodine is dribbled over fangmarks scattered from ankle to kneecap, and the Adidas are hurled into the back of the closet. As a last gesture of defiance, our ill-fated runner cancels his subscription to "Runner's World."

Need I say more? And yet, ask any fanatic runner why he runs, and the answer is guaranteed. For his health, of course. Why else?

Racquetball club being formed

On Thursday, Nov. 30, racquetball enthusiasts gathered in Trask Coliseum for what was hopefully the first of many meetings of the UNCW Racquetball Club. Officers were elected and a constitution was written to be presented to the Student Legislature.

The main goal of the club is to get all the racquetballers at UNCW together to share in the fun and excitement, not to mention the exercise. What better way is there to improve your game than competing with the variety of players that the club promises?

If you're worried about not being good enough, and you don't want to be the only novice in the club, well, forget it, because you are one of the main targets of the club. It should be emphasized that experience is by no means a prerequisite. Still, on the other hand, the tough competition is there to give anyone a rough match.

Possibilities for the club include reserved court time, travel to other cities and schools to compete with their clubs and hosting local or statewide tournaments. By early next semester we hope to bring the club into full swing. Look for details of the next meeting, try to attend and bring a friend.

If you have any questions, feel free to see our faculty advisor, Dr. Wolff (Trask), Mitch Covington (458-8310), Jerry Monahan (392-0259) or Dianne Matthews (Biology Department).

A study compiled by senior business seminar students says that campus radio WLOZ-FM has the potential to be "a tough competitor" with commercial stations in the area if the station's broadcast power is increased to 100 watts and certain organizational and programming changes are made.

The study also recommends that the current method of selecting the station manager be changed so that the manager is appointed by an advisory board of two faculty members. The manager is now appointed by the Media and Publications Board.

Six students, under the direction of Dr. Stephen Harper of the Business Department, compiled the SGA-sanctioned report. They presented their findings last week to members of the Student Legislature.

The report focuses on three areas of concern for WLOZ: marketing, budgeting and internal operations.

Although members of the study group cautioned that an increase in power should come after organizational changes, the report says that recent rulings by the Federal Communications Commission make the increase a feasible change.

The FCC no longer licenses new radio stations below 100 watts and has given stations below that wattage a timetable to upgrade their broadcasting power.

WLOZ should also convert to stereo, the report stated, since the expense would be relatively small.

The report says, however, that these changes should be made "assuming that the station begins operating in a business-like manner."

"... WLOZ should be operated as an on-going business, not as a hobby," the report concluded.

The report was critical of the fact that WLOZ's physical facility does not have a separate office for its business personnel. It said that "an office atmosphere should be established and preserved" by converting one room of the station into a business office.

The bookkeeping and filing systems also need upgrading, according to the report.

A random survey conducted by the group found that the "target market" of the station is the UNCW campus. WLOZ was listed as the second most-listened to station of UNCW students surveyed.

The survey included 200 university students and 100 area high school students. It asked questions about listening habits, program preferences and specifically about WLOZ.

Results of the survey were tabulated separately for the university and high school respondents, and overall results were also tabulated.

High School students were selected at random from New Hanover and Hoggard High Schools in Wilmington.

The overall results showed that WHSL-FM captures the largest share of the market with WGNL and WLOZ-FM in second and third. The stations' shares were 70, 39 and 35 percent, respectively.

Eighty percent of those surveyed were aware that UNCW has a campus station, but only 59 percent knew its location on the radio dial.

Rating the performance of WLOZ, 32 percent said it was "good," 22 percent said "fair," 8 percent said "excellent" and 3 percent said "poor." Thirty-five percent gave the station no rating.

The responses to program preferences showed that nearly 60 percent want more campus news on WLOZ while 29 percent requested state and national news.

Respondents ranked their musical preferences in the following order: rock and roll, top 40, disco, beach music, progressive rock, jazz and other categories.

Using these survey results, the group recommended that the station diversify its programming to serve all interests and also that WLOZ "promote a good station image" through institutional advertising "to let people know where they are located on the FM dial."

The report's budget analysis noted that the station is operating on a $5500 budget for 1978-79 and concluded that, with a 10 percent increase for inflation, this amount would also be sufficient for next year.

The group found that $6500 would be needed to convert the station to 100 watts stereo, with $5700 going to new equipment purchases and $800 for legal and technical consultation.

In its look at the internal operations of the station, the report devised a hierarchy for staff organization which set up an advisory board with significant powers over the student staff. The advisory board would consist of one advisor each from the Department of Communications and business.

The advisory board would have the authority to name the student station manager and would approve the appointments of the manager to the positions of program, news and music directors and business manager.

According to the report's specifications, the advisory board would also approve all expenditures over $25 except routine expenses such as telephone service. Other powers of the board would include general supervision "to assure that the station is being run in a professional and business like manner" and to "assist and advise the Executive Staff in any manner the board deems necessary."

The hierarchy also called for a special technical advisor who would advise the station on electronic and equipment concerns.

The report lists job descriptions of the various student staff positions from station manager to disc jockey.

Operating hours recommended by the group totaled 138 per week during the fall and spring semesters—24 hours on Friday and Saturday and 18 hours each other day.

Other recommendations of the report included:

• Moving into better physical facilities, preferably in the new student union building which is now in the planning stages. The study said that this should be a permanent move because of the cost involved in moving station equipment.

• A review of station operations should be made periodically and policies should change as the station grows.

The students involved in the study were Debbie Ferrell, Paul Denison, Robin Remblad, Maurice Smith, Jackie Shanklin and Harrison Bradford.

The recommendations will now be considered by a committee of representatives from WLOZ, SGA and the Depart-

Student accepted as state intern

Jonathon Faili, a junior and political science major, has been awarded a legislative internship next spring in Raleigh. Faili's initial responsibilities will include conducting research for the North Carolina General Assembly.

January 8 marks the beginning of Faili's assignment when he will begin the orientation program that will prepare him for his duties in the Capitol city. He will be attending classes at N.C. State. Some of the required courses will be politics and a six-hour seminar entitled "Legislature in Action." Faili will be earning $75 per week by participating in General Assembly activities. His internship will last a maximum of six months or as long as the Assembly remains in session. Commenting on how he happened to receive this opportunity, Faili explained that applications for the position were distributed at universities across the state. Twenty-five students were selected for personal interviews, then ten finalists were chosen, and finally Faili received word that the post was his.

After completing his stint in the General Assembly, Faili plans to continue his education by attending law school and then setting up practice in North Carolina. Faili has been active in local politics in recent months; his latest venture was doing campaign research for State Senator B.D. "Bennie" Schwartz, in this area's latest election.

Commented Faili on his award, "This is the first time anyone from UNCW has won anything of this nature and I am very proud to represent the University in Raleigh."

Dear Diary:

On the way to Disneyland

by J. Dillon Bryant

Dear Diary—

I awake at 4:00 a.m. on this Thursday morning knowing I have to pack, shower, shave and head to the UNCW campus by 6:30 a.m. for the bus ride to New Hanover County Airport.

The UNCW Seahawk basketball players, coaches Malcom, Coach Holdt, Sports Information Director John Jones, Mike Fisher of WUN radio, Gene Muller, of WWAY-TV and myself are loaded for Florida to play in and cover the Sunshine Doubleheader with Florida State and Northern Universities.

I look out the window and see it is raining. I think it moved as I take my shower what foul gets up at 4:00 a.m. on a rainy morning? Then I remember Florida is full of warm sunshine, we're going to Disney World, and we play two major league basketball teams.

I leave my house at 8:15 and head for a local doughnut shop to grab a quick bite to eat and a cup of coffee. I glance at the newspaper and see Orlando. Florida's temperature should be 82 degrees. That fact awakes me first, and gets me excited and a little impatient to arrive there. I pay for my snack and drive in the drizzling rain to the campus to meet with everyone else.

It's 6:15 when Coach Bill Brooks, Athens Director for UNCW puts out of the parking lot and heads for the Airport where we quickly take off. After a quick stop in Fayetteville we land in Atlanta for a 1½ hour layover. As the team walks on to check in, Mike, Gene and myself go to grab a bite to eat. It is now 9:45. The waitress is slow and we have to rush to finish so we can catch our plane—we have 15 minutes. We do an O. J. Simpson imitation through the airport only to find our flight has been cancelled and we are scheduled to take off 5 hours from now—3:30.

We try to find the team and in the process of checking in Mike has trouble getting his equipment past the guards. "You can't take this on the plane! What is it! Let me see a business card and a drivers license!" says one official rudely. Mike searches his wallet and finds one of only a few business cards. We get through and join the team to find that we have been booked on a 1:40 flight.

Coach Gibson is upset and rightly so. By game time he and most of his players will have been up 17 hours without the rest he had counted on. The chairs and benches are hard in Atlanta's Airport and it is next to impossible to sleep. Several doze, others stare at papers, magazines, etc. . . . the ones that were asleep are awakened by the typewriter case I knock over. I feel bad about it.

We board Eastern flight 31 at 1:40 for our final stop—Gainesville. Most of us sleep the whole way while others ponder about the game and the sunshine that awaits us.

We arrive in Gainesville at 4:00 p.m. only to find a rainstorm and no sunshine. The Hotel limousine must make two trips to the Hotel. Mike, Gene, Coach Holdt, a few players and I stay back for the second trip. At 5:00 the limo pulls up to make it's second trip. We wonder what took him so long. It's only five miles into town.

The driver drives slow and I tell Gene he must have reversed his license at J. C. Penny's, but Gene disagrees, he says Sears on sale. The driver approaches an intersection where he sees a friend he waves at. He has to skid to avoid hitting the front car.

I get to my room at 5:30 and almost pass out on my bed. The pre-game meal is at 6:00 p.m. so I dress and join a few others later for a steak dinner.

We finish at 6:45 and I go back to the room for a final 30 minute rest.

Mike, Gene, and I take a cab to the coliseum at 7:30 to set up equipment and watch the final half of the Florida-Ohio game. We are impressed with Florida's Malcom Cesare and Reggie Hannah as they crush Ohio. We discuss how they crush our team must be and how lucky we will be to win. John asks me if I will keep the scorebook so he can help Mike on the radio. I agree.

The game begins. The Hawks race to a 19-4, 31-15 and then 40-21 lead before succumbing to a 50-40 half-time lead. They maintain that lead despite horrendous free-throw shooting, to cruise to a 92-82 victory. We were tired, Stetson was fresh, but we dominated from the opening tip-off.

The Hatters are led by former N.C. State transfer Dirk Ewing with 22 points, while the Hawks are led by Dave Wolff's 24 points, Garry Cooper's 20, Barry Taylor's and John Haskin's 12 and Delaney Jones' 11. Among the nation's leaders, our Hawks shot a devastating 61 percent from the field. A relaxed and happy Gibson set curfew at 1:00 a.m.

Friday brings a more relaxed and more enjoyable day. I awake at 7:30, shower, shave and join Mike on his way to McDonalds for breakfast. We then board a bus with Ohio University and head for Deland, Fla. with a short stop at Disney World. The bus is comfortable, I'm tired and quite able to sleep, but the loquacious driver keeps me awake with his advice on Disney World and the places to go.

Space Mountain is wild, the Hall of Presidents is fascinating as is the Haunted House. The food is expensive, but everyone has a good time.

Danny Davis gets chased by Goofy, though.

We board the bus at 4:15. This is the first time a Gibson coached team has ever received a vacation like this.

As we arrive at the motel in Deland, the marquee reads "Welcome UNCW Seahawks." Everyone claps and shouts.

The team has an hour of shooting at 6:00. They are cold and don't shoot well. Most are tired and are anxious to eat and go to bed.

Mike, Gene and I eat at the Holiday House. The $4.25 buffet is by far the best restaurant cooked meal I've eaten in months. We jog down to the Coliseum to watch a girl's game. Mike and I leave early to come listen to the Duke-State game.

Sloan should have called a time out—Duke wins. I'm disappointed and call it a day.

My movement the next day awakes John. He looks up to ask a question. I anticipate him and answer 9:15.

I dress and join coaches Gibson, Holdt, and Gary Cooper for breakfast. We read in the newspaper that the Florida Gators are heavily favored to win tonight. Gibson agrees, "If we win tonight it'll Seahawk standout Dave Wolff pushes UNCW to a victory over South Carolina State in the second home contest of the season.

Seahawk Sports

be by a couple of points, if we lose we'll be blown out."

At 11:00 the team works out. They are hot and shooting very well.

"Let's go" Gibson says. Several players leave but a few shoot for 20 or 30 minutes more.

At 12:30 I come back to the motel to watch Deland's annual Christmas parade. John convinces me to walk downtown. We stop at McDonalds, Eckers and an Ice Cream Shop. We come back and I write while he sleeps.

At 2:30 the team meets before the 3:00 pre-game meal.

We eat fruit cocktail, salad, steak, potato and bread. The waitress spills water on Garry's back—he laughs, but I know it's cold.

John Calipari and I get up to leave because he wants to sleep and I again want to write. Gene comes in and falls asleep but I awake him at 5:00 to leave for the Coliseum. I think we can beat Florida. I'm wrong.

Delaney connects on the first shot to give the Seahawks a 2-0 lead. After some exchanges of baskets the score is tied at 14-14. We go into the "tease" offense to try and pull Florida out of their zone defense. A foul on Florida's John Corso sends Wolff to the line for a one and one. He misses and Florida rebounds. At the 7:55 mark, Florida's Ric Clarson hits on a 15 foot jump shot that puts them ahead for good. The half ends 32-27.

By the end of the game, the lead triples and the 'gators win 66-51.

They are led by Malcom Cesare with 20 points while the 'hawks are again lead by Wolff with 13, Cooper's 11 and Ralph Peterson's 10 points.

"We played good considering our guards were 4 to 5 inches shorter than theirs. Their guards were as big as our post-men (6'5", 6'6"). Our 36.7 percent shooting percentage didn't help us either," Gibson says.

"We face Campbell Wednesday night and that concerns me greatly."

Today, Sunday, we leave at 6:00 a.m. for the 30 minute ride to the airport in Daytona Beach. As I board the van I can sense the reminding of last night's game. It was tough.

I spend $1.50 on several newspapers looking for the Carolina-Duke score and I haven't found it. I finally do—I wish I had not. Duke is still number one.

We arrive in Wilmington without delay. It's been a fun-filled, eventful trip. I get home and fall asleep in 30 minutes.

Well, be proud of your Seahawk and She-hawk sports teams. The men's basketball opened their season during our Thanksgiving break by beating Baltimore University and South Carolina State. Then on the really big road trip, the 'Hawks did what they had to do by splitting the Sunshine Doubleheader beating Stetson and then dropping a game to Florida.

The women's swimming team finished third in the North Carolina AIAW Division II championships held at the UNCW pool. The she-hawk swimmers were led by freshman Ellen Cushman from Raleigh who qualified for the nationals in 3 events.

The seahawk basketball teams take to the floor December sixth in a rare double appearance. The women play Elon College at 6 p.m. before the men take on Campbell College. The Lady 'Hawks have had a rough 0-and-3 start but hope to recover in good shape on Wednesday.

Garry Cooper set a UNCW record by grabbing seventeen rebounds against South Carolina State. He has also scored the most points this year, getting 25 against Baltimore U. and leads the team in field goal percentage with 72.7 percent.

Football team vies for state title

The UNCW Football team will face N.C. State in football action Friday night at Legion Stadium. UNCW will be trying to win its first Eastern division championship in only the team's second year of existence.

The team will be led into action by head coach Don Corry and assistant coaches Brian McLure and Bill Dove. Coach Corry now has the seahawk team in high gear. The defense has performed nothing short of sensational having shut out their opponents the last 11 quarters.

The seahawks are led on defense by linebacker Captain Bill Morris and middle guard Melvin Tootoo.

The seahawk defensive interior line will include Tootoo, Donald Borden, David Hooks, Chris Nichols, and Hamp Hardison. The linebacking crew will consist of Morris, standout Tinker Owens, and Joe Meckely. The defensive backfield will see Coach Corry start Ken Watson (who has performed excellent as of late), Mark "Mad Dog" Doll, coming out of a knee injury, and Steve Underwood who also doubles as the punter. The defensive unit could be the finest anywhere both physically and mentally.

The offense will be led by quarterback, Doug Browning, and junior split end Paul Wood, perhaps the best receiver on the Eastern Seaboard. Dave Moore, "Mr. Clutch," will be at fullback with the multi-talented "Mad Dog" Doll switching over to offense to play fullback. Dennis Nelson will be the tightend and Donald Kent will be at the flanker position.

If it is good football action that you are looking for, I can guarantee you that these athletes will provide just that.

Seahawks defeat Outlaws a way to crown

By Derrick R. Anderson
Staff Writer

The UNCW football Seahawks clinched their division championship Sunday Nov. 20, against the Central Piedmont outlaws by a score of 7-0.

It was a defensive contest from the outset with middle guard Melvin Tootoo and defensive back Ken Watson leading the way. The defense also ran their string of shutouts per quarter to eleven. Defensive lineman Donald Borden also had an outstanding game. The seahawk defense was able to contain outlaw quarterback John Thomas, a dangerous breakaway runner. The elusive Thomas did manage to break away on several long gainers but the stubborn seahawk defense did not relinquish the paydirt. Bill Morris and Tinker Owen along with Steve Underwood also contributed to the seahawk effort.

On offense it was all Mark "Mad Dog" Doll along with sr. fullback Dave Moore. The entire offensive line led by freshman guard Steve Poulos did a fine job of opening holes for Doll and Moore. It was Moore who scored the lone touchdown in the contest going 30 yards late in the fourth quarter.

The seahawks will now face N.C. State for the Eastern division championship Friday night at Legion Stadium. A pep rally is scheduled at 5 p.m. Friday at the Patio Lounge.

Seahawk basketball on TV

WWAY-TV in Wilmington is once again bringing seahawk basketball fans the Mel Gibson Show. This show is all about UNCW basketball and is hosted by WWAY Sports Director Gene Motley. The show is a capsule report of Seahawk games the previous week with in depth study of crucial plays, achievements, and the next week's opponents.

Motley will be talking to Coach Gibson as they analyze the game films, trying to stress the points which make Seahawk basketball an exciting game to watch.

"We would like to make this show the finest sports anthology in the state," said Motley. "Community involvement is essential because the Wilmington area is so rich in sports interest."

Besides the filmed highlights, the show will feature the expert opinions and critiques of Coach Gibson, along with an occasional guest. Players often join in on the show and Assistant Coach Rick Holdt will be featured from time to time.

The upcoming opponents and the strategy which may be used against them will be discussed every week also.

The show will be aired Sunday afternoons each week. So for the most informative look at Seahawk basketball, watch the Seahawk Basketball Show.

Campus minister Vivan Martindale: Not many of these guys around

by Ray Warren

Christianity exists on the UNCW campus. Despite the prevalent belief that wild tribal rites involving booze and sex constitute the universal faith, various manifestations of traditional Christianity are also strongly represented. And while attitudes range from outright atheism to fervent fundamentalism, almost all students experience spiritual and/or religious longings. A major resource to meet these religious needs is the campus minister.

A native of upstate New York, Vivan, not Vivian, please, Martindale has been UNCW's full-time campus minister for the past four years. Paid by five local Protestant denominations, he has no formal or legal connection with this tax-supported institution. He does see, however, an informal connection.

His unique quasi-official status, Martindale believes, helps his ministry.

"I want to talk to you to talk to the guys because they don't know I have nothing (in the sense of no security) at stake."

Martindale's faculty, staff and community personnel tend to be a little off their base, and Martindale is a logical man for this off-base purpose.

The minister's ears are well trained in the art of listening. He graduated the B.A. in religious studies from the King's College in New York City. He was a member of the Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society. He was a member of the American Baptist Association of the West and received his masters of divinity from there. At that time he was working as a clinical supervisor at the California Mental Health Center.

Martindale's next stop was the University of Edinburgh in Scotland where he engaged in a post-graduate study and worked at a hospital as a counselor dealing with the terminally ill. By the time the UNCW present ministry position was being created, he could be found in upper New York State pastoring a church.

Martindale learned that some local churches were working cooperatively to hire a full-time minister while on vacation here. A Methodist minister he was visiting told him of the upcoming opening and suggested he apply. Significantly, the Martindales had left the snow of New York to vacation in our port's fine October weather. (The Methodist minister did not mention Wilmington's long tropically steamy summers.)

Thanks to his Methodist minister friend, Martindale was scheduled for four interviews with local clergymen. When he returned to Wilmington to attend them, however, he was far from confident.

"I came down with no suit, no resume, a pair of sandals, and a polo shirt," he recalls, "but at least no games were being played." Despite his dress (or undress, perhaps) Martindale found that "everything just clicked" and he was chosen as the college's first full-time minister.

The move to Wilmington was not without trauma.

We experienced more cultural shock than in any of our previous moves," he concluded. "There are incredible differences in lifestyle and cultural expressions," he adds. For instance, he explained, he has gotten into hot water by taking the common southernism "Ya'll come back now" all too seriously.

Once settled in, Martindale faced a new dilemma. The nearest similar ministry is 100 miles away and the UNCW one would have to be started nearly from scratch. "There were no handles," according to Martindale. A part-time minister who preceded him helped by establishing rapport with campus and community, but he still found himself at his desk (across the street from UNCW in the Wilmington Baptist Association) wondering "what do I know" and "what do I do now?"

Eventually, a three-pronged approach to the campus ministry was developed. These three "thrusters" were to be a ministries to the campus, churches, and the community.

On campus, Martindale considers himself a resource for all the university community, including students, faculty and staff. As he puts it "from the trustees to the guy who cleans our toilets." He works with student groups to develop worship and fellowship experiences, does a lot of counseling and engages in "brokering." "Brokering," in his definition, is acting as an organizer or go-between to help various groups and departments work together on projects to meet student needs.

In the local churches, our minister frequently is a guest speaker. He uses such opportunities to explain what his work is about and how churches can minister to the campus.

On the community level, Martindale tries to get college, church and community to work together on problems. In this category are included putting students in touch with volunteer opportunities, referring students to community services and helping to bring such activities as "Human Relations Week" to the campus.

On the religious organizations on campus, Martindale has a firm policy. He does not actively try to influence their policy ("They are big people now," he says) but gladly acts as a resource when asked to. Only "The Marketplace," a Tuesday morning Bible study, is under his direct sponsorship.

As befits a minister, Martindale wants to be available as much as possible. During the day he can be reached through the office of Student Affairs or at his office (799-1160). Provided there is a true emergency, he can also be called at home (791-8221). "For a real emergency like a possible suicide or similar situations," he explains, "I'll be glad to come at 3 a.m. if necessary."

Despite such a demanding career, Martindale very much believes in family values. His wife, Esther, for instance, was a co-partner in the decision to come to Wilmington.

"God doesn't call me without calling the rest of my family," he explains. "We are convinced that this is where we should be."

Each day, he reserves dinner time for his wife and two girls (who, he says, have reached an "impishly lovable" age). During that time he takes no non-emergency calls and schedules no engagements if possible. "My role as a husband and father," he says, "is as, or more, important than my pastoral job. To have time for your family, you have to make it."

In coming here, Martindale says that part of the adjustment process for him and his family was being an American (formerly northern) Baptist in Southern Baptist territory. While he calls himself a Christian first, and a Baptist second, he has nonetheless been moved to comment that "There aren't many of us around."

In terms of his denomination, he is probably correct; in terms of his personal qualities, he is certainly right.

UNCW Community Orchestra

Choir, orchestra to perform Haydn mass

The UNCW Concert Choir will augment its forces with the UNCW Alumni Choir comprised of past choir members as well as people from the faculty and staff of UNCW. Their combined effort will result in a performance of the "Lord Nelson Mass" by Joseph Haydn performed with the UNCW Community Orchestra.

The Mass features a solo quartet of which Beth Bell, a Wilmington performer, will be the soprano soloist. Bell has performed regularly with the UNCW Concert Choir and other organizations in the community.

Sheila Brooks, mezzo-soprano in the quartet, is a 1978 graduate of UNCW with a music degree and is now working on a masters of music in vocal performance at East Carolina. She is a student of

Gladys White. Doug Newell, tenor, is a senior in the School of Music at ECU and is a guest performer for this production. He is a student of Gladys White and has performed recently with the ECU Opera Theatre. Richard Steen, baritone in the quartet and soloist, is a member of the UNCW music faculty and performs often with the UNCW Concert Choir, Pro Musica and other organizations in the community. He is a student of Cornelius Reid in New York City.

Pharmacy official on campus

Mr. Joseph Hodge, assistant to the dean of the College of Pharmacy, Medical University of South Carolina, Charleston, SC, will be on campus today from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m., to talk with students interested in

'Chefs of Europe:' Culinary killings

It has been a long time since we have encountered the corpulent visage of Gluttony. Not since this deadly sin girded its loins and paraded for Dr. Faustus has Gluttony appeared in such clever company as in "Who Is Killing the Great Chefs of Europe?" This film indulges the viewer the way a mother indulges a spoiled child with an endless appetite for pastries, custard and other foods of rich extraction. One surrenders the senses of sight and taste quite voluntarily, unlike surrendering control of your TV set as in the "Outer Limits."

From the beginning of the movie, the eye of the viewer is coated with images of colorful cuisine that would make Julia Child or James Beard experience rushes of ecstasy at the magnificence of culinary art. One is thoroughly doused with the orgiastic qualities of fine foods, the ritual of preparation and the sensual savor of the finished product. Although "Who Is Killing the Great Chefs of Europe?" takes place in the present, there is a sense that this film might typify decadent Rome and its excesses, a banquet with Trimalchio if you will. The only missing ingredient is the eunuchs.

"Who Is Killing the Great Chefs of Europe?" is a clever purée of mystery and violently outrageous humor, as if someone osterized the best elements of Alfred Hitchcock and Buck Henry. The director, Ted Kotcheff, and his screen writer, Peter Stone, convene in the kitchen to prove there is more than one way to kill a cook. The recipe is fairly simple: someone is methodically murdering Europe's greatest chefs. But the suspense begins to gel as we discover that the chefs chosen for liquidation have each contributed to a magazine spread entitled, "The World's Greatest Meal." The editor of this gourmet guidebook (appropriately named Epicurus) is a hopelessly bulbous gentleman of Dutch extraction, Max Van der Meer (Robert Morley). Max, suffering from an enlarged liver, spastic colon and gout, puffs and wheezes throughout his office, sampling everything with pudgy fingers. However, his doctor and his private secretary believe it is necessary for his health that he go on a diet, and it is precisely at this point that the unlucky chefs begin to meet their bizarre fates, each being killed in the form of his "Specialty" shown in the magazine. The first to go is a Swiss chef Louis Kohner (Jean-Paul Cassel), an extremely energetic chef who fusses disparagingly over his specialty, baked squab. Unfortunately, he moves from the hearth to the frying pan and is cooked, rather overdone, like so much meat. The papers read, "Queen's cook cooked."

At this point the romantic leads, Rob (George Segal), a fast-food king with culinary cred, like a chain of "All God's Chitlins" and an idea hatched for soft omelettes, "H. Dumpty," and his ex-wife Natasha (Jacqueline Bisset), a famous chef whose dessert specialty was featured in Epicurus, attempt to solve the murder-mystery. But it seems that wherever Natasha goes, so does another chef. She travels to Vienna to interview a great Italian chef, Fausto (Stefano Satta Flores). However, Fausto quickly meets his demise in a lobster tank; his specialty being, of course, lobsters.

When George Segal isn't accosting his ex-wife, he too attempts to solve the case, but his attention span seems to be symbolic of his line of work: fast foods. As the movie progresses, Max expands in rotundity, the murders become more hilariously grotesque (the French chef's head is crushed in a duck press) and we are led to the climactic moment when the beautiful, slender chef, Natasha, appears as a target, her specialty being the incredible dessert, Le Bombe.

Robert Morley is magnificent in his portrayal of the flutulent glutton for nourishment, Max Van der Meer. His gestures suggest the difficulty of wielding such a preposterously weighty frame. Each movement is followed by much puffing, and indeed his wit puffs and blows with dry sarcasm. He says, bursting in on Segal and Bisset in bed, "I warned you, Natasha, you should have had him altered." Morley puckers his face in genuine aristocratic favor whenever a succulent bird passes beneath his nose. Of course, Jacqueline Bisset is more succulent than any pheasant. She is the center of some highly amusing moments in particular, an oddly erotic scene with another chef. They enjoy their food and each other in much the same way Tom Jones did with his mistresses.

The Italian chef, Stefano Satta Flores, gives a cameo performance reminiscent of the Aldo Cella commercials. He moves with a caricature-like grace that small men in well-cut suits have. Directly after his departure from a scene, one can hear a Gondolier calling across the canals, "Aldo... Aldo..." Unfortunately, a usually fine actor, George Segal, gives a partially withered performance and there seems to be no place for him, surrounded by the elegantly slender Bisset, and the over-weight Leviathan, Morley.

"Who Is Killing the Great Chefs of Europe" is now playing at the New Center Cinema.

'Christmas Carol' to be given by Readers Theatre group

Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" comes to life on stage at the SRO Theatre on the UNCW campus on December 8 and 9 at 8 p.m. and December 10 at 2:30 p.m.

This University Readers Theatre production is based on the reading script Dickens himself used in his public readings. In this well-known story, Scrooge, played by Fred Cook (manager of personnel at Hercofina), changes from a "bah-humbug" hater of Christmas to "as good a man as any good old city in the good old world knew." Visitations by four ghosts, remembrances of things past and premonitions of things future effect this great transformation.

As in Dickens' own reading, this production, directed by Meg Davidson, emphasizes the essential humanity of Scrooge. The two narrators (Mark Barefoot and Paula Drake) along with the rest of the cast (Larry Matthews, Allen Everhart, Ed Danilowicz, Sherree Jones and Carolyn Creech) evoke the sense of a Victorian Christmas. The production includes decorating a Christmas tree, singing of traditional carols and country dancing choreographed by Doris Levy.

Come see this year's only production of "A Christmas Carol" in the Wilmington area. Reservations for the three days of production can be made by calling 791-4330, ext. 2440, daily between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Dance Committee hosts Christmas Jam

Joshua

The UNCW Dance Committee announces the Fantastic Christmas Jam, Friday night, Dec. 8, in the Pub. The event begins at 10 p.m. with music provided by the dynamic Joshua band. Refreshments will be served—beer, soda, munchies—you name it. This super-fantastic Christmas Jam will be the committee's second dance of the year.

The Halloween Dance really blew the roof off and the Christmas Jam promises to be even better, committee members report. After attending the Happy Hour at the Patio on Friday, swing on by the UNCW vs. N.C. State football game, and top it all off with the bash at the Pub for a full evening of entertainment. After all, it is the last day of classes!

Keep an ear out for Marcus Joseph

Marcus Joseph began writing music as a way to express his feelings. Thus, "Things I Meant to Say" is a very fitting title for his debut album. The easy listening album seems to follow an order through the steps of a romance.

"Before the Night is Over" is exactly what the song is about. The cut expresses what will usually happen "before the night is over" in a young romance.

"Nice Guys Finish Last/Runaway" is a cut in which Joseph combines his song "Nice Guys Finish Last" with Del Shannon's hit, "Runaway." The mood of the song expresses the feeling that a guy has when his girl wants to be more than just friends. Not wanting to get serious, he leaves—but realizes that he really loves her.

Rupert Holmes' "I Don't Want to Get Over You" reinforces how he feels about his girl and that he doesn't want to get over her.

"One of These Days" tells where he is being lead on in his relationship and "One of these days" she will need him and he'll be gone.

The title cut, "Things I Meant to Say," is a soft ballad which was the most impressive cut on the lp, expressing the is with his girl takes him to "heaven on earth."

"Trapeze" is a very unusual cut which expresses what it's like to be on the top and on your way down.

The final cut "Israel" sums

RECORDS

future where there is question as to whether or not you will still be able to express yourself when you get older.

Side two opens with "I've Got You Where I Want You." This is the same situation that is expressed in "Before the Night is Over." He has wanted so long and now he has her where he wants her for the night.

"Rock Me Baby" is the closest rocker on the lp. This cut tells that he wants her to give in "cause talking it over won't do no good."

"Take Me There" where he up his whole feeling of what is has been like being on the road, away from home and his family.

With his lyrics, style and easy voice, Marcus Joseph should make it. I will follow his career closely in the future and I think you should keep an ear out for more of Marcus Joseph.

among these three, Theodore was asked to come to Wilmington for an interview.

According to Plyler, Theodore received the "enthusiastic endorsement" of the committee and was offered the job, which included a full professorship and tenure.

Plyler explained that Theodore was offered tenure in his first year because of the nature of the job and the "caliber of person we were seeking."

Plyler said that the job of department chairman normally "borders between an administration and a faculty position," although Theodore did not teach classes this semester.

Plyler added that he did not think there had been a "lack of definition of (Theodore's) responsibilities. I think there has been some misinterpretation."

According to Plyler, there was "no formal, verbal concern expressed (before the faculty petition) . . . that would lead me to conclude there was a serious problem" in the department.

He did, however, acknowledge that he had "heard rumors" about possible conflict within the department.

Plyler stated that the "key word in most problems of this type . . . is lack of understanding of appreciation of what the program was all about."

"I really think when you come down to it, personality is always (a factor)," he added.

Plyler pointed out that regardless of other charges made against Theodore, his "academic principals have not been questioned."

At the same time that a review is being made of the department's structure, Plyler said, a "thorough and comprehensive evaluation" will be made of the department chairman. Plyler said that department chairmen are usually re-evaluated every three years, but that his office will conduct a review in this case after one year.

Department chairmen are appointed to one-year terms by the vice-chancellor for academic affairs upon the recommendation of the academic dean.

Although Plyler noted that chairmen are "not tied to these positions," he said it would be impossible to say now whether Theodore will be reappointed or replaced.

Pointing out the importance of any chairman's relationship to departmental faculty, Plyler said that it is necessary for a chairman to have the confidence of the faculty members.

Plyler said that the present Creative Arts structure will continue essentially intact. He said that his answer to the petition was the "most appropriate response" that would "provide time to make a more deliberate review and provide a more meaningful solution."

Plyler labelled the petition an action of "magnanitude," but said that it is not the first instance of its kind. He said that his office had received verbal petitions from faculty members in at least two other departments in the last several years.

Appointments with recruiters should be made in the Office of Career Planning and Placement, 207 Alderman Administration Building. Sign-up sheets for recruiting interviews are available beginning Monday mornings, three weeks in advance of the scheduled interview.

Students must be registered with the Placement Office in order to sign up for interviews and are expected to honor appointments scheduled. To avoid disappointment, interview appointments should be scheduled as early as possible. Come by or call the Placement Office if there are questions of for additional information.

Recruiting visits of prospective employers are arranged on campus by the Career Planning and Placement Office. For more information about these visits, contact the office in room 207 of the Alderman Administration Building. The following are recruiting visits scheduled for the fall:

Increase of vandalism noticed in library

by Robert S. Brown III
Staff Writer

Within the last six weeks a common question directed to librarians from students has been "Did you know there is a page missing in this magazine?" The answer, of course, is "No, we didn't, but thank you for bringing it to our attention."

Because of the sudden increase in such incidents, Randall librarians were prompted to look through the bound editions of magazines and journals on their shelves to check for further damage. They didn't like what they found.

Careful scanning showed that many magazines and journals had either pages or articles torn out of them. But the most extensive damage was discovered in "Sports Illustrated" magazine. Apparently someone had gone methodically through all the back issues and removed similar articles from each one.

Eugene Huguelet, library director, expressed the library staff's concern over this serious matter and mentioned that destruction of state property is against the law. But more importantly, he added that it is unfair to current and future students as well as members of the community who may wish to use the material and find it is not there when they need it.

He also stated that the library is run on the idea of making as much material as easily accessible as possible and when people take unfair advantage of this situation there is little they can do about it.

Anyone can make copies of almost anything they find in the library by using the copying machines provided for that purpose instead of destroying the original material.

When pages or articles are found to be missing the library attempts to replace them with copies obtained from other colleges. However, this adds an unnecessary expense to the library budget as well as some legal paperwork which is required by the new copyright laws.

Fall 'Atlantis' to be distributed this week

Atlantis, the UNC literary magazine, will be distributed this week on campus. Approximately 2000 copies, each being forty-four pages, will be placed in Kenan Hall, Randall Library, the Pub, the new classroom building and the Chemistry Building. Copies of the Atlantis are free, and all students and faculty members are encouraged to pick up one and read UNCW students' works.

Submissions to Atlantis totaled over 200 poems and short stories. Accepted for publication by separate prose and poetry staffs were six short stories and 39 poems.

Included in the short stories are two by Gregg Glickstein: "Maybe Next Time" concerns a man's attempt at smuggling marijuana; "The Ocean Takes Breakfast at Dawn" tells of a man's attempt to swim to shore after falling off a pleasure boat. Do either men succeed in their attempts?

"A Beauty For All Seasons,"

by Beneatha Schmidt, is a psychological penetration of an old woman in a nursing home. Can a person confined and isolated have an optimistic view of life?

Mike Pandich's "The Final Piece" is the story of a young man who wants to major in music. Does family pressure persuade him to do otherwise?

Helen M. Piner's "The Stature of a Man" is a poignant story of a man's devotion and dedication. To what extent should these two characteristics be carried?

"Luncheon By the Bay," a short story by Catherine H. Bell, shows a woman's realization of her true feelings for her lover while cooking his lunch. Does she or does she not love him?

All answers to these questions can be found in this issue of the Atlantis.

Poems found in the Atlantis cover the usual spectrum of poetry. Included are the winners of the University Poetry Contest. They are:

"Uncle Albert," by Catherine H. Bell; "The Comedian," by Dorothy Hall; Katrina Gorely's "Insentience"; Debbie Mansey's "The Old Cellar Door"; and "On Wearing Glasses Again," by Becky Owens. In all, 21 student poets are published in the fall issue of Atlantis.

In order to make the Atlantis, a biannual publication, visually appealing, students' original art is found on each page. The cover, winner of the Atlantis cover contest, is a duotone print of a sea grass drawing by Sharon Ely. Artwork inside the magazine includes self-portraits, photography, etches of fantasy and mysticism, and nudes.

Atlantis is a forum in which students may express themselves. It is totally a student operation working for all students on campus. The only regret of the staff is that there will not be a copy for each student; costs make this unfeasible, quality being of prime importance to the staff.

SIGN OF THE TIMES?
The Goodwood Tavern, located in the student union, has been losing approximately $400 per week since it reopened in October.

Goodwood Tavern hours curtailed

by Bobby Parker
Editor

The university's food service management will curtail operating hours of the Goodwood Tavern this semester to four hours each weekday, eliminating evening and weekend hours. The cutback comes because Professional Food Management lost approximately $400 per week due to generally low use of the facility.

Director of Auxiliary Services James K. Clark announced the decision in December. In a memorandum to vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy, Clark attributed the weekly losses to "poor utilization of the facility after 2:30 p.m. and on Sundays."

The losses amounted to approximately $6000 in about 9:30 p.m. on weekdays and 4:30 p.m. to 7 p.m. on Sundays. It closed on Saturdays.

The new schedule will be 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. weekdays and closed on weekends. In an interview Monday, Clark said the biggest cost for the Goodwood was labor. The Goodwood is staffed by both professional and student workers.

Clark said that had the Goodwood been "breaking even" or even operated with a "calculated loss," the operating schedule could have been maintained.

Clark said the financial losses had brought the quality of food and service in the Goodwood down and had also begun to affect the service in the cafeteria and snack bar, also operated by Professional Food Management.

made to avoid a further decline in quality. He said any decline thus far was "understandable" because of the small number being served.

"I don't want a third class or second class operation," Clark said. "I want to maintain the same standards throughout the year."

According to Clark's memorandum, daily sales averaged $82.67. During the 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. hours, the average was $57.85; from 2:30 to 9:30 p.m. the average was $24.82. Labor expenses were estimated at $103.70 daily.

Since its opening, the Goodwood has been operated by four food services in four years. All suffered financial losses, according to Clark.

The first two operators were private establishments which closed soon after opening.

Last year, Interstate Univer-

Board of Trustees approves union plans, re-approves football study

by Ray Warren
Staff Writer

Meeting last Thursday on campus, the Board of Trustees took two important actions relating to the continued growth of this branch of the university system. As a result, both a new student union and an official intercollegiate football team moved closer to reality, though both projects still have several hurdles to clear.

A priority project of numerous groups on campus, including the Offices of Student Affairs and Student Activities and the Student Government Association, the new student union appears to be the surest bet for completion. The board voted to seek approval from the UNCW Board of Governors to raise and spend the money required for a union. If their request is granted, construction could begin as early as May 1980.

The trustees were presented with three alternative plans for a new student union. The product of a group of students, faculty and administrators, these alternatives were designed to give the board an idea of the approximate cost of a small (38,000 sq. ft.), medium sized (46,000 sq. ft.)

and relatively large (54,000 sq. ft.) student union. This feasibility study group recommended the 46,000 sq. ft. medium sized facility (which would cost about $2.8 million) but the board selected the largest proposed alternative.

The alternative selected is expected to cost about $3.5 million. Because state law does not allow the financing of non-educational buildings by general tax dollars, the union would be financed by bonds, which would be paid with money from student fees.

According to the Office of Business Affairs, fees would increase "as soon as bids were let and the revenue bonds sold." Conceivably, the hike could take place as early as the fall of 1980. Completion of the union, however, would not be expected before the summer of 1981. Thus, as was the case with Trask Coliseum, students would begin paying for the new facility at least a year before it opened.

The amount of fee increase needed to finance the new union is not known with certainty, but it is estimated that it would be about $2 per semester. This, according to SGA President Wayne Dun-

Dean's List changes drop roster to 291

Formerly, the requirements were a 3.0 average, no grade below a "C" and 12 credit hours.

Academic Dean Daniel Plyler said Monday that the total of 291 for the fall was about the number projected by the administration.

Plyler indicated that the administration had accomplished its goal of making Dean's List more meaningful with the smaller total.

The changes, Plyler said, have "at least for a time been confirmed" although, he added, the administration will continue to monitor the situation.

The number of students who qualified for Dean's List dropped dramatically for the fall semester compared to last year in the wake of stiffer academic requirements instituted last spring. The total decreased from 864 in the spring to 291 for the fall.

New requirements were approved by the Faculty Senate and administration officials in an effort to make the honor more exclusive and more meaningful.

The standards now require a 3.2 grade point average, no grade below a "B" and 12 credit hours.

Curtailment of Tavern hours was the only reasonable decision

The decision by Professional Food Management, the university's food contractor, and university officials to curtail operating hours of the Goodwood Tavern is to use the words of administrators, both "fair" and "understandable." Operating at a loss of almost $400 per week, students can hardly expect service to be continued at such a loss with few prospects for relief.

Weekday hours this semester will be cut from eleven to four per day and weekend service will be discontinued altogether.

The track record of the Goodwood food service operation is not at all impressive. Four operators have managed it in as many years; two pulled out because the losses were so great and the other two suffered losses which eventually brought a decrease in the original operating hours.

The reason that losses have been so high is that students have failed to use the facility in numbers great enough to support the operation. Just why students don't frequent the Goodwood is not quite so clear.

The size of the student body puts any Goodwood operation at a disadvantage to begin with, with two other food facilities to compete with in a limited market. Its location, out of the mainstream of campus, is another disadvantage.

The effect of the shutdown of the Goodwood at the beginning of this academic year is also an important reason for the trouble it experienced. Not opening until October, many students had already grown accustomed to choosing between the cafeteria or snack bar rather than among the three facilities.

Probably the most important reason for the Goodwood's financial ails, however, is that food service alone can not attract students to the student union. A lack of programming, activities or other student-oriented facilities in the union to complement the Goodwood means that students often had neither good reason nor desire to visit the union.

The loss of the Goodwood to evening and weekend traffic is regrettable, but there is one fact which provides some hope in the situation. That is the university administration's commitment to preserving the Goodwood.

According to James K. Clark, director of auxiliary services, the Goodwood will be open on a full schedule at the beginning of each year until there is enough use to justify a full schedule year-round. Student Activities Director Linda Moore's support has also been strongly visible throughout the four-year Goodwood experiment.

That kind of commitment is the most we can expect. If students continue to choose not to use the Goodwood, however, the food service management can not be expected to continue the operation.

SGA officer welcomes new students

To the Editor:

I would like to welcome all of you back for the spring semester. As most of you know we had many activities going on last semester. Three of the most noteworthy were the formation of the new Student Programs Board headed by vivacious Cindy Cole; the first formal meeting of the non-traditional students organization at UNCW; and the origination of a sorority (Delta Zeta) which was accomplished through many long months of preparation by Candy Singleton, Robby Register and the other young women involved. All three endeavors were a joint effort with Linda Moore, director of Student Activities. These three projects are excellent examples of the student involvement that will continue to help make UNCW a better place to learn and experience total growth.

This semester we are moving toward the Homecoming week. I hope you will be able to participate in as many of the Homecoming '79 activities as possible.

Phi Beta Lambda is having their semi-annual used book sale in the Pub all this week. This is an excellent way to sell or buy the books that you presently have or need for this semester.

Last-but-not-least, "Spring Fever '79" will be coming up very shortly. I recommend to all the new students who haven't experienced this phenomenon to try to study hard while the weather is cold. When the beach weather comes you can head down to catch some rays instead of fretting about pulling up your grades at the very end.

If you have any ideas or problems and can't seem to get any help, let me know and I'll try to help, or try to find someone else who can. I can be reached by leaving a note for me at the Student Government Office upstairs in the Pub.

Liquor-by-the-drink opponents trying to revive Carrie Nation, Prohibition

Carrie Nation would be proud. The ax-wielding prohibitionist, were she to come back to life, would feel right at home reading the thundering denunciations of "demon rum" now appearing in newspapers and on billboards. Indeed, Miss Nation would probably make the assumption that Friday's liquor-by-the-drink referendum was just another battle about prohibition (for which she so valiantly lent her oratory and biceps). She would be in good company.

The referendum Friday has nothing to do with prohibition. In no way will a negative vote reduce the availability of alcoholic beverages. Nor will a positive vote allow any person presently unable to obtain alcohol to do so. In the words of conservative County Commissioner Ellen Williams, the question is "how", not "if".

One wonders why otherwise intelligent persons seem so determined to pretend that the LBD vote is something it isn't. Despite the facts, the anti-LBD forces seem determined to act as though, like modern-day Carrie Nations, they are fighting for temperance. Unfortunately, their stated goal (moderation) and their stated position (anti-LBD) are incompatible. Such is the price of elevating emotion over reason.

The heart-wrenching cases of alcohol abuse so vividly presented by the anti-LBD forces are undisputedly effective. They are also irrelevant.

For the most part, the victims cited in the anti-alcohol tirades suffered under our present system of liquor-by-the-bottle, not LBD. If there was evidence that LBD increased such cases, then perhaps there would be cause to consider voting no, but there is no such evidence. In some states, such as South Carolina, LBD caused a very slight rise in alcohol consumption. In Virginia, however (who's law served as a model for our own) consumption actually declined. In addition, nobody has yet produced unbiased evidence that North Carolina's illogical system of alcohol availability has blessed us with significantly lower rates of auto accidents, rape, pillage, or divorce than the other 49 states. (Oklahoma also bans mixed drinks, but in urban areas the law is generally ignored).

No anti-LBD preacher or politician has yet been able to explain why a person is supposed to drink more when it costs him or her $1.50 per drink, rather than $5.00 per bottle. The absurdity of such a claim is so obvious, in fact, that the Christian Action League is now courting the heavy drinkers' vote by emphasizing this increase in costs in its anti-LBD ads.

Another apparently unexplored angle of the alcohol abuse debate is the present ease with which one can get "plastered" on beer and wine. Now one may buy all the beer and wine one wants, by the drink. For only 60 cents a person out to "get drunk" can buy a 12-ounce beer with approximately the same alcohol content as a $1.50 mixed drink. True, liquor has a higher alcohol content than beer or wine, but beer and wine are taken straight, while liquor is greatly diluted (under LBD) by mixers. Even those undiluted drinks (like "scotch on the rocks") are only a few ounces, not the great quantities of beer one is served for the same price. In short, any person wanting to get drunk can do so on beer or wine now. If the reader doubts such, then a quick trip to the "beer drinking" bars at Wrightsville Beach would prove illustrative.

Some anti-LBD spokespersons have emphasized that brown bagging will not be totally eliminated under LBD. But it hardly makes sense to reject "half a loaf" of better control. The elimination of brown bagging in public restaurants will be a major, if incomplete, step in the right direction. The issue of private clubs is more complicated, but at worst, over consumption should be no more prevalent with the addition of high-priced mixed drinks to the present menu of cheap mixers for cheaply bought bottles. Also, the Alcoholic Beverage Control board has been very careful to assure that "disco clubs" which rape the spirit of the brown bagging law do not likewise qualify for mixed drinks. Indeed, in Charlotte only one such club qualified, and only then after a significant tightening of membership rules. Evidence from Charlotte, therefore, indicates that fears of the creation of open bars under the guise of clubs are groundless.

So much for what mixed drinks will not do. What they will do is increase control, promote tourism and add to local tax revenues.

Under LBD the restaurant owner, not the customer, will have the responsibility of seeing that the customer is not intoxicated. While the owner may want to sell his wares, he certainly will not risk losing his ABC license by ignoring his duty to prevent over-indulgence either. Unlike the present system, which encourages him to sell as many mixers as possible, LBD will give him or her reason to promote sobriety in order to retain his or her license.

Tourists, it is truthfully said, are not always attracted by the presence or absence of LBD, but hotels are. Often LBD's passage in Mecklenburg County, several major hotel chains announced plans to build there. The presence of such accommodations is itself a magnet for tourists. Also, convention committees, unlike everyday tourists, do often demand LBD. It is no secret that a huge number of North Carolina organizations have their conventions in Myrtle Beach rather than at home for that very reason. To a town like Carolina Beach, such a loss is devastating.

Mixed drinks are heavily taxed. In both Mecklenburg County and neighboring states, there has not been a significantly greater need for expenditures to combat drunk driving or domestic violence, but there has been an astounding increase in tax revenues to spend on schools, parks and sanitation. In New Hanover County this revenue could help ease the tax burden on property, aid our ailing school system or help pay for needed sewer expansion.

Opposition to mixed drinks seems based on the belief that allowing them will open the floodgates to permissive alcohol laws. Everyone knows that the present system actively discourages moderation. But as Dr. James Megivern has pointed out, anti-liquor forces still don't want to admit (even if they think themselves) that alcohol is here to stay. Brown bagging doesn't stop drinking, but it is supposed to make it "dirty and secretive."

Rather than speculating on what future liquor legislation might be proposed after LBD, voters should concentrate on the issue at hand. Prohibition is dead. We can either keep the present system, which encourages over-indulgence, hurts the local tourist industry and deprives the county of needed tax revenues, or we can adopt LBD. When all the emotional debate is examined objectively, it should be clear that nostalgia for Carrie Nation is a poor reason to retain liquor-by-the-bottle. LBD is truly a better way for all concerned.

'Visiting Artists' recruited

Applicants for the 1979-80 Visiting Artist program are now being recruited by the North Carolina Arts Council. The Visiting Artist program offers residencies of nine months to artists in all fields. It is co-sponsored by the N.C. Department of Community Colleges and the N.C. Arts Council, a section of the Department of Cultural Resources. Selected artists are sponsored by community colleges in the counties of their residencies.

Requirements include a master's degree or equivalent experience. Applications can be obtained from the N.C. Arts Council, Department of Cultural Resources, Raleigh, N.C., 27611. They must be returned and in the Arts Council office by Feb. 1.

Campus Chuckles:

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

This, people, is not my favorite time of the year. The holidays are over and done with for another year and I'm left with a few extra inches to juggle around. I just spent my Christmas check on a stack of books that will probably sit unopened until the day I die or they crumble, whichever comes first. And as if all that weren't enough, it has just occurred to me that my favorite professor from first semester seems to be doing fine without my budding genius presence.

I call my present state of mind the Second Semester Blues. You know you've got the S.S. Blues when all your instructors look like modified versions of the Brain Trust members (history majors, perk up those ears!). And the blues are hangin' heavy on your shoulders when you rush drooling up to that hunk who borrowed your English notes... and he doesn't remember your name. Or you. Or the class you took together.

With second semester comes a whole new set of faces. Some are open and friendly, and some look like salami left out too long. New and different (but ah, always interesting) bodies are scattered everywhere—on library couches (please, God, don't let him start snoring), underneath trees, and sometimes sprawled across sidewalks (hey, it's a long way to the dorms from gym class!)

I got them back to school blues

All in all, second semester is bearable, I suppose. New friends, new classes, all that jazz. Time to figure out a new route to the cafeteria, time once again to break out the antacid tablets and prepare the old gut for the hard times ahead. Trying to figure out new ways of bribing the librarian so you can check out books in spite of the fact that you seem to have, uh, lost your ID card.

But you know, the best thing about second semester is that sooner or later it is followed by FREEDOM! Spelled s-u-m-m-e-r, of course. And with that cheery thought we can all go out and make our respective ways through The Best Years of Our Lives.

Summer art administration internships open

The North Carolina Arts Council of the Department of Cultural Resources is now accepting applications for summer internships in arts administration.

Internships for the period June through August will be awarded to several persons, each of whom will spend a few days at the state Arts Council in Raleigh and one month at each of several community arts councils in the state.

The internship program, now in its fifth year, is designed to advance arts administration professionalism in North Carolina. Through instruction and work experience in this growing field, the three interns will gain knowledge that would be unavailable any other way.

Qualifications for the interns include a four-year college degree, strong administrative and business abilities, and wide knowledge and appreciation of the arts.

Applications may be obtained by writing this address: Summer Intern Program, N.C. Arts Council, Department of Cultural Resources, Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

Deadline for applications is March 1.

Popularity of skiing growing in South

If there's one indication that Southern skiing as a sport is on the rise, it surely must be the number of entrants in the High School Collegiate Divisions of the Southern Star Classic at Beech Mountain. Twenty-six high schools and eleven colleges have each registered five member ski teams for the event. One of those teams is from UNCW headed by Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene.

The High School Collegiate Divisions were created because of the interest shown by students in the classic last year.

We know that young people are getting more involved in skiing each year and that many are serious about racing, but we also know to what extent," said Jon Norman Smith, general manager of Ski Bunch.

Clark said that the university food service, which operated as a unit throughout the year, announced a curtail was necessary last spring.

Clark said that the fact that the Goodwood was closed at the beginning of the academic year must have had an adverse effect on the operation. Students may have gotten into the habit of going to the cafeteria and snack bar while the Goodwood was closed, Clark said.

Clark also pointed out that students may not be attracted to the Goodwood because they are not being attracted to other facilities offered in the Student Services Building.

He added that the small size of the university also makes it difficult to operate a successful food service here in addition to the cafeteria and snack bar.

Student Activities Director Linda Moore, who has been a strong supporter of the Goodwood since its inception, said she is "disappointed" over the decision to curtail hours. Moore expressed hope that through "student support and more usage...it would be feasible" to extend the hours again.

Moore said the main problem had been with cash sales, not with use by students with meal tickets.

Moore said, however, that she felt the decision by Professional Food Management had been "fair."

Clark said that the Goodwood will be opened for extended hours at the beginning of next year and at the beginning of each year thereafter to reassess use of the facility.

"We're going to keep trying," Clark said. "We'll be there (open) when the turn-around comes" and students begin to use the Goodwood in numbers large enough to justify the operation.

Professional Food Management will continue to provide service for special events in the Goodwood on an "as requested" basis.

SPECIAL SECTION FOR NEW STUDENTS

SGA President Wayne Dunlap looks for productive semester

by Wayne Dunlap
SGA President

Once again it is a pleasure to welcome you to the university. Fall semester proved to be a productive one for the Student Government Association and I see no reason why this one will not be even better.

For those of you entering the university for the first time there is something to be said about enrolling in the spring.

It's a busy time of year for students. We are in the middle of basketball season for both the women's and men's varsity teams. The men's team has a rather impressive 7-2 overall record, and while the women's record is not quite that impressive they show a great deal of potential for this second part of the season. So let's get out and give them all the support we can.

The SGA and the university also provide or support numerous other activities for students to attend or participate in, such as plays, dances, theatre, ballet, movies, the symphony etc., and of course homecoming is coming up in February.

It should be a fun semester but let's not forget the reason for which we all came. That, of course, is to get an education. UNCW's academic reputation seems to be getting stronger year by year. For any of you who were surprised when you received your grades for the fall semester I need not remind you that the academic requirements for Dean's List have been raised to a 3.2 grade point average while carrying a minimum of 15 semester hours.

While we were out for semester break the SGA and other university administrators were hard at work. On Jan. 3, the Board of Trustees voted unanimously to go ahead with the feasibility study to establish a division status football team here. I remind students that the university is not in the process of establishing a football team, only a study to determine if it would be a good move for the university at this time.

The board also approved a study concerning a new student union facility. Should this facility, which we so desperately need, be given the go-ahead, student fees could rise as much as $55 per semester. Though we must expect such a rise I assure you the Board of Trustees, the administration, and the SGA are doing their best to find other areas in which we can cut back.

All in all we can look forward to a busy new year. I think we all should buckle down right away as you know how quickly the second semester passes. The SGA office hours will remain the same this semester 1-5 p.m. daily. For those of you who are unaware, the SGA office is located upstairs in the Hinton James Student Services Building next to the Seahawk office. If I can be of any help at any time please do not hesitate to call or stop by. (Our number is 799-2105). Good luck to all of you.

I.D. validations needed

I.D. cards, which are used for admission to university functions and for the purpose of identification on and off campus, are made during the first days of each semester. Students should take note that this is a permanent card which is updated with a color-coded sticker each semester.

I.D. cards must be validated each semester by the Student Affairs Office. There is a $3 charge to make a duplicate I.D. card in the event the original is lost or destroyed.

Linda Moore, director, and Jon Greene, assistant director of Student Activities

Student Activities Office will play big role in four years of college

Welcome, new students, from the Office of Student Activities! The next few years may be the most exciting and innovative years of your life—but you've heard that before. What you may not have heard is that the Student Activities Office will play a big role.

Linda Moore, director, and Jon Greene, assistant director, are eager to meet your programming and co-curricular needs.

Their offices, located on the first floor of the Student Services Building (more affectionately referred to as the "Pub") are primarily concerned with the co-curricular development and growth of our student body. Whether in the dorm, outdoor recreation, concerts and movies or innovations in programming, their function is to implement those ideas.

If there are areas that you would like to become involved with, our resources are available to steer you in the proper direction.

Want to start a new club? Bring in a special band? Do volunteer work in the community?

Come by and see Linda Moore and Jon Greene. Don't let time pass you by—get involved now!

Campus publications

Student newspaper is published weekly

The Seahawk is the primary means of communication on the UNCW campus. Published every Wednesday, it contains in-depth news stories of interest to students, announcements of campus activities, coverage of student government and features such as profiles of students and faculty members. The Seahawk serves as an editorial voice for the entire student body.

In addition to these features, the Seahawk also includes coverage of sports, contains record and film reviews and publishes political commentary columns and club news.

Staff positions are open to all students, with a particular need for staff writers. Production workers are needed for layout design.

Absolutely no experience is necessary for any of these positions. All you need is an interest in the work and a willingness to do what needs to be done.

Advertising salespersons are also needed, and they are paid 15 percent commission of what they sell.

The Seahawk office is located upstairs in the student union.

Literary magazine provides creative outlet

Atlantis is the literary magazine of UNCW that publishes student poetry and prose and includes original student artwork. The magazine is funded by the SGA and the staff is comprised entirely of UNCW students.

Atlantis is published twice each year—one issue in the fall and one in the spring. There are positions open on the prose, poetry and art staff. Dr. James Collier and Dr. Joanne Corbett of the English Department serve as advisers for the magazine.

Any student is welcome to submit material for publication in Atlantis. Deadlines for submission are announced each semester, and all students are urged to participate.

The Atlantis provides an important means of communication among the university community as well as between the campus and other areas. Copies of the magazine are mailed to universities throughout North Carolina and several other states. These magazines are important in spreading the word of UNCW to other universities as they represent our campus with creative expression.

In past years, Atlantis staff members have also provided other services to the student body, such as publication of an attractive school-year calendar that features original student art. Also published by the staff is a poetry brochure.

Look for announcements concerning staff positions and submission of material in the coming semester.

Yearbook is a growing organization

The Fledgling, the UNCW yearbook, is growing fast and needs photographers, layout personnel and artists to keep up with the pace of this growth.

The 1978 Fledgling featured 20 pages of natural color, wide campus coverage, a lot of art and a unique design. Plans for the 1979 Fledgling include 304 pages with 32 pages of color.

Any student interested in the yearbook should call editor Margie McLamb at 791-8055. She invites you to be a part of this growing organization.

Journal includes student marine research

The editors and staff of Forum, the UNCW journal of marine sciences, extends a warm welcome to all new students. Forum staff members are looking forward to the involvement of new students in campus activities, and would like to encourage those interested in any aspect of marine environment to participate in Forum's publication.

The journal is published quarterly and dedicated to presenting current undergraduate research at UNCW, providing pertinent information on marine sciences, and serving as an organ for undergraduate expression.

The name Forum, indicating the scientific order of abundant one-celled sea animals, foraminifera, was chosen because of these organisms' importance to all basic disciplines in the marine sciences. The first issue of Forum was published in 1976. There is no charge for copies of the journal.

Articles used in Forum cover a wide range of topics dealing with the marine environmental studies. However, students in other disciplines—anthropology, sociology, business and economics, and others—are encouraged to submit original research papers bearing on the coastal zone. The journal hopes to expand its format this year to include more student papers in each issue.

Freshmen and returning students with an interest in publications production—editing, typing, illustrating, etc.—are welcome to join Forum's staff. If you think you might be interested in this venture, apply in Room 242 in the Marine Sciences Building. The staff welcomes suggestions for the improvement of the journal, which is produced entirely by students under the guidance of its faculty adviser, Dr. Gilbert Bane, director of marine sciences and environmental studies.

Student-operated radio station offers alternative

UNCW's representative on the airwaves is WLOZ-FM. "Z-91" is a student-operated progressive rock station. Located at 91.3 on the FM dial, WLOZ is funded through the SGA.

At this time, Z-91 is Wilmington's only progressive rock station. Since its birth in November of 1977, the station has been dedicated to bringing the campus and the community an alternative to the top 40 and disco that dominates most programming on area radio stations.

The staff at Z-91 would like to welcome all new students and urge everyone to come by and check Z-91 out. DJ's will be needed (no experience necessary) and student input is what it's all about.

WLOZ, FM 91.3, welcomes you to the Land of Oz.

Drama curriculum has theatrical opportunities

The University Theatre is the producing unit of the drama curriculum of the Department of Creative Arts. Its major function is to provide the opportunity for all students to participate on all levels of theatrical activity. It is an extension of the drama program as developed by the faculty of the Creative Arts Department.

In many instances, University Theatre provides a practical ground for original ideas from the student body. For the past six years, University Theatre has placed a major emphasis on an all student-produced major production. This project has taken different forms depending on the ideas of the more advanced students.

The University Theatre season is composed of five major productions a year, and each one averages around six weeks of preparation. The first three are directed and produced by the department with the last play being the all student-produced production with the support of the faculty.

These plays are open to all students of the university. Any student who wishes to become a part of any of the University Theatre productions is invited to participate. This participation can be for one play or for as long as the student wishes to be a part of it and as often as they wish.

All of the University Theatre productions are free to part-time or full-time students.

The theatre is supported through the SGA with student fees, and its organizers feel a duty to serve all students. The SRO Theatre, located in Kenan Hall, is University Theatre's major facility and is relatively small, so students are urged to make reservations before the opening of one of the plays.

The University Readers Theatre offers students an opportunity to participate in the group performance of literature. Readers experience the imaginative process of bringing literature to life from short stories, novels, poetry and drama.

There is one major production in the fall semester followed by several productions in the spring semester by the newly-established readers theatre class.

Production schedule

The University Theatre and the University Readers Theatre will present a total of three productions this spring. The schedule, with tryout dates, is listed below:

University Theatre: "Tango" by Slawomir Mrozek; Directed by Terry Rogers. Tryouts: Jan. 9, 10. Production dates: Feb. 23-26.

University Readers Theatre: "The Optimist's Daughter." Tryouts: Jan. 10. Production dates: March 16-17.

University Theatre: Studio '79. Tryouts: March 13-14. Production dates: April 21-22.

Variety of instrumental, vocal ensembles within music curriculum

The university maintains various instrumental and vocal ensemble groups through the Music Curriculum of the Department of Creative Arts.

The University Wind Ensemble is organized each semester to provide instrumental music experience for those students who desire it. Membership is open to any student who has had instrumental experience, with the approval of the director. Any participant may earn academic credit.

Participation for non-music majors, however, must be supplemented by private lessons, also for credit.

The University Wind Ensemble presents at least two concerts per year and participates in the joint stage productions of the music and drama curriculums.

The Chamber Music Workshop is a new ensemble designed to provide small chamber group performing opportunities in a variety of areas: small woodwinds, brass and vocal ensembles, as well as early music ensembles composed of harpsichord and recorders.

The UNCW Community Orchestra seeks to give citizens as well as students the opportunity to use their musical talents in a cooperative endeavor. Four concerts are given during the school year. UNCW students receive one credit hour per semester. Interested students should contact Dr. William Adcock in Kenan Hall, room 116, for more information.

The UNCW Concert Choir is organized each semester to provide vocal musical experience for those students who desire it. Membership is open to any student with the approval of the director, and any participant may receive academic credit. Participation of non-music majors must be supplemented by private lessons, also for credit.

The Concert Choir and its small ensemble, The Chamber Singers, regularly provide music for university functions, appear on radio and television, and act as ambassadors from the university at a wide spectrum of community functions.

Special for new students

This special four-page section is prepared for students entering UNCW for the first time this semester. The articles in this section are designed to acquaint new students with the services, activities and opportunities available at the university.

The section is compiled in conjunction with the Offices of Student Activities and Student Affairs.

Career Planning office serves student job needs

The services of the Career Planning and Placement Office, located in Room 207 of the Alderman Administration Building, are available to any student. Those services include assistance with any job or career-related need and reflect a wide range and great variety of informational and advisory functions.

Undergraduate students are especially encouraged to utilize the career planning aspects of the office. Underclassmen can particularly benefit from this early attention to career goals and job objectives. Individuals will be assisted in developing an understanding of the world of work and how his or her personal needs can best be incorporated into effective career decisions.

Career information and company literature are available through the office.

Employment opportunities for students are available through the office and include full-time and part-time positions. Students who are interested in employment should register with the Career Planning and Placement Office as early as possible.

For graduating seniors the office arranges recruiting visits and job interviews with employer representatives. Seniors and rising seniors should register early in the academic year so that they may be informed of job opportunities and be aware of recruiting visits to campus.

Internship information for federal, state and local programs is available through the office. Cooperative education program opportunities are currently being developed in a variety of academic areas. Students interested in such program possibilities should notify the office early.

Workshops on resume writing and job interview skills are conducted periodically and all students are invited to participate. Additionally, individual assistance with job-related concerns is available for any student.

An annual Career Day, held in the spring with representation from business, industry and all levels of government, and a job-search skills seminar with employer representatives participating are additional opportunities available to students who wish to improve their job-search skills and enhance their employability.

A student placement file, once established, is available to that student for current or future employment and graduate school admission purposes.

Veterans Affairs office assists eligible students

The Office of Veterans Affairs (OVA) would like to welcome all new students to UNCW. We in the OVA would like to take this opportunity to encourage all students to become involved with the university.

The OVA is located on the second floor of the Alderman Administration Building. All veterans and eligible dependents of veterans are urged to come by the OVA at your earliest convenience. Eligible dependent is defined as a child of a person who:

1. died of a service-connected disability;
2. has a total disability permanent in nature resulting from a service-connected disability or who died while a disability so evaluated was in existence;
3. the surviving spouse of any person who died of a service-connected disability; or

4. the spouse of any person who has a total disability permanent in nature resulting from a service-connected disability.

Eligible persons are reminded that it is your responsibility to inform the OVA of your attendance at UNCW. The Veterans Administration has no way of knowing whether or not you have actually registered unless you inform the OVA.

The OVA also provides administration of VA tutorial assistance. This program provides eligible students with a tutor in courses which are academically difficult. The Veterans Administration will pay the tutor $5.00 per hour and this money is not charged to your basic entitlement.

The OVA is your office, so take advantage of its services. The coordinator of the office is Tony L. Caulder and he is looking forward to working with UNCW students.

Bookstore stocks many items

The University Bookstore stocks required textbooks, varied interest books, art supplies, general school supplies and examination "blue books." The bookstore is located on Street F behind the cafeteria and next to the wildflower preserve entrance.

Campus clothing and gift items are also available in the bookstore.

Normal business hours for the bookstore are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Special, extended operating hours are posted at the beginning of each semester to handle the rush for new textbooks.

The bookstore will cash small checks for students with the presentation of a valid student I.D.

Computing Center located in Hoggard Hall

The Computing Center, located on the second floor of Hoggard Hall, is equipped with a high-speed, multi-leaving terminal transmitting at 600 cards per minute and receiving at 1100 lines per minute. A card punch and plotter are also attached. The UNCW terminal is connected to the Triangle Universities Computation Center by telephone circuit.

The university has access to the full resources of TUC's IBM 370/165 computer, including two million bytes of core storage and 800 million bytes of on-line storage.

The university has several conversational terminals located on campus. CPS, BASIC, and APL are available to faculty and students through these machines.

The university encourages the use of the center for individual and class projects. Key punches, reference material and assistance are available to students and faculty in the user room.

The Computing Center has a copy service available to all faculty and students at five cents per copy.

Financial Aid Office administers grant, scholarship, work and loan programs

Fourteen various grant, financial scholarship, work and loan programs are administered through the UNCW Student Financial Aid Office. Grants and scholarships are usually described as gift assistance and do not require repayment. Work-study positions are job slots through which students are given the opportunity to earn a portion of their expenses.

Loans are long-term, low-interest loans. There is no interest or repayment as long as the student is in school. Repayment begins after the borrower has been out of school one year and is set up on a regular quarterly payment schedule.

Formal awarding of financial assistance begins prior to the opening of school, and generally an award is reflected as packaged aid including more than one type of aid. For example, an applicant might reasonably expect an award which includes a loan or work scholarship as well as a grant. With the exception of a work scholarship, the financial aid a student receives is first credited toward a student's tuition and fees and room and board. Additional funds over and above these direct costs can be refunded to the student to help with living expenses.

What are the costs and how does a student go about applying for assistance?

Tuition and fees for the spring semester 1979 will run $235 while room and board will run $700. Other costs to be reckoned with are books, supplies, transportation and personal expenses.

Applications may be picked up in the Student Financial Aid Office, on the first floor of Alderman Administration Building, or will be sent to individuals on request.

The following is a list of the major financial aid programs available to UNCW students:

The Basic Education Opportunity Grant provides direct grants from the government to the undergraduate student for educational purposes. This federal entitlement program provides grants ranging from $100 to $1600. All students applying for financial aid are required to apply for Basic Grant.

The Supplemental Education Opportunity Grant provides aid to students who have an exceptional financial need. To receive an SEOG a student must apply to the Financial Aid Office. At UNCW, supplemental grants range from $200 to $1000 per year. To be eligible for a grant, a student must be enrolled for at least 12 hours and must be a citizen or resident of the U.S.

UNCW Tuition Scholarships provide needy and worthy students with grants equal to the cost of tuition at UNCW. To receive one of these scholarships a student must apply to the Financial Aid Office.

The Athletic and Creative Arts Departments, Atlantis, Fledgling, WLOZ and Seahawk also offer tuition scholarships. Academic scholarships are also offered by most academic departments on campus. Inquiries should be directed to these departments or organizations.

Several privately funded scholarships are available through Financial Aid. These include the Eliza Collins, Lucille Murchison Marvin Foundation, Rotary Club of Wilmington, Sue McCall Boone, Henry Harrell and J.W. Jackson scholarships. All inquiries regarding these scholarships should be directed to the Financial Aid Office. These range from $200 to $700 per year.

The College Work-Study Program provides funds to employ needy students on the UNCW campus. Students are paid at an hourly rate equal to the minimum wage and may work 10, 15 or 20 hours a week, depending on the award.

Applications for work-study should be made to the Financial Aid Office. To be eligible, a student must be enrolled for at least six hours and be a citizen or resident of the U.S.

The Work-Assistance Program provides funds to employ students on the UNCW campus. However, there is no need factor involved in the selection of students for this program. Students interested in the program should direct inquiries to the departments or organizations in which they would prefer to work.

The Plan Assuring College Education (PACE) provides jobs near the homes of North Carolina students. It assures eligible work-study students of summer employment with the understanding that 80 percent of the earnings must be saved for college expenses.

The National Direct Student Loan Program provides needy students with long-term, low interest loans for educational expenses. Under this program the student borrows money to finance a college education and repays the loan after graduation. Repayment begins nine months after graduation, and the borrower may take up to ten years to repay the loan. The interest rate of three percent does not begin accruing until the repayment period begins. All of the loan money may be cancelled for teaching service in approved schools. To receive a NDLS a student must apply to the Financial Aid Office.

The Federally Insured Loan Program (College Foundation) provides students from middle income families with long-term, low interest loans for post-secondary educational expenses. Under this program the student borrows from College Foundation and repays the loan after graduation, and the borrower may take up to ten years to repay the loan. The interest rate is seven percent and begins accruing when the repayment period begins. Applications for federally insured loans should be made directly to College Foundation.

The North Carolina Prospective Teachers Scholarship Loan Program provides assistance to prospective North Carolina teachers. The program provides a $600 per year loan, which will be cancelled if the student teaches in North Carolina public schools after graduation.

Health services available to all students

The Student Health Center, staffed either by a family nurse practitioner or physician's associate, is a service paid for by ALL students (both on- and off-campus residents) enrolled for six or more credit hours. Located off the main lobby of Galloway Residence Hall, the Health Center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., Monday through Friday, and a physician is on call 24 hours a day. The center is equipped to handle all kinds of health situations including diagnosis and treatment of general disorders, common infections, diseases and minor trauma.

The university has entered into an agreement with Wilmington Health Associates to provide general out-patient diagnostic and treatment services similar to those provided in their general office. Out-patient professional services provided by Wilmington Health Associates in the Health Service Center, dormitory, emergency room and general offices of the Wilmington Health Associates are covered by the agreement.

It is important to note that any in-patient hospital expenses, hospital emergency room charges or fees incurred in treatment by non-Wilmington Health Associates physicians are borne by the student. It is therefore very important that students avail themselves of the student health insurance policy available through the Student Affairs Office or through his or her family health insurance coverage.

To assure that you receive the medical services to which you are entitled without receiving a bill, it is necessary that you be prepared to show your student ID card. This is especially important when you are referred to the general offices of Wilmington Health Associates by the university nurse.

Library houses sources of information

The staff of Randall Library is delighted to have the opportunity to extend a warm welcome to all new students. We are looking forward to meeting each of you as you begin using the many services that we provide.

The library's aim is to provide the materials and services that you will need as you pursue your studies at UNCW.

The fast-growing collections now include approximately 169,000 volumes, 183,000 items in microformat and 1935 subscriptions to periodicals. All of these sources of information are readily available for your use.

In addition to providing a well-selected collection of materials for your use, the library is organized to assist you in locating the specific informational sources that you will need in your studies. We will also work very hard to teach you how to use a large library efficiently and effectively.

Knowing how to use a library is a very important skill, and gaining the ability will add greatly to your academic success.

The library is well-equipped with individual study desks, tables and group study rooms for study purposes. We are open quite a few hours every day of the week. We will be looking forward to seeing you and having the opportunity to offer assistance whenever you need it.

Tutoring given in Writing Center

Students who may have difficulty in their writing should take advantage of the services of the Writing Center. The Writing Center's service is provided without charge by the English Department. All UNCW students are welcome to use the center regardless of whether they are enrolled in a composition course.

The center offers individual tutoring and counseling in all types of writing. Students may drop by the Writing Center at any time but if they attend regularly they will usually notice quicker results.

During their visits, students write and discuss their writing with an instructor. The center's staff helps them with the process in invention, organization, copyreading and revision, and also with the mechanics of punctuation and syntax.

The Writing Center is staffed by three English Department faculty members, Richard Veit, Margaret Parish and Lil Brannon, and by two student tutors, Theresa Rhinehart and Richard Long.

The temporary location of the Writing Center is the conference room within the smoking lounge of the library (second floor). The library staff can assist first-time visitors to the center.

Hours of operation are as follows: Monday-Thursday, 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Monday evening, 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.; and Thursday evening, 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. New students are welcome any time.

Things you need to know

Residence hall visitation hours outlined with the regulations established by the residence hall governments.

Visitation hours are as follows:

Monday-Thursday--
1 p.m. to 11:30 p.m.

Friday and Saturday--
12 noon to 2 a.m.

Sunday--
12 noon to 11:30 p.m.

All overnight guests must register with the head resident or a designated resident assistant.

Withdrawal needs official notification

To officially withdraw from school, contact the Office of Student Affairs. Failure to officially withdraw will result in the student receiving an "F" in all courses being taken.

Students advised to leave pets home

While the university sympathizes with the desire of many students to have their pets on campus, the safety and welfare of the UNCW community have made it necessary to insist that pets such as cats and dogs are not to be housed in the residence halls. This ruling comes from the Wilmington Health Department.

The general rule is that no dogs shall be brought on campus except seeing eye dogs in the performance of their duty, and dogs which accompany their masters en route to another destination and remain in a car or on a leash. Under no circumstances is a dog permitted to run loose or be brought into a building.

Campus minister offers

Christian presence at UNCW

Vivian Martindale
Campus Minister

Vivian Martindale is campus minister at UNCW as a Christian presence for relating to students, faculty and others at varied levels of interest and concern. He works under the direction of a cooperative board of directors, United Christian Campus Ministry, sponsored by a number of denominations in Wilmington.

The long range goal is to promote an atmosphere in which growing persons can discover strength and meaning in Christian faith and where a recognizable Christian community may emerge to become a positive influence in university affairs and in the life of the total community.

Our minister is described as a listener who shares your religious interests and personal concerns with understanding. He is available to anyone in the university community regardless of religious preference.

He has no office to hide him and functions best on the sidewalk, in the dorm, under a tree or behind a cup of coffee. You can also leave messages or make contact through the Student Affairs Office (A-104) in the Administration Building. This is a full-time position and he is available Monday through Friday and for emergencies or personal crises at almost any other time. He would like to meet you so introduce yourself, since there are more of you than of him.

There are occasional communion worship experiences sponsored by the ministry as well as lectures and concerts. Also, the Market Place, a breakfast discussion group, gets involved with such topics as T.M., abortion, the occult, euthanasia, personal decision-making, Christians and politics, and Bible translations

Intramural program varied

The intramurals program at UNCW operates within the philosophy of "participation for all" in activities that will reach the largest number of students in individual, dual and team sports. Some will be highly competitive and others informally recreative.

All full-time students and students on a part-time basis carrying five hours and paying the student activity fee are eligible to participate in the activities of the intramural program.

Activities are provided on a seasonal basis as time and weather permit. Personal supervision by the intramural director is afforded all sports considered hazardous. Every precaution is taken to provide for the safety and welfare of the participants in all activities.

The intramural director is assisted by the students in the Physical Education 436 course.

The program of selected activities has in the past included archery, badminton, bowling, cross-country, frisbee, free throw contests, golf, billiards, "one-on-one" basketball, softball and volleyball. Additional sports are offered if there is evidence of interest.

The conduct of participants and rules and regulations for the various sports are found in the intramural handbook.

Communications degree granted

The Department of Creative Arts of UNCW offers the bachelor of arts degree in speech communications. The program in speech communications is intended for students who wish to prepare for careers in mass communications, public relations, sales, personnel management and public service and lead to graduate or professional study in law and theology.

Specifically, the degree program seeks to provide students with an understanding of the nature of verbal and non-verbal language, the importance of understanding of personal and organizational communication process and skill in the use of language as a medium of communication. Interdisciplinary in nature, the speech communications degree program is a psychological approach to oral communication which is not duplicated in any other school in North Carolina.

The program leading to the degree in speech communications has three components: (1) 45 hours of basic studies as outlined in the university catalogue; (2) the communications core; and (3) the communications area. The complete program is available from Jo Welch, coordinator, Room 1122, Brennan Hall 122.

Pianist Steven De Groote

Pianist Steven De Groote to be presented by University Music Series

The University Music Series will present pianist Steven De Groote in Kenan Auditorium Wednesday, Jan. 17, at 8 p.m. UNCW students will be admitted free with a valid I.D. De Groote's will perform works by Bach, Prokofiev and Schumann.

In September 1977 De Groote won the Grand Prize of the Van Cliburn International Piano Competition. The prize brings with it numerous engagements, including appearances with the Baltimore Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, the Cleveland Orchestra, the Detroit Symphony, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Minnesota Orchestra, the National Symphony, and the Philadelphia Orchestra. The Cliburn Prize also brought a much acclaimed Carnegie Hall recital.

In May 1977, De Groote won the Young Concert Artists International Auditions in New York, and therefore gave his New York debut recital on Nov. 8 as the opening event of the Young Concert Artists Series at the 92nd Street "Y". Steven De Groote, 24, was born in Johannesburg, South Africa, into a musical family. At an early age he toured South Africa performing trios with his violinist father and cellist brother. From the age of 11 his studies were with Lamar Crowson. After touring Europe in chamber music concerts with his family, De Groote entered the Brussels Conservatory at the age of 16, where he studied with Eduardo del Pueyo, and graduated in 1971 with first prize in piano with honors.

In the fall of 1971, De Groote took second prize in the International Beethoven Competition held by the European Broadcasting Union in Brussels and, as a result, was invited to perform a nationally broadcast recital for the CBC Toronto Festival in 1972. He also toured the Netherlands with the Limburgs Symphony Orchestra, appeared as soloist with the Belgian Radio and Television Symphony, and concertized in South Africa and Belgium.

In 1972 De Groote entered the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, where he worked with Rudolph Serkin, Mieczyslaw Horszowski and Seymour Lipkin, and graduated in 1975. De Groote was a finalist in the 1976 Leventritt Competition.

De Groote's busy schedule this season and next includes a solo appearance with the Boston "Pops" under Arthur Fiedler for national television, concerto performances with the Rochester Philharmonic, the National Symphony in Washington, DC, and the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra and tours of Mexico, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, Finland and South Africa.

In addition to winning the Grand Prize of the Cliburn Competition, De Groote was also awarded the prizes for the best performance of chamber music and for the best performance of the commissioned work, a ballade by Samuel Barber. De Groote gives his first New York chamber music appearance on the closing concert of the Young Concert Artists Series, performing the Schumann Piano Quintet with the Chilingirian String Quartet. The cellist of the Quartet, Philip De Groote, is his brother.

ENTERTAINMENT

Thalian Association to present series featuring instrumental performances

The latest project of the Thalian Association, the Thalian Music Series, will provide a series of six afternoon and evening concert performances featuring both local and guest artists and including instrumental, vocal and dance programs.

The format of this series offers artists a virtually ideal stage for their talents and, in turn, offers the public the opportunity of seeing and hearing some of the finest musical performers of our area, its sponsors believe.

The series will officially open on Jan. 14 with performance by the Chamber Arts Ensemble from Charlotte, N.C. This Ensemble features Pol and Pamela Sofras, both accomplished Greek artists, in a full program of interpretive dance with harp accompaniment, with original choreography to the music of Francois Couperin, F.J. Naderman and Erik Satie. (Pamela Sofras, although a visitor to our area, is in fact already well-known to the Dance Community of Wilmington for the choreography for the Bacchae).

The second presentation (Jan. 26 and 27) will also feature "dance" in the form of a full concert performance by the Wilmington Civic Ballet, Wilmington's most accomplished Dance Company, under the direction of Kathy Stout.

In February, the series will feature baritone Richard Steen in concert with Sam Dorsey, classical guitarist. Both Steen and Dorsey are on the music faculty of UNCW.

Later, on March 18, another concert performance will be offered featuring Jane McKinney and Dr. Richard Deas in a program of sonatas for violin and piano. Dr. Deas, a classical recording artist, is also on the music faculty of UNCW.

Next, on April 29, the Music Series will feature the Wilmington Pro Musica, an ensemble which features many of this area's finest musicians, under the direction of composer Frank Wiley.

The last program, on May 19, will present one of Wilmington's most-admired performers, Beth Marshburn Bell, in recital. A soprano, Bell has participated in many concerts and theatre performances in this area.

Full memberships in the Thalian Music Series are now available for $8. Individual admissions will be $2 at the door.

Checks for memberships must be made to the Thalian Music Series and all correspondence regarding memberships must be directed to the Thalian Music Series, c/o N. Alexander Miller, 20 S. 34th Street-No. 5, Wilmington, 28401.

All performances will be held in Thalian Hall. All will begin at 3 p.m. except performances of the Wilmington Civic Ballet, which begin at 8 p.m.

Physiology exhibit to open at county museum

After four years of planning a new permanent exhibit, "The Incredible You", will open Jan. 14 at the New Hanover County Museum, 814 Market Street. The main emphasis of this exhibit about human physiology is a better understanding of the body and its functions.

The idea of a permanent health exhibit was conceived by the Auxiliary to the Medical Society of New Hanover, Pender and Brunswick Counties. Through fundraising projects the Medical Auxiliary earned enough money to purchase, with matching funds from the Medical Society, a Skele-Torso. This authentic anatomical reproduction was the first acquisition for the exhibit.

The exhibition concept is geared to reach all age groups with an interesting message which will leave the visitor with a distinct knowledge that the human body is a precious possession and it is the individual's responsibility to care for it properly. The exhibit includes drawings, displays, slides, and films to explain the brain, nervous system, muscles, bones, circulatory system, senses of smell, touch, etc.

Theatre tryouts tonight

The University Theatre of the Creative Arts Department will hold tryouts for Slawomir Mrozek's outstanding contemporary play "Tango" tonight, the second night of tryouts, in the SRO Theatre at 7:30 p.m.

"Tango" unmistakably established Mrozek as one of the leading European dramatists. "Tango" is lively enough and witty enough to command attention in any circumstances its producers say. But apart from its intrinsic attractiveness, it must also be seen as a parable of modern history, with the Bohemian family reflecting the disorder of life between the wars and Arthur expressing the nostalgia of reaction.

There are parts for four men and three women. All production areas are open for anyone interested in working with the University Theatre.

The University Bookstore will extend the operating hours as follows:

Jan. 8, 1979 through Jan. 19, 1979 8 a.m.- 7 p.m.

Beginning Monday Jan 22, 1979, we will resume normal operating hours 8 a.m.-4 p.m.

lap, would make UNCW's fees among the highest in the university system. Linda Moore, director of Student Activities, pointed out, however, that projects at other schools could also raise their fees, making UNCW's seem less expensive by comparison.

Also in support of the large expenditure, Vice-chancellor William Malloy stated that "There is no use building a barely adequate facility when we know we are going to grow in the next few years."

Moore emphasized that plans for the interior features of the building have not been finalized. Currently, she is assessing the results of a survey of students about the possible services and facilities in the union. She also plans to survey faculty and administration personnel in order to prepare recommendations before construction is begun.

The prospects for an NCAA Division III football team at UNCW are far less certain than for a new student union, but the idea was kept alive when the board voted unanimously to conduct a study of the feasibility of such a team. That action represented an about face for the board (including SGA President Dunlap) from a position adopted in the summer not to conduct a study. That negative decision, however, had also been a reversal on an earlier commitment to look into the matter. As a result, the "on again, off again" study is apparently on again.

The idea of a football study has been vigorously promoted by members of the present club football team and their supporters, including SGA and, more recently, the university's Alumni Association. Any movement towards placing football under university auspices has been opposed, however, by Athletic Director Bill Brooks.

The study question arose during President Dunlap's report to the trustees on student government activities. In that report, he recommended that the rowing and football teams and the pompon squad be funded by the Athletic Department rather than SGA.

When no administration person made a motion to revive the football study, Dunlap pointed out that the Athletic Department was seeking a new division sport and that the board had promised to consider the UNCW club's request for division status "when they became the best club team around." Dunlap reminded this year's championship game, the team had become the trustees that by playing in one of the "best teams around." The board then voted unanimously to conduct a study under the auspices of the Athletic Department.

Vice-chancellor Malloy will conduct the study for the board. He plans to get input from the present team coach, team members, SGA officials, and the Athletic Department. His target date for completion of the study is the July meeting of the board.

In other action, the board heard that UNCW's proposal for a four-year nursing program is still under study by the Board of Governors. The fate of that proposal and the present two-year program is still in doubt, however, due to the unsettled relations between the university and the Federal government over desegregation.

Chancellor William Wagoner reported that spring enrollment is expected to be 3,860 (3,406 full-time), even though funds are budgeted for only about 3,300.

Israeli artifacts loaned by Dr. Shinn

Israeli artifacts loaned to university by Prof. Shinn

Israeli artifacts, some of them dating from 1850 to 1550 B.C.E., have been purchased by Dr. Gerald H. Shinn, associate professor of philosophy and religion, and will be placed on loan to the antiquities collection of UNCW.

The oldest pieces are an olive oil juglet and a vase from the Middle Bronze period (1850-1550 B.C.E.).

Dr. Shinn's private collection of Israeli artifacts is currently on display in the second floor foyer of the Randall Library. The new acquisitions will be added to the display after the first of the year.

Manager faces removal

A controversy developing over the expenditure of approximately $1000 by campus radio WLOZ-FM may result in the removal of station manager Steve Hess from his position. A decision was to be made Tuesday by the Media and Publications Board.

Removal of WLOZ station manager recommended to Media Board

by Bobby Parker
Editor

WLOZ radio appeared headed for a management shake-up Monday as a committee of the Media and Publications Board prepared to recommend the removal of station manager Steve Hess to the full board Tuesday.

The action stems from the expending of approximately $1000 for legal paperwork which WLOZ is unable to pay without severe cutbacks in its normal operating budget or a reallocation from SGA.

Hess, who says he did not authorize the expenditure, appeared before the Media and Publications Board last Wednesday along with WLOZ program director Wade Harris to discuss the situation.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap and Attorney General Glen Downs also attended that meeting. Dunlap recommended that Hess be removed by the board, and that the SGA not pay the $1000 bill.

According to the statements of Hess and Harris at the board meeting, Harris made a telephone agreement early last semester with a representative of FM Associates, a Pennsylvania-based consulting firm for paperwork related to WLOZ's compliance with federal communications regulations. Harris said he understood that Hess had given him instructions to finalize the agreement.

Hess, however, said that he first learned of the agreement when FM Associates sent the finished report along with a $1000 invoice. Neither Harris nor Hess could pinpoint the exact reason for the misunderstanding between them when questioned by members of the board.

Members of the board's committee, after further investigating the matter, reportedly concluded that the situation amounted to mismanagement and that Hess, as station manager, must take responsibility for the result.

At press time, the decision of the board was not known although it may have been influenced by Dunlap's recommendation as well as a petition filed with Student Activities Director Linda Moore calling for Hess' removal. The petition was reportedly signed by ten WLOZ staff members, including program director Harris, business manager Chris Mann and several disc jockeys.

The committee also recommended that permission be sought from SGA for the board to oversee WLOZ expenditures until a new manager is named, and that an advisory commission be appointed to establish long range goals for the station.

WLOZ adviser Dr. Irvin Claytor also conducted an investigation to report to the board with recommendations of his own. It was not known what Claytor's recommendations would be, but sources on the board reported their belief they may differ from the committee's findings.

SGA is expected to conduct its own investigation into the expenditure and will determine whether or not the station management is to be held personally responsible for the invoice.

Fee increase of $62 approved to finance new student union

by J. Dillon Bryant
Staff Writer

Initial plans for a $62 student fee increase to construct a $3.5 million student union has been given the nod of approval by UNCW's board of Trustees.

The trustees' action—the first step in a long series of actions requiring approval by higher authorities, including the UNC Board of Governors and the State Advisory Budget Commission—came as a result of a report prepared by Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jairy C. Hunter and Student Affairs Vice-chancellor William M. Malloy. The vice-chancellors were also advised by the Student Union Planning Committee which includes students John Wiley and Bobby Parker; Director of Student Activities Linda Moore; faculty representative Roger Lowery; and Dave Lumpkin, Bob Walton, Jim Clark, Don Trivette, Tyrone Rowell and Carl Dempsey, all administrators in the university business division.

The report proposed three alternatives: a $2.5 million, 38,000 square foot building, a $3 million, 46,000 square foot building and the chosen $3.5 million facility. The trustees reviewed the features that are normally included in a student union and chose the larger building because they wanted to be sure there is enough room to provide the normal outlay of programs, according to Vice-chancellor Hunter.

The proposed facility will feature a large multi-purpose activity room; an auditorium/theater; offices for administrative staff, student staff publications, organizations and student government; radio station and video tape studios; several meeting rooms; a food service facility; a covered outdoor patio; a directory information center; a large game room, lounge areas, storage, craft or workshop areas; lockers; music listening rooms; postal facilities; and commercial space for other service operations.

As a general idea of how large the proposed facility will be, comparisons can be made to other campus buildings. The present student union has approximately 11,000 square feet and the new classroom building is 40,000 square feet.

In other words, the new student union will be larger than the present student union and new classroom building put together.

The present student union, Hinton James Building, was occupied in 1961 when the student body was composed of 650 students. (That building was paid for by New Hanover County along with the two other original buildings.) Today's student body numbers approximately 4000 and is expected to increase to 5000 by 1984.

The need for a new student union at UNCW was first affirmed in 1974 when the UNC general administration, Board of Governors and the North Carolina General Assembly authorized construction of a new facility on the Wilmington campus. Since that authorization, however, construction costs have spiraled, making it necessary for UNCW to request authorization at a higher level to bring the project to fruition.

If the project is approved by the Board of Governors and the Advisory Budget Commission, a bond issue will be used to finance construction since non-educational buildings cannot be financed with state funds. The bonds will be amortized through a $62 increase in student fees.

According to university Comptroller Bob Walton "You either have a gift type or self-liquidating project. All educational buildings such as residence halls, cafeterias and student unions are paid for by the sale of revenue bonds."

Presently, students are assessed a $14 student union fee each semester which covers salaries and maintenance only. Based on an enrollment of 4,000 students, the fee would increase by $62 per semester. If, however, there is an increase in student population, the load per student could be reduced. A 4500 full time equivalent (FTE) enrollment, for example, would require a $55 per semester increase, while a 5000 FTE enrollment would hold the fee increase to $50 per semester.

Total student fees per semester within the UNC system currently range from a low of $74 at UNC-Chapel Hill to a high of $187 at Elizabeth City State. UNCW's current fees are $100 per semester and will rise to $150-$162 per semester. Other schools, however, may have similar projects which would raise their fees also in the next several years.

According to Hunter, the new facility will be located to the southeast of the sharp turn in "F" Street, adjacent to the Bluetenthal Wildflower Preserve, which will remain undisturbed. Projections made by our computers indicate that this site will be the center of the campus in the coming years.

The proposed time schedule calls for the design concept to be ready for approval by the Board of Trustees at its July meeting, with final design approval scheduled for December. If all other steps prior to construction proceed according to schedule, construction will begin in May 1980 and be completed in July 1981. Fees would increase in the fall of 1980.

Asked about the fee increase, Linda Moore, director of Student Activities, said "We came up with what is the

(See Fees, page 6)

Fee increase inevitable if campus is to have needed union facility

UNCW students will be facing an approximate $62 per semester fee increase beginning in the fall of 1980 to pay for construction of a badly needed student union building. It is estimated the cost will be around $3.5 million, and since it will be a non-academic facility there are no state funds available for the project. That means the money must be raised through student fees or private donations--and that means, however unfortunately, the astronomical fee increase will be necessary.

The need for a new student union is unquestionable. We have really never had a union on this campus in the true sense of the term, just a building which poses as such for lack of a better alternative. Were it a real union with all the facilities and services normally provided in a college union, students would be using it far more frequently than they do now. The Goodwood Tavern would not be closing during the evenings, there would be adequate facilities to accommodate all types of programs, and they would be building more office space for student organizations rather than administrative departments.

With the need established so apparent, then, the next order of business is answering it. The answer, in this case, will cost $3.5 million, if not more--nothing will change that.

It would probably be easy to cast the university's administration in the role of villains in this situation. After all, aren't they imposing fees on people who will have no choice but to pay or go elsewhere for their education?

The fact is that the administration, too, has little choice. They must conform to the rules set down by the state legislature. They are not likely to recruit a million-dollar philanthropist to donate a sizable share of the cost, and neither are they likely to recruit enough small donations to significantly offset the cost to students.

If there is a villain, then it must be the General Assembly which laid down the rules. They evidently do not believe in the importance of a student union to the educational process. A wise alternative to the present policy might well be for the state to provide matching funds to each institution for such projects whose worth not only is felt by students but by the community at large as well.

This situation doesn't, however, give the UNCW administration a license to assume that there is nothing to be done to soften the blow of the fee increase. Their first and most important duty is to assure that students are getting what they pay for: a building that meets present needs and is also adaptable to future needs.

Better planning must also be evident in the development of this facility than was characteristic of the last non-academic facility constructed here. The Great White Elephant (they call it Trask Coliseum) caused a fee increase of $25 per semester and the result was an oversized basketball court that did not even have the electrical capacity suitable for concerts when first constructed. We must wonder, too, at the priority given Trask when the need for a student union was as apparent then as now.

The fee hike will probably cause many grumbles among the students who will be forced to pay them. But grumbles or not, this campus has a major need for a new student union. It's good to see the talk and ideas finally in the process of becoming reality.

Most students barred from dorm festivities

To the Editor:
Student Activities Director

Linda Moore and Assistant Director Jon Greene have done another excellent job promoting student activities at UNCW. Refusing to allow 75 percent of the student body to participate in the festivities in the cafeteria Wednesday, Jan. 10, was a great way of building campus-wide togetherness. We understand that this activity was sponsored by the Residents' Action Team and that their funds were dominantly contributed by dorm residents, but a solution to this problem should and could have been worked out. A simple answer could have been to ask for donations from non-dorm students in the same manner raffles are run by churches.

Also, we feel along with the majority of students at UNCW, that more student activities should be held on weekends rather than weekdays. Students have more time for entertainment rather than studies on these days. It would be nice to have people staying around on weekends rather than packing it up and going home. This should be one of your major objectives and I hope you think about it. You would be surprised just how much student participation and spirit would improve and how much the college would benefit by the accomplishment of this simple task.

Carter's China decision ends diplomatic games, brings U.S. in line with reality

President Carter's decision to extend diplomatic recognition to the communist government of mainland China goes down as one of the boldest and most positive foreign policy decisions of the century. For Carter's political fortunes, it shows him to be a doer and an achiever with the courage to move forward. For the nation's world stature, it ends a quarter century of diplomatic game-playing and brings us face to face with the realities of the modern world.

The China decision tells us that finally Washington is ready to come to grips with the nationalist forces of Chiang Kai-shek in 1949. It signals a new desire for "people" diplomacy in which the relationships among people is ultimately more important than social and economic ideology.

Of course, Jimmy Carter wasn't as concerned with promoting this "people" diplomacy as he was with the effect the move would have on the global political picture. Obviously, there was a choice between the advantages of recognizing Peking or recognizing Taiwan; obviously, the advantages of the former far outweigh those of the latter.

The outrage expressed by Nationalist Chinese leaders, who still claim to be the only legitimate government of one China, could only be expected. Their hopes of ever regaining control of the mainland have steadily and rapidly decreased to the outer limits of remote possibility. Their one last ace was the official support of the United States, although its face value was overshadowed by its real value.

The changes in China since the death of Mao can only be termed spectacular. Led by the pragmatic approach of Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping, who has emerged as the major power within the Peking government, Chinese communists are making unexpected and unprecedented overtures to the U.S. and the Western world.

Example of these major changes are found in the relaxation of social codes of the Mao era: modernization of fashion and hair styles, new attitudes toward love in the so-called "loveless" society, and other changes that affect the day-to-day lives of the Chinese people.

The most important change in China, however, and the one which led Teng to bring his nation into a closer relationship with the U.S. is the change within the Chinese economy. Teng is looking to modernize China, and that means increasing its industrial capacity and economic strength to the maximum of its potential.

Teng recognizes the fact that industrialization has been most successful in the democratic West—in the U.S., West Germany and Japan. He realizes that his nation, having lay economically dormant under the ideologically pure guidance of Mao since its birth, does not have the capital or technology to successfully play catch-up without assistance from the West.

On the other hand, Teng is shrewd enough to know that China does have the natural resources (including its massive labor force) to eventually become an economic and industrial giant. The potential oil reserves alone could support that claim.

American opponents to Carter's initiative were very quick to react with rhetoric about our commitment to Taiwan. It was the defense pact between the U.S. and Taiwan that prevented diplomatic ties between Peking and Washington for so long. Peking, of course, considers Taiwan a part of China under its government, and Mao's China had steadfastly rejected official recognition from the U.S. as long as the same was maintained with Taiwan.

The argument that Carter broke the treaty in an unconstitutional exercise of executive power is more time-consuming than it is worthy. One problem here is simply semantics: the treaty was not broken, which insinuates that its provisions were breached; it was terminated, by the means provided in the text of the treaty. The defense pact clearly states that either nation could terminate the treaty giving one year's notice to the other party. That is exactly what Carter, as Chief of State, has done.

It is interesting also to note that the President's right to establish or dissolve official diplomatic relations with other nations is not being questioned. Yet Carter's opponents fail to realize that having dissolved diplomatic relations with Taiwan, the U.S. could not maintain a defense treaty with a nation which, officially at least, does not exist.

N.C. Senator Robert Morgan was among those adding a new twist to the opposition. Morgan worries, he says, about the move's effect on other small nations who have defense treaties with the U.S. who might wonder about the sincerity of the American commitment. Interestingly enough, Morgan used the example of the Netherlands in a recent newsletter to his constituents. But Morgan failed to point out—and probably did not realize—that The Netherlands has recognized Peking as the only legitimate government of China for years. We might better guess that Holland's reaction would be a welcome of the U.S. to the real world.

Of overriding concern in the China situation is for Americans to remember that not only are we compromising past official principles to recognize Peking—China's leaders are also compromising past principles of their government to send an ambassador to Washington. Compromising to meet on common ground of mutual benefit to both nations is what diplomacy is all about.

Week of prayer sponsored by ministry

by Vivan Martindale
Campus Minister

The week of Jan. 21 is a special time in the life of many Christian churches throughout the world. It will be the "Week of Prayer for Christian Unity," with a theme titled, "Serve One Another to the Glory of God." United Christian Campus Ministry (UCCM) and four nearby congregations are sponsoring a Service of Prayer for Christian Unity at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, Jan. 22, at the new St. Marks Catholic Church on Eastwood Road. Those participating congregations in addition to UCCM and St. Marks include Church of the Servant (Episcopal), College Acres Baptist Church and Windemere Presbyterian Church.

Each year the Graymoor Ecumenical Institute in co-operation with other church bodies develops a series of meditations, studies and worship experiences aimed at facilitating the expression of Christian Unity.

The foundation of the week is laid out by the institute in a small resource pamphlet:

"In the writings of the New Testament, the unity of the Church is presupposed. A fundamental communion or

Vivan Martindale

'koinonia' around the Risen Christ and the teaching of the apostles was the basis for the life and mission of the early Church. Of course, the unity of the early Church was sometimes threatened but the New Testament says again and again that God's Kingdom has come upon the world in Jesus Christ. It calls the Christian community both to reflect and to anticipate God's Kingdom in all aspects of life. Unity is a central sign of the Kingdom which is realized through mutual intercession, love, and service, to the glory of God."

A special invitation is extended to faculty, staff and students to join United Christian Campus Ministry and these local congregations for this special service of prayers, songs, litany and a homily or sermon by your campus minister, the Rev. Vivan H. Martindale.

Causes of dropping out based on acceptance of student on campus

Perhaps students should get a certificate of survival along with their diploma.

The causes of attrition are far more complicated than mere financial and grade problems. How a student is accepted and fits in on campus is the major factor in retaining students. Studies show that students need to develop a feeling of worth on campus to stay.

The attrition problem is becoming more acute because colleges must stabilize enrollment somehow in the face of a shrinking student population base.

It is difficult to find the real reasons so many students leave.

Most colleges know very little about why their students withdraw. Even when records are maintained, the reasons for withdrawal are usually summarized as financial, academic, personal and unknown, with the last two being marked most often.

"The lack of a significant, meaningful relationship with an adult who cares" and "the lack of involvement in a worthwhile way with a group" result in damaging isolation, says Greg Fawcett of the University of Missouri Office of Student Research.

An "overlap of academic work with high school" and "uninspired teaching" results in academic boredom, says Fawcett.

"Incompatibility with the campus environment, curriculum, people on campus" alienates students, Fawcett wrote. The "we don't really know why we are here" feelings combined with the feeling that the institution doesn't explain why also alienates the student, Fawcett said in his report.

"A key element in a student's decision to leave or stay revolves around the requirements and academic services of the institution and the individual's feeling of worth among faculty and students," said Fawcett.

"For a student to remain in college: You have to have one meaningful professor who cares; second, you have got to be a part of a meaningful group and that very likely could be, and often is, a part-time job," Fawcett wrote.

A Syracuse University report concluded that "The amount of informal interaction with faculty outside the classroom and the demand or challenge level found in student's nonacademic lives" were key factors in a student's decision to leave or stay.

Students who stayed in college, the Syracuse study showed, found their non-academic lives more challenging than those who dropped out. "This finding strongly suggest that stayers, when compared with leavers, were significantly more involved in the social system of the University," the report stated.

The report also indicated that "stayers ranked faculty members significantly higher as a positive influence on both their intellectual growth and on their personal development than did leavers."

These social factors, not aptitude, expectation or field study, were most important in the decision to stay or drop out.

"The first six weeks on campus are the most critical in determining whether a student is going to stay or leave. Students arrive at (the institution) . . . they are new, they are basically shy, they are awed by this thing called university. Consequently, it's hard for them to get hooked on, to become part of, to belong to, to identify with the university family," according to the Office of Student Research report.

Fawcett's report continues: "It is critically important to achieve a good student-university match-up early. Specifically for the student it means the right program, the right course-entry level, the right financial aid package, the right housing arrangement, and the right advisor."

The studies clearly show that faculty must improve advising the student contact in order to cut the attrition rate.

Simply stated, in order to keep the university operating in its present form through the next 20 years student enrollment must not fall too low.

Low enrollment means tighter budgets, less academic diversity, less research, the possible loss of the tenure system (perceived as key to academic freedom) and the deterioration of campuses.

Fawcett points out that retaining one student for four years means the same as recruiting four students over those four years, because of attrition.

Mixed drink referendum passes in county by nearly 2-1 margin

New Hanover County voters approved the sale of liquor by the drink by a 4,908-vote margin Friday.

The vote means that mixed-drink sales can begin in the county in about five weeks.

Under state law, sales will be allowed only in class A restaurants seating at least 36 persons, or in social establishments like country clubs.

There is no legal limit on the number of restaurants that can apply for or receive mixed-drink permits, and state alcoholic Beverage Control administration William Hester has predicted that about half of the county's 100 brown-bagging permits will be converted to liquor by the drink. State ABC officials will meet in Wilmington in about a week to explain the law and begin accepting applications.

Friday's victory for mixed-drink supporters came despite cold, rainy weather. Unofficial figures show 18,791 persons cast ballots—43 percent of all registered voters. Ballots for mixed drinks totalled 11,849; 6,941 voted against. Only four of the county's 34 precincts rejected liquor by the drink—none by large margins.

Overall, the returns were significantly different than they were in 1973, when the county rejected mixed drinks by about 130 votes.

Friday's referendum was held under enabling legislation approved by the 1978 N.C. General Assembly. The legislation was authored by former state Sen. W. G. Smith of New Hanover County.

The vote will end most "brown-bagging," under which patrons had to carry bottles of liquor into restaurants and mix their own drinks. The practice will be allowed in private clubs, however. Also on Friday, similar referendums passed in Onslow, Wake and Durham counties.

Other areas which have already approved mixed-drink sales include Mecklenburg and Orange counties and the towns of Southern Pines, Louisburg and Sanford.

The only communities which have rejected liquor by the drink are the town of Black Mountain and Dare County.

Programs to reach career women

A three-part series designed for a wide sector of aspiring career women entitled "Upgrading Skills for the Career Woman" will be presented by the Business and Professional Women's Club, the UNCW Office of Continuing Education and the YWCA.

All sessions will be held on Saturdays from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. at the YWCA, 2815 South College Road.

"Women in Executive Management" is the topic of the first program on Jan. 27. Dr. Stephen C. Harper, assistant professor of business and economics and director of the Management Center at UNCW, will open the session with a discussion of time management, problem solving and decision making. Betty Jo Welch, coordinator of speech communication in the UNCW

Department of Creative Arts, will conclude the program with a discussion of communications.

The second program on Feb. 10 will deal with "The Re-entry Woman." Gloria Brisson, continuing education coordinator for the South Central Mental Health Region, will speak on updating resumes, applying the confidence and coping with the work environment. Sandra Harkin, director of the office of Career Planning and Placement at UNCW, will conclude the session with a discussion of continuing education, sharpening skills and finding financial assistance.

The final program in the series on Feb. 24 will focus on "The Young Career Woman."

The Business and Profession Women's Club's 1979 Young Career Woman will be the keynote speaker. Others on the program are Barbara Jo Lineberger, program coordinator for the YWCA, who will discuss the life planning tree; Carol Miller, an engineer at General Electric, who will discuss resume writing; and Dr. Jim Edmundson, director of Continuing Education at UNCW, who will speak on continuing education opportunities.

Participants may enroll for the entire three-session program for $15, or for any of the sessions at a charge of $6 per session. Deadline for pre-registration for the series is Jan. 20, or for those attending selected sessions, one week prior to the date of the selected program.

Registration is being conducted by the UNCW Office of Continuing Education, room 119 Hoggard Hall, telephone 791-4330, extension 2192.

Surprising conclusions of tuition study

(CPS)—If your state doesn't spend much state money on higher education, then chances are you pay more tuition than students in other states.

Yet if the state government does spend a lot on student aid programs, chances are that you're also spending more on tuition, too.

The amount of state aid to higher education, though, is not related to how wealthy a state may be.

Those are the somewhat surprising conclusions of a series of studies released in the nation's capital in December.

Educators were most surprised by the two studies that showed state funding of higher education has little correlation to a state's wealth. Researchers D. Kent Halstead of the National Institute of Education and N.M. Chambers of Illinois State University found that some states with tax structures that enable them to give more money to their colleges simply don't appropriate education funding up to their potential. Yet other states, including North and South Carolina, Alabama, Utah, Idaho, New Mexico, and Mississippi, have low "tax capacities" but "above average" rates of higher education funding.

During the 1978-79 school year, Alaska is spending $176 per capita on higher education, making it the most generous state in the union. Hawaii has the second-highest rate, $128 per capita.

But New Hampshire only spends $32.44 per capita. It is thus the most parsimonious among the 50 states.

Students at New Hampshire's public colleges and universities, moreover, also pay the highest average tuition rates, according to a study by James Rusk and Larry Leslie of the University of Arizona.

According to Higher Education Daily, Rusk and Leslie argue that "adjusting state appropriations (to state schools) seems to be the major way to affect tuition levels."

Thus students in states which spend more per capita on higher education generally pay lower resident tuitions. They pay less, that is, unless a significant share of the state spending on higher education goes to student aid programs. "Tuition was low where aid was low."

The findings tend to undercut the effects of another trend found in a separate College Press Service analysis, which shows that states are increasing higher education funding faster than the growth in the states' personal income levels.

Nationally, increases in state education funding were more than double the rate of personal income growth. The analysis also showed that many southern states, where personal income levels are generally the lowest, actually raised higher education appropriations substantially over 1976-77 levels.

Did you get your copy of UNCW's first annual, year-at-a-glance calendar and handbook? Compiled last summer, "The Channel Marker" shows dates and times of campus events then scheduled, as well as basic information for new and returning students. Copies may be obtained from the Student Activities Office, rooms 103 and 105 in the Pub.

Campus men still earn more

(CPS)—"I don't think anybody knows why it is still this way," complains Donna Shavlik, associate director of the American Council on Education's Office of Women in Higher Education.

Shavlik was referring to a new survey that, once again, shows that faculty men earn more and outnumber women faculty at all college levels.

The report, conducted for the 1977-78 year by the National Center for Educational Statistics, found women earn $300-5000 less per year than men.

Of the total 389,264 faculty positions at colleges and universities studied by NCES, 74.6 percent were held by men. Women held only 25.4 percent.

Salary and number differences are consistent for every faculty rank, including lecturers, instructors, assistant, associate and full professors. The proportion of women increases at the lower ranks.

Fall issue of 'Atlantis' features female writers, artists

by Robert S. Brown
Review

The fall issue of "Atlantis," which was not available until the final exam period last semester, has at least one obvious feature distinguishing it from past issues. That feature manifests itself as the conspicuous predominance of works done by women. A close look will show that 39 of the 45 poems and stories were done by women and that 30 of 33 artworks were also produced by women.

This, of course, says nothing about the quality of the issue itself. However, it is indicative of either the fact that the ERA movement is inciting more women to put their thoughts down on paper or the fact that most of the staff members of "Atlantis" are women.

A few other aspects which make this issue a little more interesting appear as subtle points, not as obvious as that mentioned above. The cover, which isn't terribly exciting or inviting, has at least one redeeming quality. The artist, Sharon Ely, has her last name subliminally written with the strands of hair.

Another point for this issue is the inclusion of a poem on lesbianism. This is nothing to get excited about but it has been an uncommon topic in past issues. Perhaps future issues will contain more complex poems on this topic than Dianne Hulscher's "The Other Side."

Still another point of interest is the link between Richard Long's "Winter Solstice" and

"Occasionally Flowers" and Lea McDaniels's "Water Fables" which seems to suggest some kind of relationship between these two writers.

A list of the brighter moments in this issue would have to include the artwork of Rebecca Cross which is very imaginative and pleasing. Mike Hall's picture would also have to be included for its thoughtfulness and intensity. And Debra Dennis' picture on page 32 is also of the quality I expect to see in our literary magazine.

The poems which particularly attracted me include "The Comedian" by Dorothy Hall which is a melancholy soliloquy bemoaning life's little ironies. "Insentience" by Katrina Gorely which is a powerful confessional poem telling of the desperation of being trapped in a relationship that has ended. "Child Gazing" by Ellen Honeycutt is written with a particularly romantic style. "Winter Solstice" by Richard Long has an ambiguous ending that seems at once to be hopeless and hopeful. The idea that "days have become progressively longer" seems bleak, yet holds the promise of the future warmth of spring. And an inordinate string of poems by Catherine Bell including "Miss Angel Begonia," "Love At The University Level," "Supplication" and "Uncle Albert" which contain the theme of self-reliance or the lack of it.

Of the short stories, "A Beauty For All Seasons" by Beneatha Schmidt stands out as the most involving as the main character searches for something to help her maintain her sanity in a nursing home. She rediscovers her memories and they serve as the closest thing to a fountain of youth she can find.

Gregg Glickstein also deserves notice for his two stories which range from the tragic to the humorous; and I expect with time and experience his style will really mature.

In the spring issue I hope to see all photographs and pictures credited, all contest winners labelled as such and a better male-to-female ratio if submissions allow.

Campus Chuckles: Here's Johnny—but only three nights per week

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

"The Tonight Show" reminds me of a pineapple. You know there's this good juicy stuff in there somewhere, but you've gotta hack away a lotta bull to get the The Real Thing. Don't read me wrong—I'm regional president of the Johnny Carson Fan Club and I'm prepared to name my first son Johnny, but why, oh why, do we never see the man?

I mean, sure, everyone deserves a day off now and then, but what is the world coming to when a man who works three nights a week carries home four (yes, Virginia, FOUR) million per annum?

Even so, I can take Don Rickles (funny, funny man) as a guest host on Monday nights, and I even watch those sappy reruns they bill as the "Best of Carson," but when some buck-toothed comic appears for three weeks running and informs me that Johnny is relaxing on the Riviera after undergoing emergency surgery on his toupee, well, that's when I tune in to the Creature Feature on Channel 12.

Johnny, oh Johnny are you listening? Why are ninety minutes of commercials, Ed MacMahon's stale jokes, the NBC orchestra, and some sweating, grinning guest host called the Johnny Carson Show? Really, John Davidson is very nice and I so swoon over his teeth, but he's not you, JC. And bless his heart, Ed tries hard, but he's just another boozier without you.

Surely I'm not alone. Johnny Carson fans are multiplying. Ask your mailman. Ask the janitor. (Don't ask strangers—remember what your mother always told you.) Yes, we late-night groupies are everywhere. Remember the really funny shows? When Lassie used Johnny as a fire hydrant. When the Mighty Carson Art Players did that hysterical takeoff on the Not Ready For Prime Time Players (and guess who was a Killer Bee?). And remember when we first realized that Johnny's adorable crowsfeet had mysteriously been erased while he was away "on vacation"?

Ah, the memories! Sixteen years of monologues that never made it, sponsors that folded and flopped (some of them probably died laughing) and guests that went cross-eyed and turned mute in front of the cameras. America loves you, Johnny! Come back for more than two nights at a time and we'll even learn to love the crowsfeet!

Garry Cooper led Seahawks in scoring with 16.7 avg. over four-game stretch.

Seahawks return for home stand with impressive 10-3 record

by J. Dillon Bryant
Staff Writer

The UNCW Seahawk basketball team 10-3 returns to Trask Coliseum Thursday night to face Little Rock, Arkansas, and then travels to Statesboro, Ga. to face the tough Eagles of Georgia Southern Sunday afternoon.

The Seahawks opened up a two week-six game marathon with a 87-65 win of old rival Campbell College January 8th at Buies Creek, N.C. Garry Cooper led the Seahawks with 16 points, including 12-12 at the free throw line. Danny Davis came off the bench to grab a career high eight rebounds.

With only 48 hours rest, the Seahawks returned to action to face Sun Belt Conference pre-season favorite, South Alabama.

After UNCW built a healthy 40-27 halftime lead, the Jaguars of South Alabama showed their strength in battling back to a 61-61 tie with 1:18 left in the game.

Seahawk Dave Wolff had been called for an offensive foul in the UNCW stack offense and the officials incorrectly sent Alabama's Ed Rains to the line. He hit the first free throw before Gibson convinced the officials of the error and the point was taken off. The correct player, Rory White, then came to the line and hit both free throws for the tie.

Barry Taylor then scored on a back door pass from Ralph Peterson with 1:02 left for a 63-61 lead and Garry Cooper, who scored a game high 25 points and grabbed eight rebounds, connected on a break after a Rains charge to make it 65-61. Those baskets made it possible for the 'hawks to survive for a 65-63 win.

"We beat a more-talented team than our own," said Coach Mel Gibson.

"We made a lot of mistakes against their half-court trap (17 second-half turnovers).

We knew South Alabama was explosive. They beat a team by 23 points after being down by 6 at the half."

The 'Hawks were led by Cooper with 25 points, Barry Taylor with 13, and John Haskins with 12 points.

The next game came this past Saturday against the Eagles of Georgia Southern at Trask Coliseum.

UNCW spent most of the night trying to get into the game, but never could. A fiercely aggressive man-to-man defense, deployed by Georgia Southern, built several leads of six points in the first half. To make matters worse UNCW suffered one of it's worst shooting percentage nights in several years as they succumbed to a 33-31 half time defeat. Garry Cooper who had previously hit 19-19 free throws in the last two games went 3-13 against the Eagles and the Seahawks were stunned 72-67.

"I thought the run we made at them that got it down to three with us at the line was going to get us into it again," said Gibson. "You can't worry about free throw shooting (15-33) because there isn't a way to explain it. Shooting is relative. Defense should be constant."

The 'Hawks fell to 9-3 with that loss and it was their first loss in Trask this year.

Monday night the 'Hawks met another old rival, Pembroke State. Going back to 1963, Pembroke and UNCW have played 32 times. The 'Hawks are losing the battle 20 wins to 12, but have won the last 6 games in a row. Going in to the game, UNCW had been averaging 71 points and shooting 49 percent from the field (the lowest in three years). They are also shooting a miserable 65 percent from the line.

The game opened with the 'Hawks opening up a 14-7 and 20-10 lead before grabbing a 34-29 half-time lead. Despite three fouls, Dave Wolff added 16 points in the first half.

The second half began with the 'Hawks opening up a 48-38 lead with eleven minutes left.

A three-point play by Taylor, a dunk and a free throw by Cooper, two free throws by Taylor, and a jumper by Delaney Jones increased the Seahawk lead to 58-43 with 7:24 left.

The Seahawks broke the game wide open with a lay-up by Danny Davis, a free throw by Peterson and a three point play by Davis to widen the margin to 64-43.

The margin increased to 66-43 before Gibson put in the subs with 5:30 left.

The Seahawks went on to win 80-63. The 'Hawks were led by Wolff with 16 points, Taylor with 14 points and Cooper with 13 points.

For the four game Marathon, the 'Hawks averaged 74.8 points while holding their opponents to 65.7 and Garry Cooper led the 'Hawks with an average of 16.7 points.

The Seahawks return to action tomorrow night against Little Rock, Arkansas in Trask Coliseum.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

With Super Bowl XIII almost upon us a few super bowl facts may be in order. For instance, this will be the Dallas Cowboys fifth appearance in a super-bowl, which is a record.

Also this year will mark the first year that a team will have won 3 super bowls, since both Pittsburgh and Dallas have won two. Counting the 1979 contest, the seventies in the NFC (National Football Conference) have been dominated by Dallas and Minnesota who have gone a total of nine times in ten years (Washington went in 1973).

Another strange fact is that there has been a team which went once from both the NFC and AFC (American Football Conference). The Baltimore Colts won the NFC title in 1968 and went to the 1969 Super Bowl against the N.Y. Jets. (The Super Bowl is always after New Year's Day). Then after switching Conferences the same year, played the Dallas Cowboys in 1971.

There have been only five teams from the NFC to participate in row thirteen Super Bowls. The AFC has had only one more, with six teams participating. The lineup is: NFC; Dallas (5), Minnesota (4), Green Bay (2), Washington (1), Baltimore (1), AFC; Miami (3), Pittsburgh (3), Oakland (2), Kansas City (2), Baltimore (1), Denver (1).

The AFC holds an 8-4 edge in the won-lost records. The NFC has only had two teams that have won; Green Bay and Dallas with two wins each. Of all the AFC teams which have played in a Super Bowl, only Denver has failed to win at least one.

Green Bay and Pittsburgh have the best record in Super Bowl competition at 2-0. Minnesota has the worst at 0-4.

Of all the Super Bowl MVP's, only two have been defensive players. In 1971, Chuck Howley of the Dallas Cowboys was MVP in a losing cause against Baltimore and last year when Harvey Martin and Randy White of Dallas shared the award.

So, on January 21, the Cowboys and the Steelers face each other in the game of games.

This is Super Bowl XIII. Even Thomas Henderson says that it will be a great game.

Do not forget about Seahawk Sports this week. There will be a big combination men's and women's swim meet on January 20th in the Seahawk Aquatics Center at 2:00. The opponents will be Old Dominion and the College of Charleston. On Thursday night, January 18, the men's basketball team plays Arkansas-Little Rock. The women's basketball team will play a preliminary contest on the same day at 5:30 p.m. against Shaw University.

Taylor is player of month

Guard Barry Taylor was named Seahawk Player of the Month of December. The Award is sponsored by McDonalds and is given to the player who gives outstanding performance and significant contribution to the Seahawk basketball team. Barry turned in good performances all during December and was high scorer against Campbell. Barry follows Dave Wolff who was named player of the month for November when he was high scorer in three games and high rebounder in two.

The Player of the Month Award will be given through February.

'Heroes' presents Winkler, Field in poignant love story

Theories about motion pictures are as numerous as the film courses which have proliferated around the country in the past 30 years.

A graduate of New York University's Institute of Film and Television and a former fellow of the American Film Institute, lifelong film fanatic Jeremy Paul Kagan has his own ideas. "Film," he says, "is an important device to improve the consciousness of man."

"Heroes," the third movie offering of the Fine Arts Committee being shown at Kenan Auditorium, Tuesday, Jan. 23, at 8 p.m., was Kagan's second feature film.

How does this film, which stars Henry Winkler as an emotionally wounded Vietnam veteran and Sally Field as the girl who helps him re-enter the real world, jibe with his ideas of what movies should be and do?

"'Heroes' is absolutely not a war movie," he insists.

"Rather, it's a movie about a man who has been deeply affected by the war, and about the people with whom he interacts."

"The film is, in every sense, an uplifting story of growth, both personal and private," he says. "It is also, basically and most importantly, poignant love story."

More a love story than a tale war, "Heroes" details the drama of Jack Dunne (Winkler), a confused pain-laden Vietnam vet whose unquenchable enthusiasm for life sends him on an odyssey back to acceptance and to reality. Along the way, he rediscovers himself as he discovers a relationship with an amiable but equally confused misfit, Henry Winkler and Sally Field in a scene from "Heroes," presented in Kenan Auditorium Tuesday at 8 p.m. played by Sally Field.

Winkler, best known to millions as Arthur "Fonzie"

Fonzarelli of the top-rated

ABC-TV series "Happy Days," is one of the most popular media figures of our age. He is currently hard at work on his fifth season of "Happy Days."

Winkler's co-star in "Heroes" is the immensely talented Sally Field. After achieving international stardom in three successful television series—"Gidget," "The Flying Nun" and "The Girl With Something Extra"—Miss Field elected to remain off the screen for several years rather than accept another "instant ingenue" role.

Along with Winkler and Field, "Heroes" boasts a supporting cast headed by Harrison Ford, the cynically heroic Han Solo of "Star Wars." A veteran of television, Ford also co-starred in Universal's "American Graffiti."

"Heroes" was filmed in Technicolor and carries the rating of PG.

Literary films scheduled by English Club

Sponsored by the UNCW English Club, the Films-From-Literature Series will consist of seven full length movies during the Spring 1979 semester. Each movie, considered a classic by critics, is adapted from a literary work of great importance. Ranging from William Shakespeare's fantasy "A Midsummer Night's Dream" to Stephen Crane's realistic "Red Badge of Courage," Films-From-Literature provides students, staff and community with the opportunity to view the successful effort of the movie industry in faithfully reproducing literature.

This effort begins with the 1935 production of "Mutiny on the Bounty" (Clark Gable and Charles Laughton play the protagonists), and ends with "A Doll's House" (Jane Fonda), produced in 1974.

The schedule for the Films-From-Literature Series is: "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Jan. 22; "A Doll's House," Jan. 29; "The Thin Man," Feb. 5; "Pride and Prejudice," Feb. 12; "Red Badge of Courage," March 26; "Mutiny on the Bounty," April 9; and "A Midsummer Night's Dream," April 18.

Beginning at 7 p.m. in the Randall Library Auditorium, each movie is free.

Students offered jobs in Europe

For twenty years students made their way across the Atlantic through American-European Student Service to take part in the actual life of the people of these countries. The success of this project has caused a great deal of enthusiastic interest and support both in America and Europe. Every year, the program has been expanded to include many more students and jobs. Already, many students have made applications for next summer jobs.

American-European Student Service, on a non-profitable basis, is offering these jobs to students. The jobs consist of forestry work, child care work (females only), farm work, hotel work (limited number available), construction work, and some other more qualified jobs requiring more specialized training.

The purpose of this program is to afford the student an opportunity to get into real living contact with the people and customs of Europe. In this way, a concrete effort can be made to learn something of the culture of Europe. In return for his or her work, the student will receive his or her room and board, plus a wage. However, students should keep in mind that they will be working on the European economy and wages will naturally be scaled accordingly. The working conditions (hours, safety, regulations, legal protection, work permits) will be strictly controlled by the labor ministries of the countries involved.

In most cases, the employers have requested especially for American students. Hence, they are particularly interested in the student and want to make the work as interesting as possible.

They are all informed of the intent of the program, and will help the student all they can in deriving the most from the trip to Europe.

For further information and application forms write to American-European Student Service, Box 70, FL 9493 Mauren, Liechtenstein (Europe).

Seven films presented by Cinema '79

The Departments of Creative Arts, English and Mathematical Sciences in conjunction with the Office of Continuing Education will present Cinema '79, a series of seven fine arts films, beginning Jan. 27.

All films will be shown in King Hall Auditorium on selected Saturdays Jan. 27 through April 28. Adult season tickets are $10, and student memberships are $5. Admission to individual films in the series will be $2 for adults and $1 for students.

"Charlie Chaplin's 'The Gold Rush,'" considered to be the silent screen's finest comedy, will open the series on Jan. 27.

It is a bittersweet tale of the Little Tramp's misplaced love in the days of the Klondike gold rush. This is the complete original version with a recently added new music score.

On Feb. 3 the feature will be Sergei Parajanov's "Shadows of Forgotten Ancestors" ("Wild Horses of Fire") in color. Unlike any other film released by the USSR, this is "one of those rare films which is visually so rich that the experience of seeing it has more in common with listening to a fine piece of music than with watching the average movie."

"The Man in the White Suit" by Alexander Mackendrick will be featured Feb. 17. The film is a satiric comedy with serious overtones whose targets are big business, planned obsolescence and big labor.

An existential essay on life, "Shoot the Piano Player" by Francois Truffaut, will be shown March 17. Half-thriller and half-parody, the film shows Truffaut's skillful mastery of the medium and his wild and fanciful fascination for cinematic devices.

The March 31 feature will be Satyajit Ray's "Two Daughters," a two-part film. In "The Postmaster," a student assigned to be postmaster of a village is nurtured and cared for by a little girl, yet not until he leaves does he realize the intense affection she has for him. "The Conclusion" speaks of a forced marriage in which the bride flees her groom and eventually returns in true love.

Basil Dearden's "Victim," scheduled on April 21, explores the shadowy world of homosexuality and its attendant cruelty-blackmail. The tightly woven suspense thriller, starring Dirk Bogarde, treats the taboo subject with maturity and intelligence.

A masterpiece of Polish Film Renaissance, "Ashes and Diamonds," concludes the series on April 28. One of the clearest portrayals of a communist society ever made, the film by Andrej Wajda bares the conflict of idealism and instinct in a young resistance fighter who assassinates the wrong men at the end of World War II.

The deadline for registering for Cinema '79 is Jan. 20 in the UNCW Office of Continuing Education, room 119 Hoggard Hall.

Billy Joel stands out in '52nd Street'

Billy Joel has come a long way from Piano Man which was a folk LP with "The Ballad of Billy the Kid", while his latest album 52nd Street leans more towards rock. 52nd Street, with all songs written by Joel, seems to be the answer to the struggle Joel expressed in the 1978 release, The Stranger, which contained four single releases: "Moving Out (Anthony's Song)," "Just the Way You Are," "Only the Good Die Young" and "She's Always a Woman."

As with all of Joel's other four LP's, dialogue plays a big part in the lyrics and the songs deal with personal relationships.

The "Lords of 52nd Street" include Doug Stegmeyer (bass guitar), Liberty Devitto (drums), Richie Cannata (saxophone, clarinet and organ), Steve Khan (guitar) and of course Billy Joel on the piano.

Side one of the disc opens with "Big Shot". Along with most songs on the LP, this cut expresses real situations that happen to all of us like when you drink too much which leads to you saying too much and in turn hurt someone else. "Honesty" is most like

RECORDS

"Piano Man" with a slow, easy listening theme. Everyone wants and needs honesty but there's not much going around. To have a meaningful relationship, honesty is needed. Joel's feelings are expressed well in this cut.

"My Life" which is now steadily climbing up the charts is a 180 degree turn-about from "honesty." Basically, I feel this song is just Joel's way of saying everyone has their own style, he likes his life and other people shouldn't interfere with another person's life.

"Zanzibar" is a cut which shows Joel's variety. The opening is a trumpet solo by Freddie Hubbard. Joel has the trumpet in his pictures but never plays it on the album. Too bad—anyone would want to get credit for that great solo. Zanzibar tells of Ali and Pete Rose in a way that says no matter how simple your life is, you are important and can be compared to famous people.

Side two starts with a sax solo by Richie Cannata which also deserves a lot of credit. "Stiletto" is the best cut on the disc (my opinion) with the up-beated style and lyrics which express how people are always being used by others.

Joel also has a piano solo which needs no added adjectives to describe.

"Roselinda's Eyes" style is Mexican and well done. A musician needs someone to help him through hard times but when he got a big chance he didn't forget his girl or her "eyes."

"Half a Mile Away" is about a situation most of us have. We have two different worlds each "a half a mile away" from the other, fairly close but still distant.

The last two cuts on 52nd Street express a very different Joel. The style is so different it can't be identified as Joel.

In "Until the Night" Joel has a very sophisticated voice like a businessman who goes through life waiting "until the night."

The title cut, "52nd Street," is a short expression of the new Joel which will probably be around for a while.

The variety and personal expression brought out in 52nd Street reflects the style of Billy Joel. The new Joel is out and running and in the lead.

History Department to sponsor 'War and Society' film series

The Department of History will feature a film series on "War and Society" beginning Jan. 24. All four programs in the series are scheduled for Wednesday nights at 7:30 p.m. in the auditorium of the new classroom building. There is no charge for admission, and the general public is invited as well as students and faculty.

The four films deal with the impact of war on society during different periods in American and British history. Each film is considered a classic of the history-through-film genre. Two are dramatic portrayals of leading historical figures (Cromwell and Churchill) and two are well-known documentaries about America at war (in World War II and the Vietnam War).

The series opens on Jan. 24 with "Victory at Sea," a condensed version of the popular television special about the role of the United States Navy in World War II. Included are rare Navy Department films showing the attack on Pearl Harbor, the Battle of Midway, the preparations for D-Day, and other major engagements. Richard Rodgers' musical score gives dramatic background to the fast-moving visual story.

"Hearts and Minds" will be featured on Jan. 31. This powerful documentary on the war in Vietnam drew excited reviews and stirred lively discussions when it first appeared in American theatres in 1975. The film shows the war both at home and abroad, moving quickly from the football fields of America's small towns to the battlefields of Indochina, and back to the halls of government in Washington. It presents informative interviews with people who viewed the war from quite different perspectives, such as General William Westmoreland, presidential adviser W. W. Rostow, and several infantrymen. Because of the graphic portrayal of the destructive effects of war, this film is not recommended for children.

"Cromwell," the third film in the series (Feb. 7), studies Oliver Cromwell, one of the gigantic figures in British history. The story covers the epic of the English Civil War from 1640 to 1653. Cromwell himself is played by Richard Harris, with a judicious blend of fanaticism, ambition, political skill and charisma. The doomed monarch, Charles I, is played by Alec Guinness. It is the conflict between these two figures and between the radically different philosophies they represent that motivates the film and which in fact swept 17th century Englishmen into bloody civil wars and regicide.

The final film in the program, "Young Winston" (Feb. 14) studies the most celebrated Englishman of his time. Winston Churchill is pictured as a young man in search of adventure and a career in late Victorian England. The film takes us from Winston's birth into the powerful Churchill family through his first important speech in Parliament. Along the way we share Churchill's amazingly crowded first 25 years, from the difficult home life to the battlefields of India and Africa, and then to his hero's escape during the Boer War.

Nationally-known humor columnist Erma Bombeck and feminist Liz Carpenter were guest speakers last Thursday at a luncheon held to boost area support for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment in North Carolina.

Sponsored by the League of Women Voters of New Hanover County and the New Hanover Women's Political Caucus, the luncheon was arranged by ERAmerica, a national coalition of organizations that support ratification of the ERA.

Accompanying Bombeck and Carpenter were Jessie Rae Scott, former first lady of North Carolina, who is the legislative lobbyist for North Carolinians United for ERA (NCUERA). Also present was Kathleen Currie, public relations director of ERAmerica.

Bombeck, clearly the sell-out crowd's favorite, entertained the diners with a few stock quips relating to the trials and tribulations faced by today's domestic engineers. After this humorous preliminary, however, she soon waxed serious about the benefits of ERA. Bombeck expressed personal interest in the Equal Rights Amendment, saying that it holds merit "for all of us."

While the crowd listened with obvious interest, Bombeck informed all present that only three more states' ratification are required to pass ERA. She concluded her speech by commenting, "I feel sure that North Carolina will become the thirty-sixth state to ratify ERA."

Carpenter then delivered a slightly less humorous version of the now-familiar rallying cry of ERA backers. Chronicling the organization's triumphs thus far, she proceeded to explain what the Equal Rights Amendment would mean to married women.

"They would have their own identity . . . emotionally, financially," she remarked, and concluded that she felt confident that all intelligent residents of this state—"men, as well as women, will back ERA all the way."

At the conclusion of the program, which lasted approximately 30 minutes, there was a short press conference during which the two women fielded questions presented by reporters. In answer to one particular question, Bombeck replied, "I became personally interested in ERA when I saw my 25-year-old daughter's difficulty in obtaining credit, a bank loan, new car, etc. A man of her age would not have faced such opposition, and I felt it extremely unfair."

Carpenter stated that she believed that "ERA is for everyone. I do not feel it will lead to unisex bathrooms or the like." Both supporters agreed that the ERA will eventually receive the ratification of the necessary 38 states.

After the luncheon and press conference, the speakers and their contingent returned to Raleigh for a reception with state legislators, who may consider a ratification proposal this session after defeating three previous efforts.

Travel, study in Spain offered to students

Each year for 5 weeks of the summer, a program is offered by Augustana College of Rock Island, Illinois, to students in the U.S. and Canada to travel and study in Spain. Last summer, 98 students from 28 states, departed from Kennedy Airport in New York and flew to Madrid. The group was then bussed to the campus of the Ciudad Universitaria. Each class met five days a week and courses ranged from elementary Spanish to literature and culture.

Students toured La Mancha for two days, visiting all the interesting places related to Cervantes and Don Quixote.

Some students had the opportunity to take advantage of the optional side trips to Paris, London and Rome arranged by the program, or trips independent of the program itinerary. Once or twice a week a group was scheduled to visit such historical places as Valle de los Caídos, El Escorial, Segovia, Avila, Toledo, Museo del Prado, Palacio Real, etc.

Students found that they had also more than enough time to do, see and learn whatever they chose.

As part of the program, a trip was taken to southern Spain, visiting famous cities as Cordoba, Sevilla, Granada, Malaga, and three days were spent in the beautiful Torremolinos Beach. Plans are already in progress for the 15th Summer School Program in Spain 1979. Students may earn nine quarter college credits.

All persons interested should write to Dr. Doreste, Augustana College, Rock Island, IL 61201 as soon as possible. Space is very limited.

Resignations

Fledgling editor steps down

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Yearbook editor Margie McLamb has resigned her position, stating that staff problems which led to an SGA investigation of the yearbook were the result of "prejudices" held by staff members who compared her to last year's editor.

The yearbook, Fledgling, was the target of an investigation by the Student Legislature which had been alerted to organizational problems by Fledgling staff members. A central issue that concerned SGA officials was the number of 1978 books which have yet to be distributed.

SGA Investigating Committee Chair Karin Whaley presented her findings to the Legislature last week, concluding that "the whole thing is there's trouble between the staff and the editor."

Whaley reported that McLamb had referred to one specific staff problem which McLamb said was the root of other problems.

Although neither Whaley nor McLamb would elaborate on this problem, other sources said that it involved McLamb's attempt to dismiss Associate Editor Debra Sloan and the threat of a racial discrimination suit against McLamb if the dismissal were enforced.

In an interview Monday, Sloan confirmed that McLamb had tried to dismiss her. Sloan said she told McLamb she "would try every possible means" to keep her office unless McLamb could present specific written complaints about her job performance.

Sloan said that McLamb's major complaint was inability to contact the associate editor when needed.

Sloan also said that McLamb informed her of the dismissal decision and reported that the Media and Publications Board had approved the action.

McLamb later told Sloan she would not be removed and that the Publications Board had not acted in the matter.

But Sloan said that her job was curtailed to "just a title" when McLamb appointed Robbie Register as assistant to the editor, a newly-created position.

McLamb denied that Sloan's job was curtailed.

Sloan disputed McLamb's claim that the conflict between the two was the major cause of the other staff problems.

McLamb emphasized that she is "not leaving the position on the basis of the (SGA) investigation." She said she is

Station manager leaves WLOZ

by Bobby Parker
Editor

WLOZ station manager Steve Hess, under pressure of a recommendation to the Media and Publications Board that he be removed, has agreed to resign his position. Hess' decision was announced at a meeting of the board Jan. 16.

Hess' resignation will become effective Jan. 31 or when a new manager is appointed by the board.

The action comes in the wake of a funding controversy which involved the spending of approximately $1000 for legal paperwork, money which WLOZ is unable to pay without severe cutbacks in its normal operating budget or a reallocation from SGA.

The recommendations to the Media and Publications Board came from a committee appointed by the board to investigate the matter. The committee's recommendations included the removal of Hess, authorization from SGA to oversee WLOZ's expenditures, clarification of the adviser's role and establishment of a commission to define long-term goals for the station.

After hearing of Hess' pending resignation, however, the full board adopted only two of those recommendations: that dealing with the adviser and establishment of the commission.

The board also decided to accept applications for Hess' replacement from now through Jan. 31.

Since SGA has authority over WLOZ's funding, it will be up to the Student Legislature to decide how the money is to be paid. The Legislature took no action on the matter at its meeting last week but is expected to act tomorrow night.

Some legislators have indicated a desire to make Hess personally responsible for the bill, but SGA President Wayne Dunlap says that this would be difficult to enforce according to university business officials.

Other legislators have suggested the money be taken from a $4000 reserve account set aside last year for future expansion of the station.

Still others say the bill should be paid from WLOZ's current budget.

But SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan has said that if the money is taken from the station's budget, there would not be enough left to cover operating expenses for the rest of the semester. Reagan said there would be approximately $400 left in the account.

According to the accounts of station manager Hess and program director Wade Harris, Harris made a telephone agreement early last semester with FM Associates, a Massachusetts-based consulting firm, for paperwork related to WLOZ's compliance with federal communications regulations. Harris says he understood that Hess had given him instructions to finalize the agreement.

Hess, however, says that he first learned of the agreement when FM Associates sent the finished report and a $1000 invoice.

Hess will reportedly continue to work with the station as its news director.

Students interested in the station manager position should apply with Director of Student Activities Linda Moore in the Pub or WLOZ adviser Dr. Irvin Claytor in the Physics Department. Applications will be accepted through Jan. 31.

Counseling vacancy to be filled in April

by Phillip Siler
Staff Writer

"UNC-Wilmington will finally be getting a new psychologist this semester," according to William M. Malloy, Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs. The appointee, whose name was withheld, will reportedly be joining the university staff before April 1. "The new man will have an expertise in reading and study-skill counseling, as well as being a general counselor. He is a welcome member to our faculty," said Malloy.

A vacancy on the staff had occurred when psychologist Nancy Williams left to join the staff at Wilmington's Laney High School. The appointment comes after almost five months of screening applicants.

"When we advertised in September, there were very few applicants because it was too close to the beginning of the school term. We did not feel we were getting a satisfactory applicant pool." However, the school continued its search and in December they found a much wider range of applicants. From these applicants, the position was filled.

The new psychologist, who was contacted last week, will be joining Dr. Darwin Newton, director of the office of Counseling and Testing.

Increase of thefts noticed on campus

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

If you're like a growing number of students and faculty members lately, you may have been missing something of value. Recently, especially during the previous fall semester, there has been a rash of thefts on campus.

According to Greg Dalton, manager of Trask Coliseum, there have been incidents of "petty theft" increasing in that building. Dalton emphasized, however, that most of these were due to carelessness.

"When guys get together for a pick-up basketball game, they leave their shirts, wallets, etc., on the bleachers. That's an invitation to robbery...if people would lock up their valuables in a gym basket, there would be no problem.

Dalton added that any items that are discovered after classes or sporting events are turned into the lost and found department located in the Student Affairs Office.

Director of Campus Security C.N. Long expressed concern over the growing number of thefts. He also stated that negligence is a prime factor in university-related crime.

"If students would just be more careful about their belongings, so many thefts would never occur," he remarked. Long went on to say that keeping one's wallet or purse on one's person or within sight is an important step to foiling would-be pilferers.

Cash seems to be the most often stolen item, with keys and charge cards tied for second place. Theft of car parts has climbed in recent months.

Stated Long "It is mainly in the dorm parking lots that there is auto larceny. I'd say about 90 percent of crimes committed on campus occur in the dorm areas."

Items stolen from cars include tape decks, wheels and batteries.

The driving motivation behind these crimes is, of course, the need for money. Speculates Long, "The money could be used for any number of things—dope, school expenses, anything. But there are more honest ways to obtain cash."

Long urged anyone who sees suspicious activity around campus to immediately contact the security office. "We can't help the students unless they help themselves," he added.

Absence, non-participation of legislators show lack of commitment

Why do students run for student government office and then time after time refuse to attend its weekly meetings?

The few student legislators who care are justifiably ashamed of the legislature's performance (shall we say non-performance) during the last two months. True, that time includes the fall exam period and Christmas holidays, but it also includes three weeks in which the legislature should have met and, in effect, did not.

The last meeting scheduled in the fall semester was cancelled for lack of a quorum. A meeting was not even scheduled for the first week of this semester and no one has yet given a good reason why. And the meeting last week began with a quorum, but that was lost as soon as the legislature was ready to conduct business.

One would think that the legislators who fail to show are avoiding strenuous work. The truth of the matter, however, is quite the opposite. There are too many legislators who have yet to add more to the discussion than a faint "here" when the roll is called, who refuse committee assignments like the plague and who can't wait to vote on their favorite motion—adjournment.

Now we might understand the attitude of these legislators if they had been forced against their wills into their positions. But in most cases, nobody even asked; they are in office because they chose to run.

This attitude has led to other problems in addition to absenteeism. It has allowed a small minority to dominate legislative proceedings at every turn. Those who have emerged as leaders have been subject to criticism from their fellow legislators and observers as too aggressive and too outspoken, but such criticism is unjustified from ones who don't assert their own opinions and ideas.

The current SGA is a bad, tactless joke on the student body and the university; the former because we are wasting the only real opportunity we have for effective representation, the latter because these are the people who are handling more than $110,000 of university funds. (We suspect the university's administration should really be having nightmares over the money situation. We suspect, too, that it won't be long before it is changed.)

We suggest that every SGA legislator, and other officers as well, ask themselves what they want to accomplish, how they want it done and where is the best place to start. And even more importantly, we suggest these people should ask themselves why they are in SGA. If the answer is anything other than wanting to be actively involved in the university to look out for the interests of students, we also suggest they re-evaluate their responsibility, or quit fooling themselves and resign.

Perhaps some of the legislators see their organization as a microcosm of the entire student body which also reflects the general apathy at UNCW. That view doesn't hold up because they have already shown above-average motivation by taking office.

Absence from the meetings and non-participation in the debate doesn't show an above-average commitment, though. A couple of hours each week is certainly not too much to ask, but any legislator who thinks it is should do us all a favor and quit playing games.

WLOZ invoice should be paid from station's reserve account

The WLOZ funding controversy is a messy situation and a glaring example of mismanagement for which station manager Steve Hess rightfully took responsibility by resigning. But Hess' resignation does not bury the issue, because there is still the matter of approximately $1000 owed by the station to a consulting agency.

There will never be a full understanding of the situation as long as Hess and program director Wade Harris stand by their conflicting versions of a complicated story. Harris says he made a telephone contract with the agency with Hess' approval; Hess says he knew nothing about the agreement until the finished product arrived, complete with invoice.

Harris should not have made the agreement in the first place, but once he had done so he should have informed Hess immediately. Hess should have been on top of the situation himself and all of it would have been avoided.

The Media and Publications Board, charged with appointing or removing the station manager, probably was also at fault for not knowing of the severe management problems at WLOZ before this matter surfaced. But that board is hampered by a lack of definition of its authority. It is hopefully on the way to changing that situation, however.

The board is to be commended, on the other hand, for its prompt action on the matter. Only two days after the station's management first received the bill, the board met, heard the primary facts of the situation and appointed a special investigating committee to insure a well-considered decision. Within a week, that decision was made in the form of constructive, appropriate action.

The Student Legislature is left with the authority to deal with the matter of finances. Its decision has been delayed another week because they can't get enough members to attend their meetings, but they have four options to choose from:

□ They could hold Hess and Harris personally liable for the bill, although their power of enforcement is in doubt.

□ They could reallocate enough money to WLOZ from the general fund to cover the bill.

□ They could force payment from the station's existing account, which would not leave WLOZ with enough operating funds.

□ They could take the money from a reserve account of $4000 set aside for WLOZ's future expansion.

Of these options, the first is unreasonably harsh, the second is unreasonably lenient, and the third is out of the question.

The fourth option, then, seems the best answer. It will mean that there will be $1000 less that WLOZ needs for the future, but it will also mean that the station's staff realize their mistake by facing the consequences.

Coming out of this controversy, WLOZ needs to take a long, hard look at its future. Since its conversion to FM, and before there have been problems upon problems, and the answer from staff members has most often been, "It won't happen again, we're finally getting on our feet."

By now it is obvious that WLOZ is not able to stand on its own feet. Past staff members are part of that problem, but the big problem is that the resources and potential of a radio station are not fully understood by most people on this campus. There is a lack of direction and focus in the operation of WLOZ.

The Media and Publications Board's plan for a broad-ranging commission to answer these questions is a sound one. It will be a major effort, but with the support of administration, SGA, the student body, and WLOZ itself, it could be successful and certainly would be worthwhile.

Legislature fails to gather quorum, cannot conduct business

by Bobby Parker
Editor

For the second consecutive time, the Student Legislature failed last Thursday to gather enough members at its regular weekly meeting to conduct business.

The Legislature last met Nov. 30. A meeting was scheduled for Dec. 6 but was cancelled when a quorum, two-thirds of its members, was not attained.

Thursday's meeting was supposed to be the first of the semester since one was not scheduled Jan. 11.

Although a quorum was present to begin the meeting and hear reports, enough members had left by the time business was to be conducted to drop below the quorum.

SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca ruled that no action could be taken although the meeting remained in session while discussion of various issues continued.

The discussion involved the recent funding controversy of WLOZ radio. Legislators will eventually decide how a $1000 bill for paperwork conducted for the station is to be paid.

The issue, which resulted in the resignation of station manager Steve Hess, concerns an agreement made by WLOZ program director Wade Harris with a consulting firm. Hess says he did not authorize the agreement, but Harris says Hess gave his approval.

The legislators discussed four options for payment of the bill: taking it from WLOZ's existing account; taking it from a $4000 account reserved for the station's future expansion; re-appropriating enough money to WLOZ; or holding the station's management personally responsible for the bill.

SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan stated that the station's current budget could not handle the expense and still meet operating costs the rest of the semester. Reagan said WLOZ would be left with around $400 if the money was taken from their account.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap said that the station management could not be forced to assume personal liability. Dunlap explained that this opinion was derived from discussions with university officials.

A question was raised as to whether WLOZ could be forced to pay the bill in the absence of a written contract. But both Dunlap and Reagan said that the verbal contract would probably be binding.

Vice-president DeLuca stated that SGA should not be "stuck with paying bills" when it has no control over station management.

Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene, speaking for the Media and Publications Board, explained that the board's only power was to appoint and remove the editors and managers of campus media and publications. The board does not have any control over funding or of other staff members, Greene said.

Investigating Committee Chair Karin Whaley reported on her look into questions concerning the Fledgling, the student yearbook. Whaley was authorized to conduct an investigation at the last legislature meeting after questions arose about staff problems and 1978 yearbooks which have not yet been distributed.

Whaley said that problems with the yearbook are due to "trouble between the staff and the editor," Margie McLamb.

Whaley, who said she had interviewed McLamb and several other staff members, reported that there were problems related to distribution of last year's books, sales of this year's books, failure of McLamb to order photography supplies, and staff relationships.

McLamb, who resigned last week, said Sunday that the SGA investigation did not lead to her decision to leave. She said there was a problem of "prejudices" which arose from staff members who compared her to last year's editor, Eric McLamb, who is Margie McLamb's husband.

Whaley suggested that the SGA set up a committee to oversee the Fledgling and that the Legislature request the appointment of a new editor by the Media and Publications Board.

In other reports presented to the Legislature, Treasurer Reagan gave a budget report which stated that $111,593 has been collected by SGA this year, with $102,410 already allocated and $9182 unencumbered.

President Dunlap reported on resolutions that will be considered by the UNCW Association of Student Governments and announced plans for a conference sponsored by that group next week for student government leaders.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in room 218 of the Chemistry Building.

Interested persons are welcome to attend.

New electronic music studio added to Kenan

A new electronic music studio is under construction in the north end of Kenan Hall to accommodate the small number of music composition majors involved in Dr. Frank Wiley's electronic music course.

The old studio was too small and more room was needed to house the instruments, including electronic synthesizers and recording equipment, needed for the class. The new studio will be located where the old one was but will be much larger.

The area had contained an office, hallway and bathroom in addition to the old studio. All of those rooms have now been levelled and the walls have been soundproofed so that all of the floor space will be used for the new studio.

Legislative offices vacant

SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca has announced that there are six vacancies in the Student Legislature which may be filled by interested students.

DeLuca said that there are five representative-at-large positions open and also the sophomore class vice-presidency.

Any student wishing to fill any of these offices must file a petition with the SGA office within ten class days signed by 25 students.

More information can be obtained from the SGA office.

McGill Scholarships announced

The Ralph McGill Scholarship Fund offers scholarships for the 1979-80 school year of up to $1500 each to students with southern backgrounds who have completed at least two years of college. Jack Tarver, chairman of the scholarship fund, said today.

Tarver said May is the deadline for applications. He said a number of scholarships are awarded each year to students who have demonstrated a long-time interest in the news and editorial phase of newspapering.

Scholarships, he said, are limited to those young men and women whose roots lie in the South. Applicants must also convince the awards committee that they firmly intend to pursue a career in daily or weekly newspapering. Tarver said the awards committee wants to give scholarships to those who are likely to become leaders in the newspaper field.

Successful applicants will be required to maintain a "B" average in order to keep the scholarship.

A letter of not more than 500 words telling why the applicant wants a scholarship, together with a photograph of the applicant, must accompany each application. Applicants also must have a letter of recommendation from a college authority.

Application blanks may be obtained from: The Ralph McGill Scholarship Fund; Box 4689; Atlanta, Georgia 30302.

Research relationships of government, universities 'deteriorating'

by Jay Stevens

(CPS)—The once-cozy marriage between the government and universities engaged in federally-sponsored research is at an end, apparently soured by fiscal mismanagement and a recent federal vogue for "cost accounting."

The loudest warning about the possible consequences came at the annual meeting of the National Council of University Research Administrators last November. There, Massachusetts Institute of Technology President Dr. Jerome B. Wiesner mourned that the "floundering" relationship could leave the U.S. lagging behind Japan and West Germany in technological development.

Deteriorating government-academic relations, he said, has "dulled the sharp cutting edge of university research which helped bring the nation to world prominence in science and technology."

What Dr. Wiesner and his colleagues in the $4.4 billion field of federally-sponsored research object to are new regulations imposed by the Office of Management and Budget. The tough new rules prohibit federal expenditures for the "indirect costs" of research, like library purchases and research assistants. Under those rules, graduate students can no longer be reimbursed for time spent on federally-sponsored projects.

Stanford University, for one, predicts that curtailment of money for indirect costs will amount to a $4.5 million annual loss to the school. The university plans to make up the loss in tuition increases.

The new regulations also call for stricter accounting of research contracts. It's a condition, say the researchers, that's antithetical to the spirit of experimental research. According to Wiesner, the regulation "serves only to reinforce the current trend to evaluate and measure research in terms of pure cost accounting."

Yet the academicians are not blameless. Last winter, a U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare audit of 1977 research projects found $410.7 million (out of a total government research budget of $1.2 billion) inadequately accounted. Investigators unearthed widespread failure to document work performed, multiple payments for the same job, flagrant double dipping, use of federal money to pay for non-federal work, changes of terms in federal contracts, and failure to document purchases of equipment and supplies.

Yeshiva University, for example, over-charged HEW an estimated $670,000 in fringe benefits. The University of Minnesota was found to have no documentation for about 69 percent of the salaries and wages claimed for the period July 1, 1972, to June 30, 1974. Similar bookkeeping errors were discovered at the universities of Oklahoma, Mississippi, Iowa, and through much of the University of California system. In fact, almost all of the 100 schools engaged in federal research were guilty of some fiscal mismanagement. The government has agreed to let the schools re-pay the misused funds at the rate of 10 cents on the dollar.

Wiesner, for one, insists that the mismanagement is not grave enough to warrant the new regulations and some of the other proposed changes.

But the new rules were also motivated by a federal concern with moonlighting: the professorial practice of earning outside income through consulting work. An estimated two-thirds of all professors do some outside consulting work. The result, many fear, is that educators are nearly becoming lobbyists. Can a professor who is a paid consultant of the food industry, for instance, maintain the academic objectivity needed for research into food additives?

The federal government, in turn, wonders if it should be paying for that research. In 1976, it dunned Stanford for $153,000 in rebates because seven professors hired as government researchers were spending too much time consulting for other clients. Now a House subcommittee has scheduled hearings on consulting abuses, and the California General Assembly is contemplating legislation that would require professors to disclose all consulting ties. Reading the handwriting on the wall, the University of Pennsylvania recently adopted a moonlighting policy that requires faculty members to reimburse the school if computers or other school property is used in consulting work.

The government is also looking into patents. Until now, schools have owned the products of government-sponsored research for three years, when patent rights reverted to the government. During that time schools usually licensed their patents to private industry.

With a nod to the historic government-academic relationship, the General Services Administration has just proposed lengthening universities' patent ownership from three to five years.

But there, too, the research schools are facing an obstacle. Consumer Advocate Ralph Nader has protested the extension, claiming universities "reap hundreds of millions of dollars of profits from work supported by the federal government."

Human Relations Month planned

by Susan Parnell
Staff Writer

The Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce and the Wilmington-New Hanover Human Relations Commission are co-sponsoring Human Relations Month during February. The co-charmen for this year are Bertha Todd and Butch Pegram. The month-long celebration includes an interfaith service, community contests and an Awards Ceremony. The purpose of the special month will be to build better relations between all people. The theme for this year's celebration is "Human Rights—Our Continuing Quest."

College students are urged to participate in the photography, art and poster contests featured during the month. The entries will be judged in the expression of this year's theme and all entries remain the property of the student. The entries have to be turned in at the Community Arts Center on or before 3 p.m., Jan. 27.

Awards for all the contests will be presented to the winners at a special awards ceremony at Kenan Auditorium on Feb. 27.

In connection with this Human Relations Month, the UNCW English Club is sponsoring an outstanding Campus Citizen's Contest. Details of that contest will be released later.

Highlighting this month, the Y.W.C.A. is sponsoring the program "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" This event has been arranged so that people of different backgrounds can meet one another to strengthen the bonds of friendship in the Wilmington area. Anyone desiring to be a guest or be a host for a lunch or dinner may call the Y.M.C.A. at 799-6820 before Feb. 1.

Other special activities which will be held throughout the month include a Human Rights Forum with city and state officials speaking on the topics on the needs of the elderly, handicapped, blacks and women. The speakers will focus on topics about housing, employment and health. There will also be films available for anyone to borrow concerning the theme of "prejudice."

For any club functions related to the month the Human Relations Department can provide guest speakers. These speakers will be local civic and religious leaders, as well as members of UNCW's faculty who have agreed to be guest speakers.

Any questions concerning Human Relations Month should be directed to call Butch Pegram, 763-7203, or Brett Blizzard, 763-8211.

concerned that the Legislature was presented with the "wrong idea" because the information had been received from only one or two staff members.

Whaley said she had interviewed McLamb and at least six other staff members during the investigation.

Whaley recommended that the legislature request the Publications Board seek McLamb's resignation and that SGA set up a committee to oversee the Fledgling.

The major concerns of staff members reported by Whaley included charges that McLamb failed to keep regular office hours, refused to order sufficient photography supplies, and had not conducted sales drives.

Whaley said she had been given various accounts of McLamb's accessibility during the time that yearbook portraits were made on campus earlier this year.

McLamb told Whaley she had been in contact with the photographer every day he was here. But Whaley said that other sources reported McLamb was in contact with the photographer only two or three times during his visit.

"I got the definite feeling that there was a mess and that I just scratched the surface," Whaley said in summary.

McLamb said that she would recommend Robbie Register as the new editor.

Both McLamb and Whaley said that production deadlines had been met on schedule so far.

State internships available for summer

Students who are planning to look for summer jobs may be eligible for one of about 125 state government internships being made available this summer.

"Thousands of students have gained better insight into the workings of government through the internship program over the years," said Frank Eagles of Wilson, chairperson of the North Carolina Internship Council which was created by the General Assembly in 1977. The council approves projects and also screens and selects students for the Summer Internship Program sponsored by the Department of Administration's Youth Involvement Office.

About 125 students will be placed in 13 different state agencies for ten weeks, from June 4 to Aug. 10. To be eligible, a student must be either a North Carolina resident who has completed two years of study in a college or university or one year of study in a technical institute or community college, or an out-of-state student having completed the same studies in a North Carolina educational institution.

In addition to a regular 40-hour work week, interns will participate in seminars to learn more about state government and how it works.

Student killed in auto crash

Kenneth Jerome Atchley, a 22-year-old sophomore from Fayetteville, was killed in an early morning automobile accident Wednesday, Jan. 17. Police reports indicate that Atchley was traveling on North Kerr Avenue at a high rate of speed when his car struck a bridge abutment and plunged into Smith's Creek. He was pronounced dead on arrival at New Hanover Memorial Hospital.

Atchley was a U.S. Coast Guard veteran and was employed in the work-study program with the Veteran's Affairs Office. He was a member of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity. Atchley was a recreation major.

The funeral was held Friday, Jan. 19, at 3 p.m. in the First Christian Church in Fayetteville. Burial followed in Cumberland Memorial Gardens.

Swim team wins big, will face ECU

The high-flying UNC-Wilmington swim team faces its toughest competition of the season Saturday when the Seahawks travel to Greenville for a dual meet with East Carolina.

Both the UNCW men's and women's squads will be in action beginning at 1 p.m.

East Carolina has one of the top teams in the state every year, Seahawk coach Dave Allen says. "We like to believe that our program will soon be competitive with them, but right now our people might be just a little too inexperienced."

"We're looking forward to the meet a great deal, though. When you swim faster competition, you'll usually swim faster, too, so I'm excited about some of the times we may turn in."

UNCW is coming off a highly successful outing last Saturday when the Seahawk men defeated both Old Dominion (63-50) and College of Charleston (74-39), while the Lady 'Hawks were downing the Charleston Women, 61-58.

A number of school records were again broken as the team continues its second year of existence. UNCW is now 4-1 in men's competition and 2-1 in women's action.

Cooper leads Seahawks over Little Rock

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

The UNCW Seahawks won their eleventh game of the season last Thursday night by defeating the University of Arkansas at Little Rock 78-71. It was the second win in a row for the 'Hawks who had beaten Pembroke earlier in the week.

Against UALR, the Seahawks started off strong. Following an opening basket by the Trojans, UNCW scored three straight to take a lead they would never relinquish. The 'Hawks enjoyed leads of eleven points a couple of times in the first period, and went into halftime ahead 35 to 25. Dave Wolff led all scorers in the first half with 17 points. He was also the leading rebounder in that initial period, pulling down six. Marty Laguerre led the Trojans with ten points, many coming from outside jump shots.

In the second half, UALR began to peek away at the lead and cut it to three points, at 48-45, mid-way through the half. However, the 'Hawks, led by a second-half scoring surge from forward Garry Cooper who had 24 points, built the lead back up and appeared to be on the verge of breaking the game open. They just could not shake the stubborn Trojans who scored just enough to stay within striking distance. Finally, the Seahawks, who shot 47 percent for the game, had win number eleven. Garry Cooper led the game in scoring with 30 points, which is the most scored by a Seahawk player this season. (The record for points in one game is held by Denny Fields.) Dave Wolff had 26 which tied the previous season's high which he set against South Florida. Not to be left out either, is Ralph Peterson who dished out six assists. Marty Laguerre had 21 points for Little Rock and Mark Bowman had 16.

UNCW gets revenge against Georgia

The UNCW Seahawks upped their record to 12-3 with a 74-69 victory over Georgia Southern College Sunday afternoon. The win was the third straight for the Seahawks and avenged an earlier loss to the Eagles on January 13. Guard Barry Taylor led the Seahawks in scoring with an 18 point performance. Guard Ralph Peterson also chipped in fifteen points, which was the 6-2 senior's career high.

UNCW's two other seniors represented themselves well, too. Delaney Jones had a team high nine rebounds and 6-5 Dave Wolff had 17 points and a team high four steals.

The game itself was pretty much a picture of how the first game with Georgia Southern would have gone had UNCW been able to hit from the free throw line. This time the 'Hawks hit from the line and from the outside. Coach Gibson also went with his starters a little more than before.

The Seahawks played excellent, hustling defense for most of the game.

The 'Hawks play their second road game in a row Thursday, January 25 against big rival East Carolina University. Game time is set for 7:30 p.m. The Seahawks return home on Saturday, January 27 to play Towson (MD.) State.

Black History activities planned

February is right around the corner, and for UNCW students February means Homecoming. Indeed, Homecoming is a festive event, but February is also Black History Month.

The Black Student Union on campus will be conducting various activities to commemorate the contributions that blacks have made to American society, speakers, exhibits and plays are expected to be on the agenda for Black History Month. The B.S.U. will also have the participation of the black community in Wilmington.

Though minute in population, the B.S.U. expects this particular Black History Month project rank as one of its very best.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

The UNCW men's basketball team is roughly halfway through the regular season and have been piling up some pretty impressive statistics.

As of the game at Georgia Southern this past Sunday, senior forward Dave Wolff continued to lead the team in scoring and rebounding. Wolff pumps in points to the tune of 15.5 per game and is averaging around 7.3 rebounds a game. Second by a slim margin in both categories is junior forward Garry Cooper, who is averaging 14.9 points per game and 7.1 rebounds. Cooper has also been piling up records like Paul Bunyan piles logs. Earlier this year Cooper set a UNCW record by grabbing 17 rebounds in a single game. He also holds the record for most blocked shots in a game, 6 against the Citadel last year. Now Cooper is zeroing in on the record for most blocked shots in a season, which is 52. He has 28 right now. Who holds the record? Garry Cooper from last year!

Barry Taylor, the 6-2 junior point guard who transferred here from Brevard (Fla.) Junior College is the UNCW assist leader with 60 for the year and is also the number three scorer averaging 10.6 a game. Ralph Peterson is second in assists with 44.

As a team, the Seahawks are averaging 72.8 points per game in the 1978-79 season. Their highest scoring game was against Baltimore University when the 'Hawks scored 96. Their lowest was against Florida and N.C. State with 51 points.

So, as this season progresses, UNCW has a shot at their first twenty win season since becoming a Division I school a few seasons ago.

Upcoming UNCW opponents that will be of special interest include East Carolina on Thursday, January 25 and UNCC on Thursday, February 8. Both of those teams are getting to be hot rivals. The Lady Seahawks take on UNC-Chapel Hill on Saturday, January 27 and come back here to play UNC-Asheville on Tuesday, January 30.

Lady hawks lose to Atlantic Christian by Tammy Lancaster

Seahawk Contributor

The UNCW Lady Seahawks, coming off a big 68-57 win over Shaw University last Thursday, met Atlantic Christian College on their home court Monday night and Atlantic Christian came away a winner 84-68. Cathy Wall led the Lady Bulldogs with 28 points and Lorraine Riley had 21 points.

The UNCW Lady 'Hawks put three players in double figures. Jenny Allen led with 17 points, Kathy Shands popped in 16 and April Lewis had 10. The Lady 'Hawks leading rebounder was Jenny Allen who grabbed 11.

Atlantic Christian got off to an early lead, led by the hot shooting of Wall. This followed a 30 minute delay of game caused by the lateness of one official. Both sides played excellent defense but the Lady Bulldogs seemed to be able to hit the crucial basket when the Lady Seahawks could not. Brenda Moore and Kathy Shands played an excellent game for UNCW and Kathy Wall led ACC.

UNCW takes on North Carolina A and T at Greensboro Friday and takes on the UNC-Chapel Hill Saturday.

Intramurals offer numerous sports

Charles Upchurch
Seahawk Contributor

If you are ever sitting around the dorm room, or the apartment, with nothing to do but feel bored with UNCW, consider this: Wouldn't you rather be shooting the winning layup for your basketball team, or playing in the finals of a volleyball, badminton, or soccer tournament? What about learning to play water polo, or learning to sail?

Believe it or not, these are just a few of the sports offered by UNCW intramural athletics. There are a total of 16 sports activities available for the students, faculty, and staff to participate in.

Almost every student has, or has had, an interest in some sport or activity. After checking with the intramural office, one usually finds that his favorite sport is offered, and that he is needed, whether it be on a team or in a tournament sport (such as racquetball).

For the past ten years David "Pop" Warner, assistant professor of physical education, has been director of intramural athletics. He has seen the intermural program progress from a six-team basketball league in 1969 to the full 16-sport program we now enjoy.

The original sport, men's basketball, has remained the largest and most popular intramural sport. There are four separate leagues this year in which over 400 young men are playing; the most ever.

The reason for the tremendous success of UNCW intramurals has to be the responsiveness it shows towards the students. Pop Warner explains, "any time the interest is there and there is an adequate number of interested people, we'll add the sport they want." In the past student enthusiasm had been high, and new additions to the intramural program were commonplace. That, along with the advice and organizational talents of Pop Warner, is the reason we have the widely diversified program that we do.

UNCW offers as many if not more intramural sports than any university in this state.

Warner stated that there have been some unique activities offered in the past, that have since died out, such as surfing and frisbee-throwing. Student enthusiasm made these activities possible.

But recently Warner has noted a degree of student apathy towards intramural athletics. "Students don't realize how little is required of them to enjoy the full benefits of these programs," says Pop. "In all the sports offered, every piece of equipment required is furnished...except sneakers."

At the present time, only men's basketball and co-ed indoor soccer are going on. However, we will soon be seeing badminton, wrestling, swimming, racquetball, sailing, softball, and probably more, but only if the interest and participation of the students is there.

What better way can one spend part of his leisure time while at UNCW? Being part of a team and being physically competitive can only be good for body and soul. It's also a fun way to lose that beer gut!

See Pop Warner in his office in Hanover Hall, and consult the bulletin boards for any information on the programs soon to get underway. Also, ask the people who are already involved. Intramurals here have been getting better every year, and for ten years Pop Warner and a lot of active students have made it something UNCW can be proud of.

Psychic Investigators Ed and Lorraine Warren.

Lecture Series to present investigators for 'Ghosts, Witches and Demons'

The UNCW Lecture Series will present a program entitled "Ghosts, Witches and Demons" featuring Ed and Lorraine Warren. The Warrens are well-known psychic investigators who will present their lecture Monday, Jan. 29, at 8 p.m. in the new classroom building auditorium.

The Warrens, who have investigated over 3000 cases of reported haunting phenomena, will recount their investigation of one of the most intense and frightening cases of true demonic hauntings to take place in the United States this century. A recent number one best seller entitled "The Amityville Horror" recounts 28 days of terror experienced by the Lutz family when they moved into a luxurious home in Amityville, Long Island, only to find it infested with some malevolent supernatural force that was bent on driving them out.

Once called in to investigate the disturbances, Ed and Lorraine Warren soon found themselves challenging one of the most powerful evil forces they had ever encountered in 32 years of investigating haunting phenomena.

The Warrens will also discuss their recent work with those involved with "The Ghost of Flight 401" as well as two girls who have come under demonic attack in England (a case called the British "Exorcists"). Following this, a series of "psychic photographs" will be shown in which ghosts and other images have mysteriously shown up on film. A question and answer period will conclude the program.

This program is open to all students free of charge. There will be a charge of $1.00 for non-students.

ENTERTAINMENT

Film: 'Magic' is fun, not very serious

If you are a regular viewer of TV's "Soap," you are familiar with the idea of a ventriloquist's dummy serving as his alter ego. In that story, Chuck and Bob handle the humor of the situation with marvelous results. "Magic," a film which explores the same idea, takes a different side of the situation—the terror.

This, however, is an indication of what may be the film's greatest problem. Any script which starts out with a time-worn theme that has been used from every angle is headed for problems already.

That is why the success of "Magic," whatever it is, will be limited success. It is not a serious film. It is pure entertainment that doesn't ask you to think, except perhaps about the very effective suspense technique.

The story follows a struggling magician, Corky, played powerfully by Anthony Hopkins, who turns his career around by combining card tricks with an abrasive-mouthed dummy. This is the first of many weaknesses in William Goldstein's screenplay. It is asking a bit much for us to believe Corky's phenomenal success, which we are asked to take at face value.

Neither can Corky cope with his own success, and he seeks retreat into his past which leads him to a reunion with the woman he once loved from afar (Ann-Margaret) as a shy young man.

Corky becomes increasingly unable to deal with his feelings and finds a release by transferring the overflow to the dummy (named Fats), creating his second self.

The best scenes are between Corky and Fats as the mental rage builds. Hopkins, an actor of proven ability, manages to squeeze the best out of the role from scenes of quiet introversion to emotional explosion.

The brutality of one particular scene in which Corky's agent (Burgess Meredith) is battered by his client using the dummy as a weapon may bother some viewers. It could have been cleaner had the weapon been a knife or gun, but we would have lost the point that it was not Corky but his alter ego (represented by Fats) that wanted the agent dead.

The film's most notable quality is director Richard Attenborough's ability to sustain suspense. When the agent challenges Corky to refrain from speaking through Fats for five minutes, Attenborough resists the temptation of time-conscious directors to speed up the wait. When the agent says it has been 30 seconds for Corky, it has also been 30 seconds for the audience (if not exactly, very near so).

Meredith's character represents another flaw in the script: should we believe that he is really concerned about Corky enough to risk his life, or would he give up the kid as another star gone psycho. Meredith is one of the finest supporting actors around today, but this restricted role offers him no challenge.

Ann-Margaret is terribly miscast. Her classic beauty doesn't adapt to a woman who is living through a sour marriage and is trapped in a dull existence.

"Magic" is fun, but it doesn't last. (Now playing at the New Center Cinema).

'A Doll's House' presented by English Club

"A Doll's House" will be the second movie of the seven-part Film-From-Literature Series. Produced in 1974, the 108-minute film stars Jane Fonda and Trevor Howard.

Based on Henrik Ibsen's novel of the same title, "A Doll's House" examines a wife's conventional role in the restrictive 19th century, thereby making it particularly appealing to women supporting the equal rights movement.

Beginning at 7:30 p.m., Monday, Jan. 29, "A Doll's House" can be seen in the Randall Library Auditorium. Admission is free.

'Between the Lines' screened by Fine Arts Committee

"'Between the Lines' is a 1970's American graffiti with the stakes a little higher and the radio turned down." So wrote Janet Maslin in Newsweek magazine concerning the next movie offerings of the UNCW Fine Arts Committee.

"'Between the Lines', a film by Joan Micklin Silver which was produced in 1977, is the Fine Arts movie to be shown in Kenan Auditorium, Tuesday, Jan. 30, at 8 p.m.

Set in present-day Boston, "'Between the Lines' is about a group of friends who work together at the Back Bay Mainline, a small weekly newspaper.

The Mainline has passed from its beginning as a radical underground weekly and is now a solidly established and profitable paper with a growing circulation. It is about to be swallowed up by a communications conglomerate.

For the moment, however, the Mainline remains a protective womb, awash with pot, rock music and camaraderie. Our characters venture out to do their work, then scurry back to the front office where hanging out can be an all-day occupation.

Gary Arnold in The Washington Post wrote that "'Between the Lines' is 'the most likeable and encouraging American movie to be released so far this year.'" Rated R, "'Between the Lines' is the fourth movie this semester offered by the Fine Arts Committee.

The admission to this movie, except for those possessing season passes, will be 50 cents for UNCW students with I.D. cards and $1 for all non-students.

Blues Brothers debut with live record

It is late one Saturday night in 1977. You are stuck without anything to do. You look at the clock—it's 11:25—it hits you. It's time for Saturday Night Live. There is still hope.

About midway through the show a new skit comes on stage. Out comes two men in midnight shades, black suits with a narrow tie and topped off with a pork pie hat. One of the men is carrying a briefcase which he begins to open. Out of the briefcase comes a harmonica which he begins to play accompanying his partner who begins to sing. Blues, the R&B, is back, brought to life again by the Blues Brothers.

Soon the Blues Brothers were opening shows for the famous Steve Martin. The Brothers were a great success and are still getting better.

Rather than give you the brief description of the cuts on the

RECORDS

LP, I have decided since much is not known about the soon-to-be-legendary Blues Brothers, I would give you a brief profile instead.

Growing up in an orphanage with no one, the boys turned to music. Influenced by the janitor of the Rock Island City Orphanage, Curtis, the boys learned the blues. At the age of eight, Joliet Jake and Elwood began playing one night stands along the Steel Belt.

The Brothers worked hard in night clubs and bars when Jake was out of jail. When they weren't touring Elwood works in the Taser Factory.

The Blues Brothers' debut album, Briefcase Full of Blues, was recorded live at the Universal Amphitheater in L.A.

Since making their television debut on Saturday Night Live, two members of the cast work closely with the brothers. Dan Aykroyd and John Belushi seem to have a very special interest in the Blues Brothers.

Most of the cuts of the LP are remakes of oldies but goodies. Included are "Hey Bartender," "Messin with the Kid," "Rubber Biscuit," and their single released, "Soul Man," first recorded by Sam and Dave. Jake and Elwood are having great success with this remake.

Other cuts on the LP reflect the R&B of years ago. Included are "Almost," "Shot Gun Blues," "Groove Me," "I Don't Know," "B' Movie Box Car Blues," and "Flip, Flop and Fly."

Members of the nine piece band include: Joliet Jake Blues (lead vocals), Elwood Blues (harmonica), special 20 harp), Paul "The Shiv" Shaffer (organ, piano), Steve "The Colonel" Cropper (guitar), Matt "Guitar" Murphy (guitar), Donald "Duck" Dunn (bass guitar), Steve Jordan (drums), Lou "Blue Lou" Marini (tenor sax), Alan "Mr. Fabulous" Rubin (trumpet), Tom "Triple Scale" Scott (tenor sax), and Tom "Bones" Malone (tenor and baritone sax, trombone and trumpet).

Although I was impressed by the album, it is not musically well done. But as a comedy release it's one of the best. (It's even better if you have seen the Blues Brothers perform.)

Chemistry seminar scheduled Friday

Dr. Terry Bidleman will present the third talk in the UNCW Chemistry Department's Spring Semester Seminar Series Friday at 2:30 p.m. in room 114 of the Chemistry Building.

Dr. Bidleman obtained his doctorate in analytical chemistry from the University of Minnesota in 1970, working under Dr. E. B. Sandell.

He has done postdoctoral work at Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia, and the University of Rhode Island where he participated in the International Decade of Ocean Research Program. Since 1975 he has been teaching and directing research on pesticides in the environment at the University of South Carolina at Columbia.

Bidleman's lecture will deal with the long-range transport of pesticides in the physical environment in particular with the movement over and through the oceans and estuaries.

Students and others interested in the graduate program at USC or in Bidleman's research on pesticides can arrange to meet with him Friday by contacting Dr. Louis Adcock of the Chemistry Department. The American Chemical Society Student Affiliate Chapter will sponsor an informal "Meet the Speaker" gathering at 3:30 in C-102. Everyone is invited.

POSTAL SERVICE DELAYS MINIMUM SIZE RULE

The US Postal Service has delayed implementation of the minimum-size mail standards until April.

New radio station on air

A new FM stereo station, WWQQ, will appear on the airwaves of Wilmington Thursday. WWQQ will occupy the frequency now occupied by WEMA-101 FM.

The new station is owned by Village Radio of Wilmington, a Chapel Hill-based company which recently bought WMFD-AM and WEMA-FM from Dunlea Broadcasting Industries, Inc. The new owners of "Wilmington Double Q" describe the format as mainstream american music.

WWQQ will broadcast from 5:45 a.m. until midnight seven days a week. Tom Jackson, Village Radio Program Director, will be assisted by Hank Duncan, Program Director for FM. The double Q FM signal will be stereo.

Two promotions to launch the new station include giving away two tickets to the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament and another contest featuring 101 albums for the winner.

NCSL will hold council meeting in Durham

The North Carolina Student Legislature will make North Carolina history in February of 1979 by holding its first interim council meeting at a predominantly black institution. North Carolina Central University will host the delegations on their campus on Feb. 25 in Durham. The NCSL is demonstrating that it serves to meet the needs of all its members and that it is concerned with the promotion of better relations with all its member schools, according to UNCW delegation members. The delegation of NCCU won out over Chapel Hill in its bid to host the meeting which will be the last interim council meeting before the annual session which will be held from March 28 through April 1 in Raleigh.

At the January meeting in Charlotte, NCSL debated the merits of two resolutions presented concerning the tax status for absent N.C. servicemen and with the difficult problem of competency testing in the state's public schools. Both issues were hotly debated.

The annual session in Raleigh promises to be exciting for NCSL delegates and very controversial as many important issues will be considered. Members will be invited to a reception with the N.C. legislators.

NCSL meetings are held every Thursday in the library study room number three at 4:30. Any interested persons are invited to attend and contribute their ideas.

Trustees teaching award nominations now accepted

In the autumn of 1977, the UNCW Board of Trustees established the Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award. The award is designed to underline the institution's commitment to teaching excellence. Recipients of the award should manifest excellence as a way of life and should stand out among the faculty as persons who have made and continue to make a significant contribution to the university through their dedication and service to students.

Any person who is currently a member of the UNCW teaching faculty and who teaches at least a half-time load may be nominated for the award.

Any faculty member, currently enrolled student or member of the alumni may submit nominations.

Students are particularly encouraged to take an active role in submitting nominations. In order to do so, a student should write a letter of nomination, indicating as thoroughly as possible how the nominee satisfies the following criteria:

Exhibits genuine interest in each student's intellectual and creative development.

Exhibits knowledge of and enthusiasm for the subject taught.

Maintains high academic standards.

Fosters the intellectual development and competence of students.

Exhibits personally and fosters in students both respect for other viewpoints and an openness to new ideas.

Letters of nomination must be signed by the student and submitted to the Office of the Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs, Room A-211, no later than 5 p.m., Friday, March 2.

Chancellor William H. Wagner will designate a special ad hoc committee to assist him in selecting a recipient for the award.

Story contest submissions recruited

The Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest, held the spring semester of each school term, will be sponsored from Jan. 24 to March 1. All original creative submissions are eligible for cash prizes: $100, first place; $50, second place; $30, third place; and, if funds permit, two honorable mentions of $10.

To be awarded March 15 in the Kenan Hall SRO Theatre, prizes are made possible by the English Club's Jessie Rehder Memorial Fund. Established in the spring of 1973, the fund serves two purposes: as a memorial to Miss Rehder and to encourage creativity.

As Rehder spent much of her life encouraging students to write, she would have approved such use of a fund established in her name. For 20 years Rehder was director of the creative writing program at UNC-Chapel Hill and was instrumental in its development, expanding the program from one course to six. An associate professor, Rehder was the first woman to receive tenure in the English department and was one of the department's most popular and influential teachers.

In addition to teaching, Rehder edited "The Tatler," a literary magazine, published a book of poems entitled "East Wind's Back," and worked in New York City as an editor and free-lance writer.

"Remembrance Way," Rehder's best-known work, is a moving, poignant novel of loss, despair and ultimately of self-knowledge and acceptance. In "Remembrance Way," Rehder reveals this acceptance: "You get buried so many times . . . watching the stars beginning to ride their courses over the cold sky. You get killed and buried, but that is not the end. You get up out of the seas and begin the voyage again. You come alive, and you are with the others on the ship . . ."

Although never a faculty member at UNCW, Rehder exerted her influence not only on this campus but throughout the entire UNC system. Upon her death in 1967, Dr. C. Hugh Holman, author of "A Handbook to Literature," wrote:

"Jessie Rehder's life revolved around writers and writing. She felt deeply about books and people . . . Her's was the ultimate unselfishness, that of putting aside again and again her own work while she nurtured the work of her students. She never did this in a sense of self-pity or self-sacrifice, but with the joy and delight which she took in seeing new talent come into an awareness of itself."

Acting as an incentive to encourage student writing, the Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest is a continuation of Rehder's lifelong efforts. Short stories written by UNCW students should be left with the English Department secretary located downstairs in the new classroom building. Stories submitted must be unsigned as to insure impartiality by a panel of judges. To identify authorship, pre-printed forms to cross-reference writers with stories will be available. Submissions will be accepted until 5 p.m., March 1.

Afro-American study group plans statewide meeting

The second annual meeting of the North Carolina Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History will be held Feb. 16 and 17, in the Fine Arts Building at Saint Augustine's College in Raleigh. The two-day meeting will feature presentations and discussions by outstanding scholars, lay persons and college students. Discussions will cover such aspects of the black experience as education, politics, religion, and the arts.

Featured in the Friday evening session which begins at 8 p.m. are Dr. Kenny Williams and Dr. Raymond Gavins, professors of English and history, Duke University. Saturday morning participants will be Dr. Blyden Jackson, professor of English, UNC-Chapel Hill, and Dr. Julius Nimmons, professor of history, Saint Augustine's College.

According to Dr. Earlie Thorpe, professor of history, N.C. Central University, and president of the association, the general public is urged to attend. Departmental chairmen in black studies areas are asked to urge their students to attend. Anyone wishing to join the association should contact Frank Emory, 223 McKimmon Center, N.C. State University, Raleigh, NC 27650.

The Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History was founded by Dr. Carter G. Woodson, who is generally known as the father of Negro history. The one criterion for membership is an interest in the study, promotion, and dissemination of materials relating to Afro-Americans.

Newton, whose specialty is personal counseling, hopes that students will come by and use the services of the new office once it's finished.

"They don't have to have anything wrong with them to come down to see us. We would like students to visit us and just talk and find out what the Counseling and Testing Center is all about."

Newton's office is presently located on the second floor of the library and his office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Major renovations give new look to Pub while new union plans pushed on

by Ray Warren
Staff Writer

Hardly noticed in the general excitement over the proposed new student union, UNCW's present union is undergoing a face lift which is just the prelude to a major renovation. This "renaissance" of the Hinton James Student Services Building (generally called the "Pub") is designed to facilitate a more efficient use of that structure until a new union is completed.

The idea of rearranging the use of space in the Pub is hardly new. Student Activities Director Linda Moore has been pushing for such a move for a number of years. The ensuing relocation of several administrative offices there during renovation of Alderman Building, however, delayed all work until late last semester. Spiraling costs have since created problems for the union's meager budget, necessitating revisions in the original plan.

Most of the work completed thus far has been cosmetic in nature. The wooden trim on the front door and stairway rails has been sanded and refinished and similar work is planned on the front of the Goodwood Tavern. The bright green paint which used to trim the interior walls is giving way to a more subdued yellow and white scheme intended to harmonize with the facility's Georgian architecture.

Some space allocation changes have also been accomplished by the "walling off" of open space to create two small meeting rooms and an office for the student activities secretary.

The new meeting rooms are part of a larger scheme to increase student use of the Pub. According to Moore, students do not presently come to the union except to "shoot pool or see a student government officer." Proposed changes in the building's floor plan are designed to change that situation by providing a wider range of activities.

Central to the new plan for the old student union is the removal of the pool and ping-pong tables from the present game room. To accomplish this, the Seahawk and Fledgling offices and the office of Counseling and Testing will move downstairs to the space formerly occupied by the old bookstore. The old newspaper office will then become the new game room.

The removal of the games to the upstairs portion of the Pub will leave a larger room suitable for several uses. This room will be divided into four sections most of the time but may also be utilized as a whole for larger events. To accomplish this flexibility, partitions and furniture groupings, rather than permanent walls, will be used as dividers.

The quadrant of this room nearest the present Goodwood Tavern will have furnishings similar to the Tavern and can be used as an extension of that facility by opening connecting doors, if necessary. A television will be placed there for student viewing.

In the corner of the room nearest the old bookstore, furniture will be grouped to give a student lounge effect. Moore believes this will help meet the need of students for a "comfortable place or lounge area where they can meet friends."

The remaining half of the old game room will be separated by a movable "floor to ceiling" divider. This space, in turn, will be further divided into two sections by a free-standing partition. On one side of the partition, facilities for larger gatherings, such as student legislature meetings, will be available. On the other side, lounge furniture will be grouped to accommodate more informal club or organization meetings.

By providing a central building to hold meetings and by encouraging a "lounge type" atmosphere for student gatherings, Moore hopes to get the maximum usage from the present union facilities. "We want," she remarked, "to give this building more of the atmosphere of a student union."

Another way that the Student Activities Office hopes to use the present union is as a center for information. When the present renovation is completed, an information desk will be built in the lobby of the building. Staffed by student workers, this desk will act as a communicator of campus activities and a referral center for campus services.

Moore sees no conflict between the present renovation work, including the purchase (See "Pub", page 4)

Lecture well-attended

Ed and Lorraine Warren, professional investigators of "ghosts, witches and demons," presented a lecture and slide program to a packed house in the auditorium of the new classroom building Monday night. More than 200 attended the event sponsored by the Program Board's Lecture Committee.

Internships available

The Career Planning and Placement Office has received information on the North Carolina summer internships available. The deadline for application is Feb. 15.

Several invitations for federal internships have also arrived. Information on the internship categories is available in the Career Planning and Placement Office or the appropriate academic department office.

Students interested in internship possibilities should contact the Career Planning and Placement Office, 207 Alderman Administration Building.

Revision of copyright laws brings unanswered questions

by Dotty Shaffner
Seahawk Contributor

The Copyright Revision Act of 1976, which became effective Jan. 1, 1978, has created a musical nightmare for most colleges and universities which must conform to many new regulations.

Dr. James K. McGowan, federal compliance officer for UNCW, has become the campus expert on the new law and sees a "vast array of unanswered questions and potential hazards in the financial implications of the revision."

The new copyright law substantially complicates the use and performance of musical compositions on all campuses. The law, as revised, deletes the important phrase "not for profit" and instead lists specific areas of exemption. Educational and other institutions who were classified non-profit organizations are now faced with many potential situations of liability.

To clarify and standardize what fees would be paid to whom, representatives from the National Association of College and University Business Officers and the American Council on Education met with representatives from the three major music organizations who represent almost all copyright owners.

Together, they hammered out a proposed set of contracts which were then forwarded to all schools. The three companies each sent a separate contract which contained different fee schedules for the use of their music during a one-year period. Schools were expected to sign the contract (valid for two years) and pay the fees. Many schools did just that.

The administration of the UNC system did not sign and questioned some aspects of the "blanket" contracts.

"It could allow (the copyright) companies access to some of our financial statements and/or records," Dr. McGowan stated. "This would not be in the best interests of our students or our school."

To what extent the fees will affect UNCW is still unclear; perhaps it will be a minimum of $300 a year. This seems a small amount when viewed on a one-school basis, but the contracts, in fact, cover all schools, and can provide collections of fees totaling as much as $1 million.

Areas which may not be exempt and therefore subject to the new provisions of fee payment, might include pep band music played at athletic events, visiting performing artists who are paid over $1000, all public musical performances when an admission fee is charged (unless all profits are used for educational purposes), and even the juke box.

At the present time, university officials are negotiating with the copyright companies on behalf of the university system and hope to reach an equitable agreement. It is hoped by many administrators that any agreement reached will be temporary and that the musical nightmare they know as the Copyright Revision Act of 1976 will end as abruptly as any bad dream.

Stronger media authority needs definite guidelines, funds control

The recent resignations—under-fire of two of the four heads of campus media and publications point clearly to the need for a stronger media authority with a proper balance of power and restraint to insure that the university community is getting the service it deserves. The power of such an authority should be sufficient enough that it may act confidently, not react ineffectively; the restraints of this authority should protect the autonomy of each medium or publication as well as the responsibility of each student management staff. Both aspects must be clearly defined.

The current Media and Publications Board is hampered for lack of definition of its authority. There are no written guidelines by which it operates, although some effort has been made in recent months toward such.

The board, created by recommendation of the Student Affairs Committee in 1974, should have had more specific mandates, policies and guidelines from its inception. That it did not is a case of gross short-sightedness.

The board's major function—really its only function—has been to select the editor or manager of each student medium or publication. Those are the Seahawk, WLOZ-FM, Atlantis (the literary magazine), Fledgling (the yearbook), and the now-dormant videotape organization.

But because there is seldom any competition for any of these positions, the board's selection has amounted to little more than a rubber stamp.

The membership of the board has been the editor or manager of each medium, its faculty adviser, the vice-chancellor of student affairs, and the director and assistant director of student activities.

This has led to a "Don't bother me, I won't bother you" attitude as each member is concerned with his or her own organization only, while the three administrators have a difficult time determining their own roles on the board.

The Media and Publications Board has no control over funding of any of its member organizations; that is left entirely to student government. Its only recognized enforcement power is to remove an editor or manager.

This often creates a feeling of divided loyalty from the media organizations. Are they more responsible to SGA, which supplies their budget, or to the board, which appoints their management?

The first step toward correcting these problems is to devise some written guidelines for the board which make it very clear where its authority begins and where it ends. Such guidelines should come from within the board itself, which is probably most conscious of its own weaknesses. The board should continue to have the only authority to appoint and dismiss editors and managers, but it should also be given the duty of overseeing the regular operations of each media. This would include periodic reports from the editor or manager, prompt investigation of any hint of a problem, and unquestionable authority to act in the best interests of the university community.

The membership of the board should be expanded to include students who are not connected with any media and perhaps a faculty representative, as well. The board has decided to do this already, but so far no action has been made to bring it to reality. These additional members would provide an objective view of situations with which the board must deal.

Finally, the Media and Publications Board should be given control of funding of each media as the clearest assertion of its authority. This would eliminate an improper connection between media and student government, and remove the media from the grasp of those SGA officials who seek "control" of media if it is "to be stuck with paying the bills," as one high-ranking officer puts it.

The funding situation, of course, must be decided by administration officials who will have to bypass SGA and allocate student fee money directly to the Media and Publications Board. A guaranteed annual percentage could be allowed for media, with each organization requesting funds from the board rather than SGA. Student management staffs would then not be forced to divide their loyalty between SGA and the board, wondering which has the greater power.

At the same time that the board's authority is strengthened, however, safeguards must be included to avoid censorship or unwarranted internal interference. Its sole enforcement power should remain to dismiss the editor or manager and it should not have the power to freeze funds. This would insure that its responsibility is kept in proper perspective, with both the extent and limits specified.

In reorganizing the Media and Publications Board into a stronger, more effective organization, it is important that the board know and assert its authority. And equally as important, its authority must be recognized and respected by other campus factions. These reforms should have been made yesterday; tomorrow is late enough.

Proposed convention for balanced budget amendment no cause for alarm

Doomsayers on the left, seeing a threat to their parasitic lifestyle, have rallied to oppose such a convention. Nothing scares a so called "liberal" more than the thought of actually having to justify the exorbitant expenditures Washington now promotes. Forcing a balanced budget doesn't preclude the adoption (or retention) of any social program, but it does require that the real cost of that program be accounted. The "liberal" who is not a socialist, but a parasite, is the gerbil who is afraid to see the real cost of his parasitic lifestyle.

Congress has not utilized the budget process for proper economic management in recent memory. Self-serving politicians have voted deficits in times of raging inflation as well as economic

The argument against using a convention to propose the balanced budget amendment is that it is too pure by itself.

If the convention process had been applied in the past, it may not have taken 100 years to end slavery, 150 years to initiate female suffrage or nearly 200 years to extend the franchise to young adults.

Legislature says WLOZ to pay $1000 bill from operating budget

by Bobby Parker
Editor

WLOZ radio will pay a controversial $1000 bill out of its normal operating budget, the Student Legislature mandated last week, although the decision may leave the station without sufficient funds to operate for the rest of this semester.

In making this decision, the Legislature adopted the recommendation of its Finance Committee which met with WLOZ officials two days before the Legislature's Thursday night meeting.

The decision does not take effect immediately, however, as WLOZ will be given one month to attempt to raise funds to cover the expense. If WLOZ falls short of the needed amount, the difference will be taken from their regular account.

The controversy stems from an agreement made by WLOZ program director Wade Harris with FM Associates, a Massachusetts-based consulting firm, for preparation of paperwork related to WLOZ's compliance with federal communications regulations and plans for expansion of the station.

Harris says he made the agreement with the approval of station manager Steve Hess, but Hess denies any knowledge of the agreement until the finished product arrived in early January.

Both Hess and Harris have since resigned their positions after an investigation by the Media and Publications Board found evidence of mismanagement leading to the controversy.

In deciding to pay the $1000 from WLOZ's existing account, the Legislature rejected a proposal that it be paid from a $4000 reserve account set aside for WLOZ's future expansion.

WLOZ business manager Chris Mann told the Legislature that if the $1000 is taken from the station's operating budget, approximately $400 would remain for the rest of the semester. Mann said that this would not cover necessary expenses to keep WLOZ on the air through the semester.

Mann estimated that the station could operate on approximately $560.

SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan, chair of the Finance Committee, indicated that the decision was made to make the current station responsible for the mismanagement and to preserve the reserve funds for their original purpose.

Reagan added that the reserve account was set aside on a conditional basis, with the condition being WLOZ's performance this year and until expansion plans are implemented.

Station officials indicated that they will be attempting to raise at least part of the money during the month allowed by SGA.

The Legislature also allocated $175 to send five SGA officers to a statewide conference hosted by the UNC Association of Student Governments to be held in Chapel Hill today through Friday. SGA President Wayne Dunlap had urged the Legislature to send representatives to the meeting which will feature workshops and discussion sessions on various topics.

Dunlap, SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca and three legislators will attend the conference.

In other action, the Legislature discussed parking problems in the parking lot recently opened behind the new classroom building. Legislator Mark Beanblossom said that the lot was composed of approximately 40 percent faculty spaces, which he said was excessive.

SGA Attorney General Glen Downs was appointed legislative parliamentarian, and Legislator Jack Carter was appointed chair of the Charter Committee.

Charters for the Wrestling Club and Racquetball Club were approved.

Absent from the meeting were Robert Black, Sara Deen, Dan Osborne, Patricia Blanton, Jim Godwin, Jack Allen, Brad Williams, Ricky Gunter, and Michael Sanders.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in room 218 of the Chemistry Building.

Black History Month: Just excelled as scientist

Ernest Everett Just, who was born in Charleston, South Carolina, on August 14, 1883, the son of a wharf builder and a school teacher, lived to become the foremost black American biologist of his time.

He was one of the founders of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity and also the first recipient of the NAACP's Spingarn Medal.

After attending a preparatory school briefly in Charleston, the classical preparatory department at South Carolina State College in Orangeburg for three years, and a New Hampshire Academy, Just graduated magna cum laude from Dartmouth College in 1907, with special honors in zoology and history and honors in botany and sociology. In that same year he began to teach at Howard University, where he later became head of the department of zoology. He taught at Howard for 26 years, and in the meantime he did research during the summer months at the Marine Biological Laboratory, Woods Hole, Massachusetts.

In 1912, Just married Ethel Highwarden of Columbus,

Ohio. In 1915, he was named the first recipient of the Spingarn Medal from the NAACP for his contributions to science and for his advancement of the cause of black Americans by improving standards at Negro medical schools. In 1916, he received the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Chicago, again graduating magna cum laude.

A brilliant investigator of cell life and egg fertilization, Dr. Just was noted internationally for his eminence in the field of biology. He was the author of two books and some 50 papers on the subject of cell biology, as well as the editor of several professional journals. He belonged to a number of learned societies and was a former vice-president of the American Society of Zoologists and American Ecologists.

Ernest Everett Just died in 1941 at the age of 58, two years after the publication of his book, "Biology of the Cell Surface," representing a lifetime of research.

If his achievements are to be judged by those standards set up by men of science, it can be said that Dr. Just was an eminent scientist. If he is judged according to his value to Negro education, it can be said that he demonstrates the possibility of human achievement regardless of race or color.

Marine Science program adds mammals seminar

by Sherron McCombs
Seahawk Contributor

A new seminar dealing with the biology of marine mammals has recently been added to the curriculum of the marine sciences program. The course, which is the only one of its kind being offered in the U.S. to undergraduates, is designed to prepare graduating students for positions in marine biology as federal observers on tuna fishing vessels. The observers will be directly concerned with the killing of marine mammals that occurs with tuna fishing.

The purpose of the course, being taught by Dr. Gilbert

Bane, is to acquaint students with the biological and ecological histories of marine mammals, focusing major emphasis on the porpoise-tuna problems presently being encountered. Such subjects as porpoise mortality due to the tuna industry, stock sizes, distribution and migration patterns, management of porpoise stocks, reproduction, economic impact, and legislation dealing with porpoise and other marine mammals will be covered. Topics related to other marine mammals will include osteology, morphology and ecology, physiology, sensory perception, behavior, and groups and population size in general.

Because this seminar is the only one of its kind being taught, students who would otherwise have no experience in dealing with marine mammals will be better qualified for jobs as federal observers, which presently number about 75 per year, than students graduating from institutions not offering such studies.

Should enough student interest be shown, this seminar could be the basis of a three hour course to be taught on marine mammals through the marine sciences curriculum.

Dinner program sponsored by YWCA

The YWCA is coordinating "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner" the week of Feb. 11-17 as a part of Human Relations Month. This event offers opportunity for citizens from different racial backgrounds to come together for a meal of friendship.

"There is no better way to celebrate the common bonds that unite us than through the breaking of bread," said Barbara Jo Lineberger, program coordinator of the YWCA

Participants have the option of being a guest or host and have some choice in the age and size family with which they will visit. Applications are available through churches, businesses, civic organizations and the YWCA, 2815 S. College Road. They are to be returned to the YWCA by Feb. 1. Guests and hosts will be notified of specifics on Feb. 7 by the "Guess Who's Coming To Dinner" committee, Rachel Freeman, Barbara Jo Lineberger and Edythe Shepard.

The place and time for a meal will be left to the individual group of participants. The group could meet at a local restaurant or in a private home, for either lunch or dinner.

Students may find that participation could lead to a project or paper for one of their classes, particularly sociology. The "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner" program was originally conceived by Al Sharp, a former member of the faculty of the Department of Sociology.

More information may be obtained from Director of Student Activities Linda Moore in the Pub.

Omega Psi Phi fraternity to promote 'Greek night'

The Omega Psi Phi fraternity will sponsor a "Greek night" featuring all of UNCW's fraternities Saturday night.

This event is a gesture to promote goodwill among the fraternities, its organizers say, as well as among the student body in general.

A disco dance will be held in the Pub on "Greek night" following the Seahawk-Baptist College basketball match-up in Trask Coliseum. This function is for UNCW students only.

Other fraternities participating in "Greek night" include Tau Kappa Epsilon, Pi Kappa Phi, Alpha Phi Omega, Xi Phis, Deltas and Ques.

English Club holds Human Relations essay contest

February in New Hanover County is Human Relations Month. During Human Relations Month, various community contests will be held, including photography, art and poster.

To insure UNCW participation, the English Club, with funds donated by the Human Relations Commission and the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, is sponsoring an essay contest. Each currently-enrolled student is encouraged to submit an entry.

The writer of an essay should tell how the subject chosen has best improved or contributed to human relations on campus. Subjects for the essays can be anyone associated with the university; a student, a member of the faculty and staff, or a security policeman are among available subjects.

For example, the winning essay in 1978 was concerned with Linda Moore, who asks to be excluded from this year's contest, and how she as director of student activities has worked to improve relations between students and the faculty and staff.

Cash awards are: $50, first place; $30, second; and $20, third. A plaque will be presented to the subject of the winning essay.

Essays should be submitted no later than Friday, Feb. 16, to the English Department secretary in the new classroom building. Cash awards and plaques will be presented during an awards ceremony, Sunday, Feb. 25.

Chemistry seminar to feature Duke University professor

Dr. William R. Krigbaum, chairman of the Duke University chemistry department, will speak on the "Physical Chemistry of Protein Folding" at the fourth Departmental Seminar on Friday, at 2:30 p.m. in room 114 of the Chemistry-Physics Building.

Dr. Krigbaum received his B.S. from Millikin University in 1944, his M.S. in 1948, and his Ph.D. from the University of Illinois in 1949 in physical chemistry. After teaching at Cornell University from 1949 to 1962, Krigbaum came to Duke in 1962. He is a member of the chemistry advisory panel of the National Science Foundation, the American Chemical Society, the American Physical Society, and the American Crystallographic Society. Among his research interests are x-ray diffraction and the physical chemistry of macro-molecules.

The UNCW A.C.S. Student Affiliate Chapter will sponsor a "Meet the Speaker" following Dr. Krigbaum's lecture.

Phillipines trip offered to Biology students

The Department of Biology will offer an overseas field studies in tropical biology to the Philippines, May 23 to July 3. Previous field studies were conducted in Amazonian Ecuador and Amazonian Colombia.

Participating students will be involved in the study of community structure, altitudinal distribution and reproductive strategies of the vertebrates inhabiting the rainforests of the volcanic areas of Luzon, Palawan and other islands.

Enrollment will close April 15. Interested students should contact Dr. Charles M. Fugler in the Department of Biology, telephone (919) 791-4330 extension 2473.

Six semester hours of credit may be earned (Biology 485).

Our first letter were that there should be more student activities with all students having a chance to participate and that these should be held primarily on weekends versus weekdays. Also, we weren't disputing the long hours that Linda Moore and Jon Greene work, but unfortunately it seems many of these long hours are wasted promoting the wrong activities. Ironically, Debbie Doyle's article hinted towards the right answer.

The activities that have been successful in turning out the majority of the students have been dances with free beer (if the students want beer then give it to them—they pay for it through the student activity fee); movies; parties such as casino night of last year; and concerts. These are the types of activities that should occur at least once or twice a week. Other activities such as sporting events and artistic outings are supplementary to the above activities. These require a more special interest than the others.

The next step after sponsoring the "right" events for UNCW students is to promote them correctly which has also been done poorly in the past. I never even heard of the openmic contest mentioned in Debbie Doyle's letter. The activities should be announced a week or two in advance through such media as the Seahawk, conspicuous signs around the campus, or possibly a published list of events for an entire semester.

SOME OF THE SMARTEST YOUNG EXECUTIVES DON'T WORK FOR BUSINESS.

They get responsibility faster in the Navy. An ensign less than a year out of college may run a division of thirty men, a lieutenant (j.g.) a department of fifty or more. By the time he makes full lieutenant—age 24 or 25—an officer can have more managerial experience than most civilians do at thirty.

The Navy has officer programs in Aviation and Nuclear Propulsion, Supply, Law, Medicine and many others. If you'd like to know more about them, speak to your local recruiter.

Navy Lt. Seahawks lose to USF in two overtimes

The UNCW basketball team lost a heartbreaker at home on Monday night to South Florida, 77-66. The game was a double-overtime thriller and was much closer than the score indicates. UNCW fell behind early in the first half and did not regain the lead until there was just 1:36 left in the game. The game was physical and close the entire way until USF pulled away in the second overtime.

UNCW put three players in double figures. Barry Taylor led the Hawks with 16 points, while Dave Wolff had 15 before fouling out with a little over one minute left in regulation. Danny Davis had 10 before he too fouled out in the second overtime. Davis also had a game high 13 rebounds.

South Florida, aided by the outstanding play of two freshmen and several controversial calls by the officials, never let the game get away from them. Although the momentum seemed to swing to UNCW late in the game and in first overtime, USF always managed to come back. The Brahman were led by freshman Jorge Azcoitia and senior Penny Green who each had 21 points. Scott Stapleton had 19 points.

Both teams played excellent defense, as exemplified by UNCW's Ralph Peterson who had 4 steals.

UNCW plays at South Carolina State tonight (Wed.) and come home to play Charleston Baptist on Saturday night.

Seahawks win one, lose one

By Eugene Kugler

The game at East Carolina started badly for the Seahawks, as they shot poorly in the first half. ECU jumped out to an early lead and their game was not hurt any by the fact that star forward Garry Cooper broke his foot and is out indefinitely. He could be back in as little as three-four weeks or could be out for the year.

The Seahawks are a close team and the effect of Cooper's injury could not have helped the team mentally. After a halftime score of 41-27, the Hawks cut the lead inside ten points in the second half, but could get no closer. East Carolina's Oliver Mack led the Pirates with 28 points and the team shot fifty percent from the floor.

There was a bright spot for the Seahawks, though, as senior forward Dave Wolff went over the 1,000 point mark for his career. He is averaging over fifteen points per game in his senior year.

Also, Garry Cooper was ranked eighteenth in the national field goal percentage in last week's Associated Press statistics.

Last Saturday the Hawks were back home in Trask Coliseum to play the Tigers of Towson State. Danny Davis, a 6' 7" sophomore started in place of the injured Cooper.

Davis proceeded to play a fine game and the Hawks played well all around. Getting out to a 31-2 advantage in the first six minutes, UNCW was never again really threatened. Davis had seven of UNCW's first nine points and the first six rebounds. He got into foul trouble and was replaced by 6' 9" sophomore Chuck Verba who scored six points and pulled down 4 rebounds.

The Hawks led 41-21 at halftime and during the second half they moved the ball around well and continued to put up points, although Dave Wolff was the only starter who played more than thirty minutes in the game. Wolff finished with 16 points and 9 rebounds while Davis had fifteen points and seven rebounds. Barry Taylor was also in double figures, hitting 11 points. Eleven players scored for the Seahawks. Towson State was led by Stan Stewart, a 6' 5" junior, who scored 24 points before fouling out.

Before the game, Dave Wolff was presented a game ball in recognition of his crossing the 1000 point plateau in the previous game.

Gary Cooper (left), sidelined with a foot injury for an indefinite period of time, must patiently watch his replacement, Danny Davis (right), come in and fill the big hole that has been opened. Davis, in the last two games, has been averaging 12.5 points and 10 rebounds per game.

Homecoming activities planned

Homecoming Week has been designated as February 11-17. The following is essential information concerning homecoming week.

Candidates for homecoming queen will be introduced on Saturday, February 3, 1979 at halftime of the Baptist-UNCW game. The girls are asked to wear street-length dresses. No pantsuits please! No escort will be needed at this time. There will be a rehearsal on Thursday, February 1, 1979 in Trask Coliseum at 5:30 p.m. All girls are requested to attend.

There will be two separate banner contests this year. The banners displayed at the game will be judged on content pertaining to the rivalry between UNCW and ECU. These banners should be hung in Trask by your group or club no later than 5 p.m. on Tuesday, February 13, 1979. The second banner should pertain to this year's theme of "Ten Years Together". They should be turned in at the Student Activities Office in the Pub no later than 5 p.m. on February 13, 1979.

A spirit award will be given to the group or club who displays the most spirit at the game.

A queen's award will be given to the club or group that accumulates the most points in the banner and spirit contests.

Several events have been planned for Homecoming Week. On Monday "The Goodbye Girl" will be shown in Kenan Auditorium. On Tuesday, the Seahawks will be up against ECU at 8 p.m. in Trask Coliseum. In the Pub on Wednesday, there will be a Dating Game, featuring students and faculty (there will be no admission charge). Andy Wahlberg and Locomotion Circus will perform in Kenan Auditorium on Thursday. No admission will be charged. Friday will bring Triangle to the Coffeehouse. There is no admission charge. And on Saturday, the homecoming dance will be held at the National Guard Armory featuring Symbol 8. Tickets will be on sale for the dance one week in advance. Check next week's Seahawk for the place and the price.

Reserve Haskins shines for UNCW

by Danny Cuff
Seahawk Contributor

The reserve player, what is a reserve player? Reserve means set apart for future use and in basketball, it means a player who is not among the starting five. These days, with basketball becoming more and more physical, the reserve player can hold a special place in the coach's heart.

One of UNCW's top reserves is John Haskins. When one of the Seahawks is in foul trouble or is not playing up to par, Haskins is one of the first players called into the game.

Haskins enters the game at various times, depending on how the team is playing. He sees an ample amount of playing time, averaging 13 to 15 minutes a game.

At 6'4", 195 pounds, Haskins has the strength to play small forward and the agility to play second guard for the Seahawks.

Haskins played at Lees-Macrae Junior College before coming to UNCW. At Lees-Macrae, he was positioned at strong forward his freshman year, averaging 11.5 points and 6.5 rebounds. Haskins played second guard his sophomore year, averaging 15 points and four rebounds.

Following his freshman year and that upcoming summer, Haskins worked diligently on his ball-handling skills because he was to play second guard his sophomore year and was called on to do a lot of ball-handling.

Haskins feels that it is a lot more of a challenge to come off the bench and give a good performance, especially since he knows that the coach will not look to put him back in the game so soon if he does not play really well.

Doesn't the reserve just sit back and watch the game until he is called to go in? Wrong. While Haskins is sitting on the bench waiting intently to get into the game, he watches the player who he will be guarding like a hawk.

Haskins feels nervous when he first enters the game, but after he runs up and down the court a couple of times, he loses the tenseness and doesn't notice the noise or distraction of fans.

Haskins admits that playing the reserve role is naturally not as thrilling as a starting assignment, but for now he plays as much as he can and contributes all that he has to the team waiting for that day in the future when he will start.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

This is the time of year when basketball recruiting is getting into full swing. Cliches dangle promises of four years of staling, national recognition, and an eventual pro contract in front of prospective stars who can shoot like Davey Crockett, jump like a kangaroo and run like a jaguar. What does a prospect see in an institution of higher learning? Well, what about size? Sure, a big school. Like . . . Wake Forest? Wrong. UNCW is almost twice as big as Wake Forest in terms of undergraduates. Well, if not size, how about education? UNC-Chapel Hill has a great undergraduate program. Wrong, the UNC-Chapel Hill graduate school in business does not normally accept graduates from UNC-Chapel Hill. Well then, how about location. Most people would like to go to a school in a semi-warm climate, rather close to a beach. The school should have a nice, new gymnasium which will hold all those people who come to see this budding prospect play. The school should be in or near a city which has lots of action of any sort. But most important is people. In a society, a person must socialize. So people are important for someone to live and be happy. So, a prospective player could pick many schools. But certainly among them will be UNCW. So as UNCW's program grows, it is easy to see why some players chose UNCW. The school, along with the coach and program can draw good players. In the last couple of years it has been working pretty well.

Baseball practice has been getting started in the last week or so, as has men's tennis. Soon golf practice will start in earnest as the spring sports get geared up for 1979.

Taking it to the streets -hockey style

UNCW has taken to the streets! But don't get upset. It is only for this campus' newest sport, street hockey. Who plays street hockey? Well, about thirty members of the student body and staff have been playing about a month. According to Jon Greene, they have just ordered about $80 worth of new equipment, which they will pick up this week.

These street hockey players would love to have some more people join them. It would only cost about $3.75 for equipment and they play every Saturday morning from 10 a.m. until around noon.

They observe abbreviated hockey rules. If you have never played hockey or do not know a single rule, they will teach you how to play. Just see Jon Greene in his office in the Pub or show up on the tennis courts behind Galloway Hall at 10 a.m. on Saturday. Afterwards they normally go out to eat lunch. So take to the streets and get involved in this challenging activity.

'Other Side of the Mountain' shown Tuesday

"Sensual! Tempestuous! The characters are larger than life, larger than dreams, larger than desires," wrote Roger Ebert of the Chicago Sun-Times regarding the movie "The Other Side of Midnight." This film will mark the sixteenth campus movie this academic year and the fifth this semester.

"The Other Side of Midnight" will be shown by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee in Kenan Auditorium on Tuesday, Feb. 6, starting at 8 p.m.

Based on Sidney Sheldon's sensational bestseller, this sumptuous film spans two continents and four decades. Producer Frank Yablans ("Silver Streak") gathered an international cast—Marie-France Pisier ("Cousin, Cousine"), John Beck, Susan Sarandon and spared no expense to bring this grand, glamorous tale to the screen.

Pisier is the one innocent French girl who falls in love with a cavalier World War II flier (Beck) and then dedicates her life to revenge when he deserts her after promising marriage.

This searing romantic drama follows the intense passions, loves and hates which culminate in a deadly, destructive web of intrigue and deceit.

Vincent Canby of the New York Times wrote that "This is a movie fiction of the sort that becomes immensely popular because it satisfies the people who want to believe it."

"The Other Side of Midnight" is rated R. The admission, except for those possessing season passes, will be 50 cents for UNCW students with ID cards and $1 for all non-students.

Eastwood's latest a lesson in comic relief

Take one two-fisted truck-driver (Clint Eastwood), add a lovely blonde country-and-western singer (Sondra Locke) and one large, hairy monkey (Clyde) and what is the result? Hilarity, yes, but the kind that combines both laughter and a lump in the throat. That is the combination which makes up "Every Which Way But Loose."

Eastwood, portraying the tender/tough Philo Beddoe, takes a dramatic step away from the reputation he gained as Dirty Harry Callahan, with surprising success. The steely eyes and macho determination are still present, but gone is the perpetually snarling countenance. Philo Beddoe knows how to smile.

A rugged individualist with a heart as big as a wagon wheel, Philo prefers the simple life. He enjoys drinking, tinkering with cars, and staging impromptu prizefights on the side. Clever, squint-eyed Clyde was the victory prize in one such contest. He is Philo's pride and joy, and indeed they do seem suited for one another.

In search of excitement, Philo frequents a nightclub known as the Palomino. Here he meets the stunning Lynne Halsey-Taylor (convincingly played by Locke) and is smitten by her looks and voice.

Before long our hero is in love, and wonder of wonders, it seems the lady thinks he is special, too. Philo refrains from consummating their relationship, however, because Lynne has a boyfriend who is given to violent fits of jealousy.

During one of their late-night trysts, Lynne confides to Philo of her burning desire to succeed as a singer and bemoans the lack of funds to see her through until she reaches stardom. Explaining that her boyfriend, who is also her manager, is withholding her talent for the Arts and the Thalian Association.

The films are shown every third Saturday at 8 p.m. in historic Thalian Hall.

The concluding film schedule is as follows:

Feb. 10 — "Rebecca," Alfred Hitchcock's film which won Best Picture of the Year in 1960.

March 3 — "Duck Soup," the 1932 comedy with the Marx Brothers.

March 24 — "Laura," a

Films

earnings. Lynne touches Philo's heartstrings, and her pursestrings. He urges her to accept his gift of a sizeable amount of cash. She is grateful and he is smug in the knowledge that he is aiding the woman he loves.

Immediately thereafter, Lynne and her manager vanish, bound for the nightclub circuit in Colorado. Philo, who is nobody's fool, determines that Lynne has been forced to leave against her will. Spurred on by passion, Philo decides to follow.

Brother Orville (Geoffrey Lewis), the monkey Clyde and Philo set out in a camper for Colorado. En route they pick up an adventurous young woman named Echo and the search begins.

Interspersed with thrilling shots of Eastwood's bare chest are close-ups of Clyde's crass mannerisms which contrast well with Orville's rubber-faced expressions. Philo's fighting skills are brought into play when fragments of his past come back to plague him in the form of a motley crew of motorcyclists and two irate lawmen, losers in a barroom brawl.

As a whole, "Every Which Way But Loose" is a lesson in comic relief: plenty of laughs and fast-paced fight scenes make it an appealing diversion from everyday life. While the ending is a trifle weak, it is at least more realistic than most entertainment being filmed today.

TV producers cash in on 'Animal House' success

Campus Digest News Service
When a motion picture makes it big, television networks are usually quick to cash in by copying the movie with a television series.

And when "National Lampoon's Animal House" became the nation's most popular movie last year, it was inevitable that one of the networks would slap together a sitcom on fraternity life. Television producers are seldom too proud to directly copy a popular movie.

But who could have guessed that all three networks would try to cash in on "Animal House"? Particularly in mid-season and while "Animal House" is still going strong at the box office.

Stars of CBS' "Co-Ed Fever"

Bowl. ABC, using the same producers, characters and writers as "Animal House," aired "Delta House" beginning on Jan. 27. And CBS will offer "Co-Ed Fever" beginning Feb. 4.

"Brothers and Sisters" focuses on the adventures of a trio of fraternity brothers and their sorority friends. "Co-Ed Fever" is about a female college that begins enrolling men.

There is no telling how college students will react to all this celebration of campus mischief and celebration. After "Animal House" hit the top, toga parties and petty vandalism became the rave.

With three television shows on the air and an "Animal House" sequel in the works, students will indeed be envied by the rest of the nation. Fraternities and sororities, which have enjoyed a rebirth nationally after the anti-establishment turmoil of the sixties, are becoming even more popular.

The big winner, besides college students, in the "Animal House" success story is 21st Century Communications.

It is certainly unprecedented. NBC recently aired "Brothers and Sisters" for the first time, right after the Super poor humor magazine.

As a partner with MCA in the "Animal House" movie, the company is enjoying its share of the over $50 million the movie has made so far off. The movie cost less than $4 million to make.

The National Lampoons and MCA are also involved in the "Delta House" television show, which will use many of the same characters as "Animal House."

The "Animal House" producers decided to produce a television series based on the movie because it did not want to lose out on the potential television revenue—which is what happened to MCA with "American Graffiti" when ABC came up with "Happy Days" on its own.

The producers of "Delta House" have made it clear they will use this same brand of humor in its television show.

Network officials expect either total disaster or widespread popularity for the shows. If "Delta House," "Co-Ed Fever" and "Brothers and Sisters" succeed, a new genre of sitcoms and a new style of television humor will have been created.

Or it could be just another passing fad.

Daniels film series salutes American cinema

"The Godfrey Daniels Magical Moments and Marathon Film Society," created last year as a means of bringing a variety of quality motion pictures to the area, is in the midst of its second season with five films yet to be screened.

Saluting the American cinema this season, the Godfrey Daniels society is featuring motion picture classics from the Golden Days of Hollywood. The series is sponsored jointly by the Lower Cape Fear Coun-sophisticated thriller directed by Otto Preminger.

April 7 — "San Francisco," the first "disaster film" which starred Clark Gable and Jeanette MacDonald.

April 28 — "Destry Rides Again," an infamous 1946 western stars Marlene Dietrich and James Stewart.

Tickets for these remaining shows may be obtained at the box office the night of the performance.

Concert to feature baritone from New York Opera

The Wilmington Concert Association will present its third concert of the season on Monday, Feb. 5, in Kenan Auditorium at 8 p.m. featuring soloist John Darrenkamp, a leading baritone with the New York City Opera.

Darrenkamp made his New York City Opera debut in the fall of 1969 as Sharpless in "Madam Butterfly." Since then he has been a leading baritone with the company appearing in "Prince Igor," "Carmen," "Cosi fan tutte," "Marriage of Figaro," "La Boheme," "La Traviata," in "Manon" and "Maria Stuarda" with Beverly Sills, and in a new production of "Don Giovanni."

A native of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, Darrenkamp has been a frequent guest artist with the Philadelphia Lyric Opera, the Connecticut Opera Association, the Houston Opera, Mississippi Opera, Cincinnati Summer Opera, the Mexico City Opera and the Boston Opera.

A favorite also with orchestras, he has appeared with the San Antonio Symphony, the Minnesota Orchestra, and the Pittsburgh and Baltimore orchestras.

These opera and orchestra commitments, as well as annual recital tours, keep Darrenkamp much in demand. His performance in Wilmington is open only to season membership holders in the Wilmington Concert Association.

Review:

North Carolina Symphony outstanding, unusual

Wilmington music lovers were delighted by Maestro Henry Mazer's command of the North Carolina Symphony during its performance at Kenan Auditorium Thursday night. Guest conductor Mazer, associate conductor of the Chicago Symphony, provided the large crowd of listeners with unusual interpretations reaching beyond the composers' concepts.

Serge Prokofiev's "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, No. 1 in D Majors, Opus 19" exemplified the maestro's interpretive genius. With the talent of violin soloist Catherine Tait this work, which is generally treated as grotesque, became almost sentimental and pastoral.

Contrasting images provoked by the lyrical orchestral melody and the distorted counter-melody of the solo suggested the theme of good over evil.

Clarity ruled throughout the performance. William Walton's "The Wise Virgins," a rescoring of Bach, offered beautiful performances from the woodwinds. Firey trumpets provided no muddying of tones. The instrumentation was deliberate and calculated. Mazer held the orchestra to slow tempos, but dullness never resulted as the phrasing flowed dramatically in Tchaikovsky's First Symphony.

The conducting was entertaining in itself. Mazer did not allow himself to become a mere orchestral metronome. He pointed, waved, stamped, whirled and shot his commands to the orchestra which responded intensely.

Two curtain calls proved the audience's delight in this performance of outstanding and unusual quality.

College students to select best films

College and university students across the country will, for the first time, have an opportunity to vote directly for their favorite screen performers and filmmakers in a new national poll known as "Student's Choice Awards."

Balloting will be in association with Focus '79, a national competition sponsored by Datun and open to filmmaking and film-study students. Voting categories include Best Motion Picture, Best Performance by an Actor and Actress, and Best Director.

Results of "Student's Choice Awards" balloting are expected to provide a unique sampling of opinion among American college students who represent one of the most influential segments of the country's moviegoers—concerning theatrical films released during 1978.

Winners chosen by student vote will be invited to attend the Focus '79 Premiere and Award Ceremony in Hollywood on March 22, prior to the Academy Awards, at which

ELP release ninth album

Since their concert debut in 1970 at the Isle of Wight Festival, ELP has made a place for themselves in the music field. 1977 was the year Emerson, Lake and Palmer came back on the music scene since 1975 with Volumes I and 2 of Works.

Love Beach, ELP's ninth album, is arranged entirely by Keith Emerson (keyboards), Greg Lake (guitar), and Carl Palmer (drums). This is the first LP to feature arrangements by ELP since 1973's

RECORDS

Brain Salad Surgery.

Recorded at the Compass Point Studio in Nassau, Bahamas, Love Beach is quite different from the earlier ELP and features Greg Lake instead of Keith Emerson.

Side one is six short pieces with romantic themes that all fall together. It includes "All I Want is You," the title cut, "Love Beach," "Taste of Love," "The Gambler," "For You," and the only piece not composed by ELP, "Camario" (from "Fantasia Para un Gentilhombre").

Side two is more like the style of ELP with the extended compositions, but different in the fact that the piece is divided into four movements. "Memoirs of an Officer and a Gentleman" expresses the conflicts that arise from love and war. The four movements include: "Prologue/The Education of a Gentleman," "Love at First Sight," "Letters from the Front," "Honourable Company (March)."

Emerson, Lake and Palmer's style of music peaked with Works but they aren't on their way down yet with their newest release, Love Beach.

Pro Musica performs for diverse tastes

Monday night's performance of the Wilmington Pro Musica was for people with diverse musical tastes. The musical ensemble, directed by UNCW professor Dr. Frank Wiley, performed on the stage of Kenan Auditorium in front of what must have been a disappointing turnout.

The audience of about 75 was not to go away disappointed, however, as response was favorable to the group's two-hour recital. The music was classical in origin and some of the pieces dated back as far as the seventeenth century.

The program itself consisted of various instrumental solos as well as sonatas, or music written for two or more instruments. A notable piece was a 1966 composition by Donald Erb, called "Diversion For Two (Other Than Sex)." It was played by Christine Burkholder (trumpet) and Jack Stamp (percussion) and was particularly well-received by the audience.

The Pro Musica performing ensemble consisted of UNCW faculty members Elizabeth Thostan (violin), Richard Deas (piano), Lorraine Lueft (harp-sichord), and Dr. Burkholder. The rest of the group was made up of community members and two Wilmington high school musicians, violinist Maria Hernandez and bassist Jay Meyer.

Although largely instrumental, the show did have one vocal selection, Roger Hannay's "Concerto da Camera" which featured the voice of soprano Beth Marshburn Bell.

The show was well done and offered enough musical diversity to hold the audience's interest. Noticeable was the absence of UNCW students, however, which is a shame considering admission was free and the performance was staged on campus.

The Wilmington Pro Musica plays at churches and theatres all over Wilmington and another performance at UNCW is scheduled for April.

NOTES

There will be a rush party sponsored by Chi Phi, Wednesday January 31 at 8 p.m. at the house (2901 Market Street, across from the Kettle Pancake House). All interested persons are invited to attend. For more information call Bill Barefoot at 799-3563. If you need a ride to the party, call 799-3563.

Auditions for the University Reader's Theatre production of Eudora Welts's Pulitzer-Prize winning novel, "The Optimist's Daughter" will be Thursday, February 1 at 7:30 p.m. in K121.

The Chemistry Departmental Seminar Series will present Dr. William R. Krigbaum of the Duke University Chemistry department, Friday, February 2 at 2:30 p.m. in C114.

Saturday, February 3 has been declared 50's Night. All students are encouraged to come to the basketball game dressed in the style of the 50's. A half-time show will be presented by the Pom-Pom squad.

The Social Work Club meeting was held Jan. 25 in H103. Objectives of the club were established: 1) community service; 2) professional and educational growth; 3) socialization; 4) career development; and, 5) peer counseling. The next meeting will be held on Thursday, February 1 in H103.

Alpha Phi Omega presented a rush party on January 19 and it was very successful. Six people decided to pledge the fraternity. With this, the brotherhood would like to thank these people for picking this fraternity in which to pledge. They would also like to extend a very warm welcome, and they look forward to having them as future brothers. The brotherhood would also like to extend an invitation to the pledges to attend their next meeting which will be Sunday, February 3 at 8 p.m. at the new Building, seminar III room (second floor). Again, Alpha Phi Omega would like to welcome their pledges.

The Omegas are proud to announce that Anthony Hart and George Brandy have been accepted into the Lampodos club. Darnell Jones has been reactivated and is now a member of the Lampodos club. Now these pledges will undergo a pledge period to determine if they are worthy of Omega land. Our congratulations are extended to them.

The UNCW Circle K club will participate in Circle K week beginning February 4 and ending February 10. The club has planned many activities during the week. Some of the activities are eating out, disco-dancing, a party and a look at some silent movies. The UNCW Circle K club is a social and service club. It meets every Monday at 7:30 in C221. Anyone with questions concerning the club or Circle K week can contact Earl Smith at 791-4218 or Dr. Ned Martin in the Chemistry Building.

Appointments with recruiters should be made in the Office of Career Planning and Placement, 207 Alderman Administration Building. Sign-up sheets for recruiting interviews are available beginning Monday mornings, three weeks in advance of the scheduled interview.

Students must be registered with the Placement Office in order to sign up for interviews and are expected to honor appointments scheduled. To avoid disappointment, interview appointments should be scheduled as early as possible. Come by or call the Placement Office if there are questions or for additional information.

WLOZ manager sought

Radio station WLOZ is currently taking applications for the following positions: Station Manager, Program Director and Music Director.

There is also a possibility that the position of business manager may be open. The main requirements for these positions are interest and dedication and approximately 8 to 12 hours per week of available time. Technical help is available so it is not necessary to have previous experience in the radio field, although it would be helpful.

Drop by the faculty adviser's office, Dr. Irvin G. Clator, Chemistry Building, room 204, any time before Jan. 31 for an application form and a more detailed description of the duties associated with the position.

Volunteer opportunities

For that someone with a green thumb--A local nursing home is in need of a volunteer with knowledge of gardening to develop a window-box garden program for interested long-term patients.

Help someone to make a better grade--Volunteers are needed to assist teachers by tutoring individual children in math and reading. Program time is approximately one hour per session, 1-2 days per week, during the public school year.

For more information on these and other volunteer openings, see Linda Moore, Student Activities, or call the Voluntary Action Center, 762-9611.

The Career Planning and Placement Office, in cooperation with Sigma Alpha Beta and Phi Beta Lambda, will sponsor the second annual Career Day at UNCW. This is a day for students to talk with various businesses, industries, military branches, and graduate schools without the pressure of an interview.

Career Day is planned for Feb. 14, 10:30 to 3, in the lobby of Trask Coliseum. Bring your valentine and find out what opportunities can be yours after graduation.

Duke law professor says graduates overtrained, under-utilized

by Chip Berlet
CHICAGO, IL (CPS)--The nation's law schools will produce another near-record brood of graduates this year, and more than ever will have trouble finding jobs within the profession. Those who do find jobs, says Paul D. Carrington of the Duke Law School, are probably in for a shock. Carrington thinks most law grads are over-trained, and will thus be "under-utilized." The best solution to the problem he can come up with is nothing less than a fundamental restructuring of American law schools.

Because of current trends in legal services, Carrington told the recent meeting of the Association of American Law Schools (AALS) here, most law graduates are "saber-toothed tigers" trained in skills they will have little use for when they become attorneys.

They learn those skills during the third year of law school, which is usually devoted to

DUKE'S CARRINGTON

...New ideas for law schools specialized law courses and practical clinics. Carrington wants to simply eliminate law programs' third year. Given the obvious economic (schools would lose about a third of their tuition revenues) and professional (young lawyers would be loosed on the already-congested job market more rapidly) implications, the really surprising element of Carrington's proposal is that it attracted serious support at the convention.

Carrington claims the change is necessary because demand for legal help is way up. Group legal assistance plans and the success of firms' efforts to attract more clients through advertising are the two main reasons. These new kinds of clients, though, are asking for help in non-corporate criminal and civil law. While much of the firms' more traditional legal work is being done by para-legal assistants in the offices, the law schools, Carrington says, are still training lawyers in corporate law, but not enough in the non-corporate criminal and civil law that the new clients are demanding.

The two-year concept has been debated since a 1971 AALS report, but there aren't any American law schools that have actually tried it. Peer pressure, as well as economics, may be responsible for the reluctance to experiment.

"People treat me like a demented relative when I talk about two-year law schools," complains Professor Jeffrey O'Connell of the University of Illinois Law School. "Yet uniform dissatisfaction with the third year of law school for so long-heightened as it is today--tells us that maybe we ought to do something about it."

Much of the dissatisfaction is rooted in the simple notion that an education ought to prepare one for a career.

Sally Stix, a recent graduate of Chicago Kent College of Law, notes that a student planning to practice criminal law might find a detailed study of environmental law almost worthless.

"The cliché," Stix recalls, "is that the first year they scare you to death, the second year they work you to death, and the third year they bore you to death. It's very true. I thought I was going to die during the last semesters."

She adds that the "dissatisfaction with the third year is because the courses are just more of the same thing taught in the first two years." At most schools, the first two years cover the fundamentals of law, legal research and legal analysis.

Stix favors a two-year theoretical program followed by a year-long apprenticeship under an attorney's direct supervision.

"Before there were many law schools," she explains, "people learned to be a lawyer by working in a law office, and studying to pass the bar exam. It would be a lot cheaper for the students, who could be earning money during the apprenticeship."

But Soia Mentschikoff, dean of the University of Miami Law

School, opposes eliminating the third-year curriculum.

"The problem with dissatisfaction with the third year is that students are bored to tears," she agrees. "But two years of law school just aren't sufficient for most lawyers."

Mentschikoff attributes the boredom to inadequate, outdated instruction. "The quality of classroom materials... has been steadily going down for years." It would be better, she adds, if educators would "take a look at what we should be doing to properly train professionals."

Yet there's been trouble making changes. "If there are going to be any changes," O'Connell says, "they are not going to come from the Bar, not from the law schools, and not from the Supreme Court."

O'Connell's pinning his hopes instead on a populist state legislature that could be persuaded to allow anyone who has studied for two years to take the bar exam.

Carrington still hopes that the profession itself will make two-year schools a reality. He warns, though, the system could produce more lawyers, and that more lawyers could mean an increased reliance on the courts to settle disputes.

"Our society is already extremely contentious," he sighs. "I just wish there was some way to increase the availability of legal services while, at the same time, preaching forbearance."

'Winter Run' at Greenfield

The New Hanover County Heart Association and the Wilmington Roadrunners Club will sponsor a "Winter Run" Sunday, Feb. 4, at Wilmington's Greenfield Lake beginning at 1 p.m. A registration fee of $6 will be collected, and all proceeds will go to the county Heart Association.

There will be three distances for the Winter Run: 3 miles, 10,000 meters and 10 miles. A medallion will be presented to the first place winner in each race and prizes of merchandise will be given for second and third places. All entrants will receive a t-shirt.

Runners will be classified in the following categories: men--15 years old and under, 17-39, 40-50, and 50 and over; women--15 and under, 16-39, and 40 and over.

For more information on the "Winter Run," contact Maxine Maddox at 762-3357 or write the New Hanover County Heart Association, P.O. Box 3463, Wilmington, NC 28406.

Program Board organizers cite positive changes in programming, SGA officials' opinions vary

by Ray Warren
Staff Writer

The SGA-sponsored Program Board, born of controversy, appears headed for more of the same. Student government critics of the board's performance charge that it has been inefficient and negligent of its purpose. The board's leadership, on the other hand, feels that its operation is being crippled by SGA regulations. Any attempt to reform the present system, however, is likely to meet resistance in the Student Legislature, making the future of the board at least somewhat uncertain.

According to Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene, the Program Board (consisting of board chair Cindy Cole and the chairs of the dance, coffeehouse, concert, fine arts, and Homecoming committees) has been meeting in his office weekly since the first of the year. The first real test of the board's ability to coordinate programming, he feels, will be Homecoming week.

"All the committee chairmen are working together," he said. "Each has a day or event he is working on," he added, "without scheduling problems."

In addition, Greene says that the group is trying to "develop a more comprehensive conception of what programming means." He explained that this meant that each group was learning to "tie into other events on campus."

Some student legislators apparently do not feel that the board is progressing with its work fast enough.

"Well frankly," said student legislator Jack Allen, "I haven't heard or seen that much from them." He added that he felt that "things are as confused as ever."

Recently resigned ex-legislator Karin Whaley was more positive, saying that "at least it seems that the people we have are working together." She added, however, that she felt there was "still something missing" and that she "still doesn't see a lot of action."

Sophomore president Brad Williams said of the board, "I'm real disappointed. I expected a lot more from them." Senior president Patricia Stanton seemed to agree. When contacted, she complained that "one hand doesn't know what the other is doing," adding that the Program Board didn't "have the depth it needs."

In defense of the student programmers, Greene points out that the Student Legislature did not agree on a form for the board, or allocate any money, until mid-October of last year. They, therefore, had no time to get organized or investigate possible entertainment.

The legislators, for their part, seem generally willing to concede that point. Both Allen and Whaley lauded the group for organizing the activities and publicity for the football championship game, which was hastily planned. Williams sympathetically stated that "it's hard to work ahead not knowing how much money you've got to plan with." Senator Mike Sanders added that "it is the Legislature's fault we didn't come through earlier" (with funds).

Concerning the present state of programming, board chair Cindy Cole agrees that "there is much more that the Program Board needs to be doing." She adds, however, that "due to limitations, we are limited as to how much programming we can do and how efficiently." Both she and Greene see these "limitations" as being the result of the Student Legislature's fund allocation policy.

One problem has been that the Legislature allocated money for Homecoming and several spring projects, but stipulated that the board would have to get approval of the Legislature's finance committee each time it wished to spend some of it. Greene claims that the board has had "to wait two or three weeks for finance committee approval." In the meantime, he adds, no contracts could be signed or commitments made. Greene says that "in effect, the finance committee is doing the

Media Board commission to study WLOZ planning

by Tom Lamont
Seahawk Contributor

The Media and Publications Board has formed a study commission to look into long range goals and planning of the campus radio station, WLOZ.

The commission's task will include the identification of questions concerning management, funding and other aspects of the station.

First on the list of the commission's priorities will be to look into the ownership of the station's license, and its effect on funding and authority as far as the Federal Communications Commission and the university are concerned.

Other areas the commission may explore include the ramifications of increased station wattage; the possibilities of a full-time staff person, who would provide direction, training, and supervision; and the future location of the station itself, where it could possibly be used effectively with other campus functions such as the videotape committee.

Added to these ideas, the commission would also like to investigate the expansion of the station, see how much educational service it could provide, and study all pertinent FCC regulations.

The commission will be composed of six people with Jon Greene, assistant director of Student Activities, acting as chair. He will be joined by Mark Beanblossom, an SGA representative, Richard Long and Bobby Parker, members of the Media and Publications Board, and Mrs. Betty Jo Welch, coordinator of the speech communications curriculum.

Two other members will be chosen on a later date. One will be the new radio station manager, and the other will be chosen from an administration department, either from business or Student Affairs.

According to Linda Moore, director of Student Activities, the commission members have an intensive and thorough study ahead of them. She added, "This is a hefty assignment for these people. It will take a lot of time and research to look into all the facets of our campus radio facility."

But no matter how tough the assignment, the study commission plans to go into action by mid-February.

From a shaky start, Program Board emerges with enthusiasm

After a shaky, uncertain start, the student Program Board has gotten on track to its original purpose—to coordinate programming efforts so that students get the most benefit and the best entertainment. If allowed to expand its role to its proper limits, the Program Board could be the answer to the programming problems which have plagued this campus for years.

There was very little opposition to the concept of a central program committee when first proposed last spring. Objections did come, however, when SGA officials began discussing how to implement the new board. Afraid that they would lose control of a large portion of student funds, SGA officials were reluctant to go along with giving Program Board the necessary free hand in dividing money among its component committees.

The debate over Program Board last fall was long and complicated. It pitted, without justification, SGA against officials of the Student Activities Office, the former again worried about losing some of its control. The failure to make firm decisions without unnecessary delay also meant that Program Board officials were not appointed until late in the semester.

Despite all these problems, however, Program Board members have shown that they are conscious of the course they should be steering and are willing to put enough effort into their jobs to make things work. For if Program Board has succeeded at all, it is due to the enthusiasm of the people involved. They have worked as a cohesive unit (with the unfortunate exception of one committee chair), holding weekly meetings and coordinating ideas. Homecoming will be a prime example as we will see a total package of programs for the week on which all Program Board members have shared in planning and in effort.

Looking ahead for Program Board, we see nothing but good things. Standing strong on its feet, the board should be able to plan programming on a semester basis, using both funds and people power in a concerted motion forward.

There is, however, one change which would make the board's job a lot easier and much more effective: funds should be allocated in a lump sum from either SGA or administration so that student programmers, the people who know best how to plan and finance programs, have the authority to put their plans into action.

Some SGA officials, including members of the legislature's finance committee, have reportedly come to realize the full benefit of this "lump sum" idea of funding. We might expect, however, some opposition to the proposal from those in SGA who fear a loss of power.

In recognizing the success of Program Board over strong obstacles, we must applaud its chair, Cindy Cole, who brings the most enthusiasm to her job and spreads it to others as well.

While many students may not yet realize the full potential or benefit of an organization such as Program Board, the impact will be seen as students begin to notice more and more the quality of a year of programming rather than making harsh judgments on events they didn't particularly enjoy. One idea of Program Board is to reach all tastes in entertainment; with that in mind, we can't expect to please all of the people all of the time.

No parking

To the Editor:

I wish to express my sorrow for a school that does not have sufficient funds to build adequate, accessible parking lots for students.

Oh, here he goes again talking about Galloway Hall. He ought to be satisfied he has anywhere at all to park. The bookstore parking lot is not too far to walk. Belk and East parking lots are not always overcrowded.

Sure all of this sounds familiar, but I am sure that if anyone looks towards the dormitories, one would see that Galloway Hall is the largest of the dorms. I would assume that the largest dorm would have the most residents. But it can not be the largest. It has the smallest parking lot.

What about the money spent on parking stickers, and not to mention parking tickets. There are more yellow lined parking spaces and handicapped parking spaces than are actually needed. This applies all over campus.

I am a resident at Galloway Hall. I must park my car where I can. I must have my car dented occasionally because of the limited parking space. All of this should discourage me from parking there, but my car should be near enough for me to keep an eye on it. It should not be on the other side of campus being stripped down by who knows what.

I feel that the "temporary parking" in front of Galloway Hall was a good idea while it lasted. Maybe they should be reopened until our parking lot is expanded and paved—course student sticker fees would probably go up—but a need is a need.

A Galloway Resident,

Too early for presidential politics?

Tell that to a dozen or so candidates

It's too early for presidential politics. That's the opinion of the American public.

It's time to get a campaign in progress. That's the opinion of a dozen and one presidential aspirants who aim to unseat Jimmy Carter in 1980.

The Republican race, typical of the party out of power, is shaping into a free-for-all featuring old blood and new. The list includes Howard Baker, James Thompson, George Bush, Phillip Crane, Ronald Reagan, John Connally, Lowell Weicker, and Robert Dole, and there are more.

Gerald Ford is still mentioned, but that is inevitable. He shouldn't and probably won't run, limiting his effort to keeping his party's nomination from the grasp of Reagan.

All of these candidates, of course, are running against what is—that is, Jimmy Carter. But Carter's initial problem is not the Republican flock; first he's got to harness his own Democratic party.

Carter has a few aces of his own, the most important of which is incumbency. He has the whole field of foreign policy virtually to himself, and his record there—Camp David and China the prime examples—has been very good. He also has the ready means to repair political fences, notably through appointment of power. For example, he has an excellent opportunity to make overtures to blacks and liberals when he replaces Attorney

This analysis of the President's problem is verified by the fact that his major opposition is coming from representatives of the two opposing poles within the party. Sen. Ted Kennedy, a strict liberal, and California Gov. Jerry Brown, a new conservative, are probably the only Democrats who could mount a serious challenge to Carter at this stage of the game.

Kennedy, despite all his denials, appears more like a candidate by the day. His hiring of a new "political adviser" recently, frequent speaking engagements sharply critical of Carter and direct confrontation with the President on the national health insurance issue add up to a well-planned method.

The only question that remains is what it the motive to his method? Does he only wish to use his political clout to force Carter into a compromise and acceptance of some of his goals? Or is he really running for the Oval Office?

Kennedy enjoys the support of blacks who are disenfranchised with Carter's budget-cutting in social programs. He also can count on the loyalty of organized labor, especially George Meany who has been skeptical of the President all along.

Brown is a different case than Kennedy because it takes some effort on his part to keep his name in the running, not that it has been a problem for the governor. Taking the opposite view of Kennedy, Brown says the President's budget cuts have not gone far enough and he advocates a constitutional convention to amend the Constitution to require a balanced budget.

(By the way, both convention and amendment are bad ideas. The former gives a false sense of popular participation although its delegates would be appointed by state legislatures and any amendment out of convention must still be ratified by the states. The latter can as easily be enforced by executive order or legislative statute, and its purpose would be subverted by a necessary "emergency" clause.)

Brown is the only leading Democrat in any position to say "I told you so" about Carter due to his to-the-end challenge for the party's nomination in 1976. He survived a mild election scare in 1978 by beating back a tough Republican opponent in the midst of the Proposition 13 hoopla.

The differences between Kennedy and Brown are marked and important. Kennedy is the ideal of party tradition, Brown the figure of unorthodoxy. The differences transpire their personal lives and their political style.

Carter's dismal showing in the West in 1976 and his growing unpopularity there add credence to a Brown candidacy. But Brown is in a similar position as Carter in 1976 in that the nation really doesn't know what he is. His adoption of Proposition 13 came too late—after the baby was born, walking and talking.

If Kennedy's motives are unclear, Brown's are as clear as glass. Brown wants to challenge Carter, and he probably will. But this time around it won't be a battle of the amateurs; Carter has since turned professional.

Sen Kennedy has been professional for a long time. He's much more politically mature than Brown or Carter. He doesn't seek the challenge of a campaign because he knows that in the long run it's not votes won that really count. Hardened by the deaths of two brothers early in their political lives, Kennedy knows there is no rush and he has plenty of time.

Jerry Brown views power as a frivolous prize; Ted Kennedy sees it as an implement of progress; and Jimmy Carter believes it a serious responsibility.

Brown presenting only a superficial challenge and Kennedy content to wait his turn, Carter should be able to hold the line within his party.

All things equal, of course.

Stayin' alive through the disco epidemic--'a debasing national orgy'

by Frank Moore
from the Daily Tar Heel

The search continues...

In the grab-bag of tools to make it with women...

In the roll of the weighted dice to make an impression...

In the spin of love's wheel hoping to win...

Knowing how to dance--and enjoying it--is a tool, a lucky roll, a fortunate spin.

Dancing, however, is a social disease. And disco music--the finest invention since damn Yankees--spurs and spreads the sickness.

"Musicians" like Donna Summer and the Bee Gees--admittedly hustling and boogieing on mounds of money--are carriers of this pestilence.

The disco epidemic--a debasing national orgy--seems like a reawakening of Dracula, baring its grating teeth for the innocent necks of its most easily influenced victims--teenagers.

Most susceptible to the Brothers Gibb glib offerings of night fever and stayin' alive, teenagers succumb to the pulsating drumbeats--similar to the ones heard in Tarzan movies--of contemporary disco.

Perhaps that explains the atmosphere of local disco establishments.

A sample conversation:

Cheetah: You dance?

Jane: Yea, me dance.

Shuffle, shuffle, step 1-2-3. Eight hours later with holes in the floor, Cheetah and Jane break for bed, so they can get up for their 8 o'clock Anthro class.

But, anyway...

Why us, Lord? What have

WE'RE JUST ABOUT READY TO FOCUS IN ON JUPITER'S MYSTERIOUS RED SPOT!

we ever done?

To deserve even one Of these sugar-coated, superficial songs.

'Course I'm biased, I reckon. I dance to disco like Lenny Wirtz officiates.

It just don't happen...ever.

My hustle don't bustle and my shag is a drag. Size 15 shoes don't help, but that's no excuse.

And sometimes I'd like to disco my way out of the interested observer's penalty box I usually stand in at dances.

Aren't life-long penalties a bit harsh? Will I ever be called twinkletoes and finally figure out the pretzel? Does a chicken have lips?

That big Disco King In The Sky has pronounced me unsuitable for lit, liquor-stained dance floors and banished me from associating with Travolta types.

That has advantages. I don't have to wear slit shirts, tight pants or dancing shoes. My hair also stays relatively free of Quaker State 30-W oil.

And I didn't have to rush out and buy the farcical second version of Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band.

I flipped the volume control all the way to the right on Springsteen and kept up a force-field of rock 'n' roll against the barbaric invaders.

Besides, if a Gilded Illogical Resistant Lover (GIRL) ever asked ME to dance, the world would slam on brakes, cracking our heads on a universal windshield.

And no one can guess what would happen if I asked someone to step on the lit altar of decadence.

I would try some liquid courage, but my favorite beverage is distributed by foreigners above the Mason-Dixon line, so that kinda limits my choices.

But like the Bee Gees, I'm stayin' alive, and like Donna Summer, please don't leave me this way.

Let's do the time warp together.

UNCW selected to study three species of Lake Waccamaw fish

by Sherron McCombs
SeaHawk Contributor

UNCW has recently been selected to study whether three species of fish, found only in Lake Waccamaw in Columbus County, are in danger of extinction.

Dr. David Linquist, assistant professor of biology, who says the fish to be studied are unique in the world, was asked by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to do the three-to-five-year study to determine if the fish actually are endangered.

The three species of fish under investigation are the two-and-a-half-inch Waccamaw silver side, the three-and-a-half-inch killifish, and the two-inch darter, all of these fish are similar to the snail darter, which has gained attention for blocking completion of the Tellico Dam on the Little Tennessee River because it is considered endangered.

Although the fish have ancestors in other parts of the state, they have evolved into unique species since they are isolated in Lake Waccamaw and may become endangered if the ecology of the lake changes.

The study will determine the environmental factors which necessitate and limit the development of the fish. Management techniques will also be recommended to the State Wildlife Commission.

Much of the work will include examination of the water quality of the lake, distribution and habitat of the fish, natural history, feeding habits, and if the fish offer only benefits to the area. A great deal of time will also be spent in the capturing and tagging of the fish with a special dye.

At present, the fish do not appear to be in danger, but with the growing tourism associated with Lake Waccamaw, the situation could quickly change. Linquist says he knows of only three lakes which support unique species of fish, and the fish could provide benefits yet to be discovered.

Working with Linquist on the study are two former UNCW graduates, Peggy and Randy Shute. The study will also employ some part-time student help.

This study could prove to be invaluable not only in terms of the fish, but in the recognition that it is presently and will in the future bring to UNCW.

Male drop-outs earn more than female graduates

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS)—Who makes more annually—male drop-outs from high school or female college graduates?

Most people might assume the college graduate would earn more, but statistics compiled by the Scientific Manpower Commission indicate that it isn't so. Male drop-outs earned an average $9000 in 1976, while the female graduates averaged only $7000. And the commission's report showed that statistics like these are consistent for almost every profession.

The commission, a private, non-profit organization of the country's major scientific societies, recently catalogued the position of women and minorities in all the professional fields, including the sciences, engineering, arts, humanities, and education. In the resulting 288-page report, they discovered that, while the last decade of equal opportunity mandates had contributed to a sharp increase of women and minorities getting degrees of all kinds, the laws apparently aren't that effective in the job market.

Minority and majority women, the report finds, are still passed over for jobs, and slighted in salary and promotion. This, the report says, holds true in the government, academia and the private sector.

Specifically, the report found: Unemployment rates for professionally-trained women continue to be two-to-five times higher than for men in the same field with the same level of training, and the gap increases at higher degree levels. For example, among all 1977 history doctorates, 2.9 percent of the men were unemployed and seeking employment, compared with 10.4 percent of the women. In the social sciences, the unemployment rate for male doctors was one percent, while women's was four percent.

Except for beginning engineers and new bachelor's level chemists employed by industry, professional women's salaries were lower than those of men with comparable training and experience at every age, every degree level, in every field and with every type of employer.

The federal government, a major employer of professionals, also appears to discriminate. Women of all races still lag well behind their male counterparts in grade level, and thus salary. For example, the government employs almost 1700 microbiologists, of whom 31 percent are women and 6.5 percent are black, with one-third of blacks being women. The average grade of the men is 12.17 compared to 11.31 for women, translating to average salaries of $23,260 for men and $18,200 for women.

While employment of women in higher education has grown slowly through the 1970's, their progress up the academic ladder is still far behind that of men. Among academically employed Ph.D.'s in the sciences and engineering who earned those Ph.D.'s between 1970 and 1974, 4.4 percent of the men but only two percent of the women have reached the rank of professor. Among men, almost 30 percent are associate professors, but less than 18 percent of the women have reached this rank.

Tolkien display in library

J.R.R. Tolkien, the author of "The Lord of the Rings," "The Hobbit," and "The Silmarillion" became the inspiration for a collection of decoupage by Jimmy Newton, a senior majoring in Criminal Justice. "It's a hobby. I started doing it about the summer of 1974.

My brother-in-law was into antiques and he started me into decoupage," Newton said of his works.

On exhibit through the end of February, Newton's works are housed in the display case in the lobby of the Randall Library. Thirty-nine of Newton's 50 works are on display.

Careers in education find some fields crowded, others open for prospective teachers

by Elizabeth Shoaf
SeaHawk Contributor

A career in the field of education is a possibility that most college prospects consider before making a final decision. UNCW now produces approximately 70 student teachers each semester to complete their final studies before receiving their diploma.

There are reports that the field of education is closed as far as teaching jobs are concerned. This is true in the fields of English, social studies, and physical education, according to Dr. Calvin Doss, associate professor of education. However, these fields of study are usually the ones in which the most students concentrate.

Doss adds that all fields of education are not completely closed. Math, science, and special education teachers are very much in demand. Most students that concentrate their studies in this field usually have relatively no problems with job hunting.

Graduate studies and a masters degree are very important in most areas of education. Only about one-fourth of the teachers in southeastern North Carolina have a masters degree. Doss adds that a masters degree is very desirable to have in the education field, and more educators are getting them now.

A graduate degree does have considerable effect on a teacher's salary. With a graduate degree a teacher may start out making $1079 per month, totaling $10,790 in a ten-month work year in North Carolina. If a teacher only has a four-year college degree, the starting pay is $989 per month, or $9,890 for a work year.

Fortunately, there are other alternatives for a student just out of college who cannot find a job. Any job dealing with people is helpful experience for anyone who may wish to teach. Most large companies offer public relations positions, sales jobs and telephone operator and receptionist positions. All of these jobs can offer valuable experience in dealing with people until an education job becomes available.

A student who specializes in one particular field to teach can usually find an alternative job very easily if an education job is not available. A prospective business teacher could almost certainly find work in an office or company, and an English major would receive good practice by writing for a newspaper or other related work. A student who speaks a foreign language well enough to teach it could become a translator or work in foreign public relations.

Although there are not many specific organizations to help a teacher find a job, there are usually agencies available who will help find a job for a nominal fee. These organizations are not always guaranteed to find a student the type of job he or she desires, however.

The Office of Career Planning and Placement, located in the Alderman Building, room 207, helps UNCW students and alumni develop their career plans. This office publicizes job openings and holds recruiting visits which may help students find the education job they desire.

Potential development of computer use in classroom evaluated

College teachers maintain essential roles in educating students even when computers are used in classroom instruction, studies by Educational Testing Service (ETS) have found.

Two evaluations conducted by ETS at the community college level also demonstrated that while computer systems designed to teach students have not reached the stature often claimed for them, the potential remains for their continued development and application.

Both evaluations were sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

One of the computer-assisted instruction systems examined, TICCIT (Time-Shared, Interactive, Computer-Controlled Information Television), was devised to provide a complete and independent alternative to entire college courses in selected subjects, allowing students to exercise control over the pace and sequence of their lessons.

The PLATO (Programmed Logic for Automatic Teaching Operations) system was created to fit into a regular teacher-managed study program and supplement college course work. In the demonstration of PLATO evaluated, the system accounted for less than one-third of total class instruction.

In an evaluation directed by Donald L. Alderman of ETS, TICCIT was found to have had a positive impact on student achievement. Students able to complete a course using TICCIT generally attained higher post-test scores, particularly in mathematics, than those reached by similar students using common teaching practices. Higher achievement in courses given on the TICCIT system was especially evident among students with a strong initial grasp of the subject.

The study also found that TICCIT had a negative effect on the likelihood that a student would complete all requirements for course credit during a single academic term. For example, in mathematics courses at one of the colleges only 16 of every 100 pupils enrolled received a grade with credit during an academic term, compared to an average of 50 percent for lecture classes.

When the subject matter lent itself to active teacher participation, such as in reviewing essays or discussing themes, the gap in completion rates between TICCIT and lecture classes closed.

Student attitudes toward TICCIT were more often less favorable than toward conventional teaching methods, but when English classes taught on the TICCIT system were supplemented by small group discussion with an instructor, attitudes improved over those expressed for lecture-discussion classes.

ETS's Richard T. Murphy, who directed the PLATO evaluation, and Lola Rhea Appel found no consistent positive or negative effects on student achievement or attrition—the drop-out rate—that could be linked to PLATO's use. The study determined, however, that PLATO provided a medium of instruction with broad appeal to both students and teachers. In fact, PLATO students showed more favorable attitudes towards computers and computer-assisted instruction than non-PLATO students.

About half the students thought that course material presented by PLATO helped them learn better than course material presented in class lectures. Large majorities (70 percent to 90 percent) said they continued their instruction on PLATO beyond the end of class, felt PLATO made good use of examples and illustrations, believed they could make mistakes without embarrassment and could take part in their instruction at each step in the lessons, and expressed a desire to take other PLATO courses.

Observers found that students were attentive to their work, relaxed and enthusiastic, neither confused or frustrated, and able to use PLATO terminals easily.

More than 80 percent of the teachers surveyed said PLATO had a positive effect on student attitudes and achievement, and better than three in five believed PLATO was beneficial to student-student and student-instructor interactions.

A critical factor that accounted for PLATO's high acceptance and usage was the control the teachers had over the system. Each instructor determined how much his students would use it and for what lessons it would be available.

PLATO is a large educational computing network developed at the Computer-based Educational Research Laboratory in Urbana, Ill. The display screen for a PLATO terminal is a panel that can provide simple repetitive skills to give students practice in basic concepts or relay graphics to illustrate principles in the physical sciences and simulate laboratory experiments. Input is channeled through a type-writer-like keyboard.

Developed by the MITRE Corporation, TICCIT combines minicomputers and television receivers in its instructional system. The terminal is a color television set modified to accept digital computer signals and translate them into display frames. Students use an electronic keyboard that accompanies the television receivers to communicate with the computer system.

In the PLATO evaluation, lessons were computerized and integrated into some accounting, biology, chemistry, English and mathematics courses at five Illinois community colleges. More than 8000 students participated in this study.

The TICCIT evaluation involved over 5000 students in nearly 200 sections of certain algebra and English composition courses at two community colleges, one each in Arizona and Virginia.

Atlantis serves as literary outlet for students, represents UNCW

Atlantis, the UNCW literary magazine, is a biannual publication funded by allocations from student government. Published each semester, Atlantis serves as a literary outlet in which students have published original creative writing and art.

Divided into three independent sections, the Atlantis staff chooses from submitted poems, short stories and art the selections which, in their opinion, best reflect the creative and aesthetic principles of Atlantis. After publication, the Atlantis is copyrighted under existing U.S. copyright laws.

Atlantis also serves as a representative of the UNCW campus to schools and communities throughout the country.

Dr. Fred Tarpley, chairman of the language and literature department of the East Texas State University graduate school in Commerce, Texas, has referred to the Atlantis as "an outstanding literary magazine with substantial writing and fascinating artwork."

Atlantis Editor Richard Long says that this is an honored accolade for UNCW student writers and artists, as it is their efforts and creativity that make Atlantis the respected magazine it is.

The deadline for poetry and short story submissions to be considered for the spring edition of Atlantis is Friday, March 16.

In order to continue the quality of the Atlantis cover, the editors have established a biannual Atlantis cover contest. Submissions may be oils, watercolors, prints or photographs. Entries should not exceed 30 x 40 inches in size, as reproduction of a larger work would impair its quality. Also, because of reproduction costs, the editors ask that the work be limited to four colors.

The winner of the contest will receive $100 and have the work printed as the Atlantis cover, with the stipulation that the piece of art becomes property of UNCW. Atlantis editors feel that such a contest will obtain for the university a respected and varied art collection. Deadline for submissions is Friday, March 2.

Atlantis encourages students to submit their poetry, prose or art. The projected date for distribution on campus is April 30.

Communications majors to organize club

by Tom Lamont
Seahawk Contributor

"Communication is the process through which we develop our individual humanity and our relationships with others."

With this concept in mind, speech communications majors are forming a Communications Club.

According to Mrs. Betty Jo Welch, coordinator of the speech communications program, the club will serve several functions for the communications student and the university as a whole.

For the student majoring in communications, the club will provide valuable ideas concerning career advancement and will discuss job opportunities that will lead to those careers. The students will be able to share ideas with each other, work together on club projects and learn new aspects of communication such as how to operate video equipment.

The club will also serve as a social outlet for communications students.

For the university as a whole, the club will act as a service organization. Of primary importance in the club's list of early projects is increasing the effectiveness of communication on the UNCW campus. Looking into the possibility of having a post office branch on campus is an example of how the club could serve the university.

The club also plans to bolster WLOZ radio and the now dormant videotape committee, as well as any class or program on campus that involves communications.

Concerning the club, some communications students had these reflections. Artesa Bohannon, a junior, said, "I think the club should become involved with some media-oriented projects with the local media here in Wilmington." Greta Anita Lint, a senior, added these possibilities: "I would like to see the club do some type of work with radio and television by producing their own shows weekly for either campus or community audiences. The potential does exist to develop such an opportunity and utilize it for the students, faculty, administration and community."

The club's first step, required of all new clubs, is to write a constitution, find an adviser and receive an affiliation from the Student Government Association.

The UNCW Communications Club will begin this first step when it

The UNCW Communications Club began this first step when it met on Wednesday, Jan. 31.

Anyone who would like to join should contact Mrs. Welch in Kenan 107-D for further information.

Finding a rewarding summer job may not be as difficult as it seems

By Ralph W. Deangelis
Campus Digest News Service

During the summers between your college years do you spend time working in the mailroom at your dad's company? Do you hear from friends who have exciting jobs learning about the career they are going to pursue? Or the neat and different people they get to meet?

Finding a rewarding summer job isn't as hard as it may seem. Many students all over the country obtain jobs which allow them to apply their college skills while earning money to meet next year's expenses.

The key to getting that exciting job you want is to begin looking early. This way you will get the first shot at jobs as they open.

By starting early you can get the best opportunity to pick and choose between various jobs and salaries. Being able to take the time to choose can make the difference in a rewarding summer job or one which only provides three months of drudgery.

When looking for the job itself there are a few hints which will serve to make the task easier. Often a job might be lying right under your nose. Instead of counting on dad to get you a job in the mailroom again this year, ask him if there is some position higher up in the company he could help you get. Some companies even offer internships and scholarships for their employees' children.

If nothing is available through either of your parent's place of employment, check to see if they have any friends who could help you find a job or put in a good word for you. Often neighbors and family friends will be glad to help you find a job.

Although these are the easy ways to find a job there are still other ways to try if these fail. Hitting the pavement is perhaps the most popular. A little constructive planning will help make this somewhat difficult task a little easier.

First think about the type of job you would ideally like to find. Realistically, decide what you are able to do, both in terms of learning ability and past experience. This information should also be synthesized on a short resume. If you are not sure how to go about making a resume get in contact with a high school business education teacher

She or he would be happy to explain the process to you. (Help with resumes is also available on campus through the Career Planning and Placement office, 205 Alderman.)

A resume also helps the employer to quickly go over your education, jobs and interests that you may have. This also lets the employer know you are serious about what you want.

Draw up a list of the places you are going to visit in your search for a job. Be willing to wait and don't get discouraged by a few refusals and brush-offs. Be ready with specific dates when you will be able to start work. Also be prepared to follow up on any indefinite promises of a job; be firm but not pushy.

Dress nicely, generally as you would for the job, and present an attractive personality. Remember the most important thing is to appear competent and able to do the job. If you are able to do this it should be easy to convince someone to hire you.

Legislature again fails to gather quorum

The Student Legislature failed to gather a quorum last Thursday and thus could not conduct business. This is the third time in the last four meetings that a quorum was not obtained.

In addition to absenteeism, the legislature is also being plagued by a run of resignations. At the beginning of this semester, there were five representative seats and the sophomore class vice-presidency were vacant.

Last week, Senior Vice-president Karin Whaley and Senator Tammy Lancaster submitted their resignations, citing disappointment in the performance of the legislature.

The legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in room 218 of the Chemistry Building.

Organization of professors seeks to guard academic freedom

by Bobby Parker
Editor

"Red book."

To an American housewife, it may mean a popular national magazine.

To a Chinese communist, it means a collection of a generation of Maoist teachings.

But to many university professors across the country, it means a comprehensive statement of academic freedom that has been the basic philosophy of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) for more than 35 years.

Dr. James Megivern, chairman of UNCW's Department of Philosophy and Religion and president-elect of the North Carolina conference of AAUP, describes the association as a watchdog organization of academic standards.

The "red book" outlines not only the principle of academic freedom as advocated by AAUP, but also deals with such issues as tenure, discrimination, professional ethics, and university government.

Megivern, who will replace the state presidency in March, says that the most important benefits for faculty members through AAUP can be viewed in "global terms." That is, the benefits will usually be collective rather than individual for faculty members.

Megivern sees the methods of AAUP in promoting high professional standards in university-level education as twofold: administrators are kept conscious of their responsibility to maintain good working conditions in the academic community and faculty members are challenged to measure up to quality standards.

This, says Megivern, leads to a "mutual improvement" within the educational system.

"Shared authority"

One of the basic concerns of AAUP in recent years is a concept of "shared authority" in university administration. The association's statement calls for cooperative action among all components of the university community—administrators, faculty and students.

Megivern attributes this growing concern to the "intrusion of inappropriate models into university governments," including the "military model" in which the chair of authority is a strict hierarchy and, more predominantly, the "industrial model" in which the college is run more and more like a business.

Megivern expresses particular concern over the industrial model which he says is a "far different model and an inferior model . . . for higher education" than the traditional "collegial model."

"The trend to prepare administrators in business administration is producing a different kind of administrator," Megivern observes, noting that in the past administrators have usually risen through the ranks of the faculty and thus gained firsthand understanding of the "shared authority" concept.

Megivern cautions that modelling a university after a business will lead to restrictive contractual arrangements for faculty that would mean teachers might be "punching a time clock." This would be adverse to AAUP's principle of academic freedom, according to Megivern.

Eliminating the suspicions

Although it may seem that university administrators and AAUP would often be in opposition, Megivern says that is usually not the case.

In North Carolina, for example, Megivern states that UNC President William Friday has been very open in dealing with AAUP. The state conference also has a good lobbying relationship with the state legislature.

Admitting that five years ago there may have been "suspicion that there could be an adversary relationship" between administrators and AAUP members, Megivern says that AAUP has "done away with the fear" through an honest approach to problems which affect both sides.

At UNCW, which has had active AAUP members since 1969, Megivern points to the fact that Chancellor William Wagoner once used the association's newsletter to communicate to the faculty as a sign that there is very little adversity.

Not a labor union

The suspicions that once existed (and that still exist in some areas) might be attributed to an opposition to teacher unionization and an association of AAUP with unionization.

But Megivern emphasizes that unionization is not the purpose of AAUP and that the association only functions as a bargaining union in a small percentage of local chapters nationwide. Megivern says that AAUP initially rejected the idea of collective bargaining because its members felt it was "not appropriate to education," but he adds that the association now accepts bargaining "with reluctance" if a chapter's members vote for it.

Megivern says that teacher bargaining is usually left to other organizations such as the National Educators Association and the American Federation of Teachers (an AFL-CIO subsidiary). AAUP provides a "much more important model in academics that does not rely on the confrontations of the labor movement," he continues.

However, Megivern does say that a sluggish economy, low morale among faculty or poor administration could lead more faculty members to collective bargaining.

A complaint filed against a school for violation of AAUP's principles will lead to an investigation by the association's national office and may result in censure of the school at the annual national convention. Megivern estimates there are five to six such censures each year which remain in effect until the situation is corrected to AAUP's satisfaction.

The result of a censure is a "black-ball" effect: potential applicants for faculty positions may avoid the censured school which would thus lose a chance to hire good teachers. But because of the large pool of applicants and general economic conditions today, the AAUP censure is less powerful than it once was, according to Megivern.

A major issue that AAUP is currently examining is retirement policies and the implications of a recent law raising the mandatory retirement age to 70.

40 members of UNCW

Most schools throughout the country have AAUP chapters or at least several members. UNCW's chapter includes about 40 faculty, approximately one-sixth of the total faculty.

"The chief reason for many sympathetic faculty members not belonging to AAUP is the dues," Megivern says. Dues can be as much as $40 per year, although they are graduated according to salary.

Other reasons for low membership may be that members and non-members alike usually benefit from AAUP's activity and whether the faculty member has been exposed to AAUP during education or the first years on the job.

"There is much more support for (AAUP) and appreciation for the role of AAUP (now) especially on the national level as a watchdog of academic freedom," Megivern says.

Faculty members who choose to join, Megivern says, benefit because they are participating in "maintaining a visible segment of the academic community advocating improved standards."

The UNCW chapter publishes a newsletter on campus which is sent to all faculty members as well as non-members. It also sponsors the UNCW Forum, a series which appears weekly in a Wilmington newspaper.

Conservation Directory available

The 24th edition of the Conservation Directory, a comprehensive listing of all organizations, agencies and officials concerned with natural resource use and management in the United States and Canada, has just been published by the National Wildlife Federation.

As the largest such guide in the U.S., the 271-page 1979 Conservation Directory lists the names and addresses of about 1650 conservation and environmental organizations and more than 11,000 individuals—from the African Wildlife Leadership Foundation to Zero Population Growth, Inc., from the Northeastern Bird Banding Association to the Guam Science Teachers Association.

The directory lists key personnel in federal and state agencies and departments, members of Congress and those Congressional committees concerned with conservation and natural resources; conservation and environmental offices of foreign governments; U.S. and Canadian fish and game administrators; and national, provincial and territorial citizens' agencies and groups.

There are sections on the major U.S. colleges and universities which offer professional training for careers in conservation and natural resources; wildlife, environmental, and other conservation publications; and sources of audio-visual materials. The annual publication also lists all U.S. National Wildlife refuges, forests, parks, and seashores.

Copies of the 1979 Conservation Directory are available for $4 from the National Wildlife Federation, 1412 16th St. NW, Washington, DC 20036.

Lack of awareness and concern for Title IX delays its implementation (CPS)--It took East Carolina University student Debbie Newby months of petitioning and pleading to get action on violations of a law that had been on the books for six years.

In the end, Newby, along with four other ECU students, persuaded ECU administrators to begin treating the gross inequities between women's and men's sports--differences they knew were prohibited by federal Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972. The biggest impediment, Newby recalls, was that both ECU officials and the ECU lawyer who assisted the students "weren't very informed at all about Title IX--or rather they didn't realize the importance of the law."

Lack of awareness and concern about Title IX may have blocked broad implementation of Title IX, observers say, but the most potent factor may be the lack of guidance and enforcement from the federal government.

Since its passage in 1972, Title IX has prohibited sex discrimination in schools receiving federal support. Yet it took three years for the U.S.

Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) to come up with how-to rules, whereupon it gave schools three years to comply with the regulations.

But at the July 1978 deadline, schools in complete compliance with Title IX were the exception rather than the rule. Punishment for non-compliance was withdrawal of federal funds (which amount to $12.2 billion for all colleges), but no school has yet been penalized.

Faced with such a dismal track record, HEW came out last month with its toughest set of rules yet. By next September, HEW says, schools will have to prove they are not discriminating against women in sports by showing "substantially equal per-capita expenditures" for male and female athletes in such "financially measurable areas" as scholarships, recruitment, equipment, travel and publicity.

Spending equal amounts on men and women is of necessity an implicit goal of sexual equality. But HEW had never demanded dollar-for-dollar equality. Spending more on men's sports was okay as long as "the patterns of expenditure did not result in a disparate effect on opportunity."

Thus, the new equal-spending rule is turning a lot of heads in athletic departments and in intercollegiate athletic organizations. Many men's athletic directors fear it will "force them to weaken men's programs substantially in order to pump more money into women's programs," as William Davis, president of the University of New Mexico and a member of the Office of Civil Rights task force on Title IX warns.

If the big men's sports programs like football and basketball are equalized, the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) estimates it could cost most large colleges between $200,000 and $600,000. Or, shudders Davis, it may even eliminate football at some schools.

However, the big game enthusiasts may have little to worry about. The new Title IX regulations also allow unequal spending if the differences are "based on non-discriminatory factors such as the costs of a particular sport, or the scope of competition (national as opposed to local or regional)." This "loophole," says many women's athletic directors, will allow continued large-scale funding to maintain the big-time male sports.

Gloria Ray, director of women's athletics at the University of Tennessee, acknowledges that sports such as football require more money. But once those expenses are deducted, she told the Chronicle of Higher Education, "you should get a realistic figure for what a fair, equal-per-capita expenditure should be under Title IX proposals."

Still, various men's athletic organizations, like the NCAA, are not willing to chance such compromises. At their recent convention, NCAA officials resolved to continue their opposition to "HEW attempts to dictate uniform federal program goals and standards." The NCAA has maintained that Congress never intended Title IX to be applied to intercollegiate athletics. It is currently appealing a recent court ruling, which dismissed its two-year-old suit because the NCAA was not an educational institution.

The NCAA has also joined with a coalition of colleges in a lobbying effort to have the proposals modified.

Despite the current controversy, the most accurate forecast may prove to be that voiced by Ray of the University of Tennessee. "I don't think that it's really going to be any different than it has been in the past. It would be good if HEW was going to look at all schools but, realistically, HEW isn't going to come in and look at you unless it gets a complaint."

Ray feels that the best results will be gained by women working through their own local administrators, which sounds a lot like Debby Newby's theory.

The ECU women's athletic department's budget has doubled since her complaint, as has the scholarship fund. It gets recruitment money for the first time. The basketball team now has a full-time coach, and women in ECU's eight sports will be able to use three locker rooms instead of one. According to Newby, it's possible for five students and a lot of time and patience to make an impact where HEW can't.

Program

programming," adding that "they have no expertise on what is the best buy or the best proposition."

Contents Chair Cole, "we shouldn't have to have their approval. They are a finance committee, not a programming committee."

Ex-legislator Whaley agrees that the requirement to re-approach the finance committee is "really not fair." "If any group has a right to try something new," she adds "it is (the) dance (committee), Homecoming and especially fine arts. They've always been well managed over the years."

Senior class president Blanton, however, argues that any group asking for student money must tell what they would use the money for, and she says the Program Board did not do so in its original budget request. Senator Sanders, in concurrence, feels the requirement is necessary "to keep some measure of control" over the board. Junior vice-president Allen also supports the idea, saying that "the finance committee has just as much expertise as the Program Board."

Aside from Homecoming funding, both Greene and Cole also dislike the method of allocating other committee funds. Both would like to see the program board receive a lump sum of funds rather than have each constituent committee receive its allocation separately. Says Greene, "We miss a lot of specialized entertainment because we don't have a committee for it. Anything that doesn't fit into five or six slots that the Legislature budgets isn't funded."

He also feels that the board's flexibility is hampered by the allocation system. "Say dance," he explains, "isn't being received well, they can move funds to, say, coffee-house which has good attendance and enthusiasm." With a lump sum, Greene feels the board could "develop different types of programming, not now available."

Sanders and Whaley feel that a lump size allocation would be a good idea in the future. Blanton and Williams agreed, but have reservations. "I think a lump sum would help the problem a lot," says Williams, "but right now I can't see it." Blanton would support such an allocation only "after the Program Board gets going."

Legislator Allen feels that the funding method will "probably" change, but he is suspicious that it is a prelude to taking all funding responsibility for the board's activities away from the Student Legislature. "There is definitely a move," he says "to grant them a set amount of student fees."

In fact, both Cole and Greene support automatic funding for the Program Board. Says Greene, "there is not a total indication of exactly where the authority lies. Program Board is doing its best, but all their decisions can be overturned by the Legislature or finance committee."

Cole feels that uncertainty about funding causes the board to miss out on many "block bookings." As evidence of that, she cites the experience of delegates to the last National Entertainment Conference who were unable to sign contracts. One act which the Program Board will bring later this spring for $900 would have been available for much less if they could have been contracted at the convention. The reason was that programmers, if they were certain of funds, could have scheduled them when they would be in the area anyway.

None of the legislators contacted favored a plan to grant the Program Board funds directly from student fees independent of their control. Blanton, however, conceded that "it will be given to them in the long run." Senator Sanders went further, candidly admitting that while he opposed the idea as a senator, if he was an executive officer, he'd "like to see it."

Some legislators have privately criticized Greene for "dominating" the board's decision making policies. Greene, however, defends himself by stating that he is an adviser only, and can not make contracts or sign checks. Cole agrees, saying that "the Student Activities Office has been a tremendous resource. Not to use it would be stupid."

Both Cole and Greene feel that criticism of the board is unfair considering the restrictions placed on it by the Legislature. And while hoping for funding changes, they speak confidently of the upcoming Homecoming celebration and "super weekend" which will follow in April. Some students, such as Whaley also seem at least somewhat optimistic about the board's future.

"We haven't got the great amount of coordination they promised, but we haven't given them a chance to get rolling either," she says. Legislator Allen, however, expresses a more gloomy view. "They need to get a lot of good and real interested people," he says, and adds rhetorically "Where will you find people like that in Wilmington?"

HOMECOMING '79

Ten Years Together

What was on your mind ten years ago? Was it Super Bowl III or Vietnam? Maybe you were getting excited about man going to the moon or those amazing Mets. The year 1969 was the end of an era—an era of change in music and lifestyle. It was the end of an era of political and social violence. But here at Wilmington College, it was a beginning known to us as the University of North Carolina of Wilmington.

This year's Homecoming festivities celebrate ten years together. The Program Board and Homecoming Committee have put together six days of activities to close out the decade in style. On Monday, Feb. 12, Richard Dreyfuss and Marsha Mason star in Neil Simon's warm comedy about laughing and falling in love again, "The Goodbye Girl."

Tuesday gets a crackling start at 6:30 p.m. with the pre-game bonfire sponsored by APO. Immediately following the bonfire, the Seahawks do battle with East Carolina University in the season's second meeting. Capping the halftime ceremonies will be the crowning of the queen for 1979 and an introduction of some of the queens from the past ten years.

The midpoint of Homecoming '79 will add a touch of Valentine's Day. UNCW will host its own version of the Dating Game. Laughter and love abound and even Cupid himself may make a fleeting appearance.

Thursday's accent is talent. Kenan Auditorium is center stage for Andy Wahlberg and the Loco-Motion Circus. Wahlberg woos his audiences with song and humor in a manner that can only be described as unique. And Loco-Motion Circus tumbles their way into your lives with a message of humor, happiness and health. Rounding out the musical offerings are the talents of Triangle. From Raleigh, Triangle will appear Friday evening in the Goodwood Tavern.

Saturday, Feb. 17, Homecoming '79 features SYMBOL 8 at the National Guard Armory. This is the largest available space with alcoholic beverage privileges and surely the 400 tickets will go quickly, so get yours early. Certainly this will be a special evening in a very special Homecoming.

Where will you be ten years from now? Who can really say for sure. What is for sure is that wherever you are, when someone asks what you did ten years ago, you can say you were a part of Homecoming '79.

SYMBOL 8 to appear for Homecoming dance

SYMBOL 8 will be performing at their finest at this year's homecoming dance on Feb. 17, at 8 p.m. in the National Guard Armory on Carolina Beach Road. A complete package of musical talents mixing from jazz, rock and soul backgrounds form their music, which only exemplifies "self on stage." There is a massive amount of expressiveness within the group that must be visualized to be understood.

SYMBOL 8 has spent months writing, arranging, recording and evaluating their unique style of music. It is with this dedication that the band is approaching climatic success.

SYMBOL 8 has appeared at numerous night clubs throughout the Southeast and has showcased at four national entertainment conventions. Besides being a fantastic dance band together, each member moves, sings, and plays with a controlled energy that leads to their final objective. Their objective "is to successfully entertain and achieved prominence in the world of entertainment." The Program Board is looking forward to this outstanding band providing an evening of good dancing music. Tickets will go on sale beginning Friday, Feb. 9, in the lobbies of the Pub and cafeteria. Tickets are $2.50 each.

Loco-Motion Circus: Vaudeville, slapstick

On Thursday, Feb. 15, at 9 p.m., the Program Board is sponsoring a unique human performance presentation by the Loco-Motion Circus. The circus, consisting of three highly talented and superbly conditioned young men named Bounce, Flip and Cyrus, will take you back to the vaudeville, slapstick era. Their repertoire includes accordion accompaniment to the juggling of flaming torches, balls, boxes, as well as to Chaplinesque slapstick comedy drama; Mechanical Man mime sketches; two- and three-man Adagio hand-body balancing and acrobatics; a display of a choreographed unicycle ballet; prat-fall clowning; comedy; and a message of health.

The Loco-Motion Circus has appeared on "ABC's Wide World of Sports" Saturday night special from the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

Their high velocity show is educational and fascinating with the variety of characters, props and comedic movements.

Don't miss these supermen of the comedy world.

'Goodbye Girl' will be Fine Arts movie

The UNCW Fine Arts Committee will present the very popular Neil Simon's picture "The Goodbye Girl," on Monday, Feb. 12, at 8 p.m., in Kenan Auditorium.

With this showing the Fine Arts Committee will initiate a unique admission policy to this love story. Being so near to St. Valentine's Day, admission can be obtained at one-half price when the ad for the movie, found elsewhere in this paper, is presented at the box office. Otherwise the admission, except for those possessing season passes, will be 50 cents for UNCW students with ID cards and $1 for all non-students.

"The Goodbye Girl" by Neil Simon is the happiest and funniest of comedies, yet it also provides an excellent showcase for the talents of Marsha Mason and Richard Dreyfuss.

The motion picture is about laughing and falling in love again-about the warmth we all want more of, the bloopers we all pull and the pure joy of just "hanging in there." Time Magazine shouted that it was "one of the best pictures of the year," and Gene Shalit of NBC-TV called "The Goodbye Girl" a joyous comedy--"just what the doctor ordered."

Richard Dreyfuss won an Oscar as best actor of the year for his role. The picture itself garnered four Golden Globe Awards. Produced by Warner Brothers and directed by Herbert Ross, "The Goodbye Girl" is rated PG and is in color.

Coffeehouse to feature guitar, violin and voices of Triangle

Triangle will kick off Homecoming weekend at 8 p.m. Friday in the Goodwood Tavern. A unique and highly pleasing blend of guitar, violin and voices, Triangle offers a tasteful selection of songs from the contemporary folk music repertoire, and draws occasionally as well from country, popular, rock, religious and show music. The group's harmonious treatment of numbers by such songwriters as James Taylor, John Prine, Paul Simon, Bob Dylan, Leonard Cohen, Don McLean--among many others--in addition to some original material, makes for a refreshing change of pace from today's standard musical fare. Although they have been playing together informally for several years, Triangle formed officially only recently.

Pattie Bunce, vocals, originally from the Upper Midwest, studied voice for three years in Iowa, has performed numerous roles in the musical theatre and has sung with two folk-rock bands at various locations in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Jack Le Sueur, guitar and vocals, studied and performed on various wind instruments throughout public school in Pennsylvania and college in North Carolina before turning all of his musical attention to the guitar. After four years in the Navy he worked professionally as a folk singer in Washington, D.C., then moved back to North Carolina, where he has continued to play and sing songs at a variety of locations and events.

David McKnight, violin, a lifelong native of North Carolina, studied classical violin in the Charlotte public schools and played with orchestras through college. After graduation, and while he was working as a newspaper writer and editor, he became an accomplished and versatile fiddler as well as a violinist, a skill that served him well in 1978 when he walked from Manteo to Murphy during an unsuccessful campaign for the U.S. Senate.

As its name suggests, then Triangle comprises three distinct musical personalities each exploring in his or her own individual direction and yet at the same time each reinforcing the others and combining with them to form a strong, integrated whole. The result is exciting, first-rate contemporary music that simply is not to be found anywhere else.

Powerful bass voice, unique guitar style make Wahlberg an original Andy Wahlberg, by any standard, is a one of a kind performer. On Thursday, Feb. 15, 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium you have an opportunity to see a man you'll long remember. From his 6'7" size to the 83-year-old harp guitar he plays, Wahlberg is an original.

But that which is most unusual is not immediately obvious.

On stage, he is a high energy showman. With an emotional, powerful bass voice and unique acoustic guitar style, he is a sensitive soloist who truly captures the imagination of his listeners.

Wahlberg grew up in and around Coconut Grove, Florida, where Miami's counter-culture flourished. It was in the early 70's on the coffeehouse circuit that he first gained recognition for his bawdy singing style. There, performing with Richie Havens, Ira Sullivan and others, his own songwriting and guitar style began to take shape. Having since performed on numerous American and European stages, Wahlberg possesses the credentials of a seasoned musician, and the energy of a star about to nova.

Wahlberg exhibits his understanding of life's many facets through his graphic portrayals of the human condition. He is a highly creative songwriter, and along with his own works a typical evening includes the music of Stephen Sondheim, jazz great "Fats" Waller, Leo Kottke, Kenny Rankin and Jacques Brel, whose music inspired the successful off Broadway review, "Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris".

From lightning-fast renditions of Leo Kottke twelve string solos, to tales of the ferocity of life in the sailors quarter of Amsterdam, to the humorous blues parody "If You See Kay", Andy Wahlberg's style is moving. He sings of the terrifying passionate world in which we live, but creates a world of his own whenever he sings.

UNCW 'Dating Game' lets you live out a fantasy

O.K., Number 3, tell me how you would describe your perfect date?

Have you ever wanted to live out your fantasy for a perfect date? On Wednesday, Feb. 14 (a day near and dear all our hearts), the Program Board will sponsor the new version of The Dating Game. During the mid-point of activities surrounding this year's Homecoming, contestants will vie for the opportunity to dine with the date of their choice at the Bridge Tender.

Michael Bradley will host UNCW's first dating game beginning at 8 p.m. in King Auditorium. Students, faculty and staff will all participate in the competition and all will undoubtedly reveal some special secret of their dating lives.

Be a part of an evening that promises to be filled with hilarity and where you may meet someone very special.

Voting for Homecoming queen

Voting for Homecoming Queen will be held Thursday and Friday, February 8 and 9 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Voting will be held in the Pub and in the cafeteria.

Students must bring their ID cards in order to vote.

Hosteling: High adventure, low budget

Discover a quiet mountain stream, unravel the mysteries of an ancient abbey, become a part of cosmopolitan Paris or London. American Youth Hostels (AYH), specialists in low-cost travel for over 45 years, offers some creative ways to see the world.

Most of the Virginia-based organization's 70 trips are designed for those who want to see the world under their own steam—by bicycle, foot or canoe. Varying from six to 44 days, from bicycling in Hawaii to backpacking in the Canadian Rockies to sightseeing in Moscow, the trips share one common element, hosteling.

Hosteling is high adventure on a low budget. It is living out of backpacks and saddlebags and staying in hostels, low-cost overnight travel accommodations. It is for the young at heart, and not, as the name implies, for only the young in age. AYH offers 25 trips for adults (21 years and over), both in the United States and abroad.

American Youth Hostels' free "1979 Highroad to Adventure" travel brochure describes each of the trips. In addition to these pre-planned trips, AYH's travel department will design and make arrangements for organizers of special groups who wish to create their own tour plans.

Groups are composed of seven to nine members and a trained AYH leader. AYH groups follow definite itineraries, yet are free to make group decisions along the way. Abroad, groups stay primarily in youth hostels. In the United States and Canada, AYH groups stay both in hostels and at campgrounds.

"Saddlebag Special," a four-week cycling trip through England, France, Belgium and the Netherlands, is one of the most popular European trips. Both a youth and an adult "Saddlebag Special" group are planned this summer.

"Alpine Ramble" is a six-week youth backpacking trip through some of the most spectacular, unspoiled scenery in Europe. Travel from Chamonix, France, to Innsbruck, Austria. Hiking is interspersed with short hops by train and bus.

A "Whale of a Trip" is the first of a new kind of study/travel trip AYH is offering through which college credit can be earned. Participants spend eight days in April aboard a modern diesel-powered ship sailing off the coast of southern California, studying the magnificent grey whale.

Student suing for tuition

(CPS)--Parents can be a student's best friend at tuition-paying time. But if they're not, more and more students are finding way to impose a friendship, with help from the local courthouse.

That's the case, at least, in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. Judges there report that "hundreds" of students have sued their parents for money to help pay for school in recent years.

Judge John Brosky, administrative head of the county court's family division, told United Press International that lawsuits are usually filed by children of divorced parents, but that children of stable families can and do file suit if they feel their parents should be giving them more money.

Parents are often forced to assist students if the judge determines that the costs won't place an "undue hardship" on them.

Dorm contracts to be available

The Room and Board Contracts for 1979-80 will be available in Office II in Belk Hall starting February 19, 1979. ALL persons, including athletes must sign a contract if a dorm room is desired for 1979-80. Only students taking a minimum course load of twelve (12) semester hours of credit will be eligible to live in the residence halls.

The charges for the 15 meal plan will be $675 per semester and for the 21 meal plan $700 per semester. Four hundred (400) spaces have been reserved for present residence hall students.

Housing contracts will be issued starting February 19, 1979 from 1:30 - 4:30 p.m. in Office II in Belk Hall. (After February 23, 1979, contracts will be issued in the Housing Office in Alderman 201.) Students wishing to reserve a room will be required to make a $50 room deposit. Those individuals desiring to be roommates must turn housing contracts in together.

NOTE TO THE WISE: Of the eight hundred (800) students now living in the residence halls approximately 200 women and 200 men will receive dorm rooms for next year. Make sure you are one of those individuals, get your deposit in early.

UNCW defeats dogs

The UNCW Seahawk basketball team won their fourteenth game of the season last Wednesday, defeating South Carolina State 96-92 at Orangeburg, S.C. The high scoring game featured 29 points from senior forward Dave Wolff and 23 points from reserve John Haskins. Wolff was the games' high rebounder with nine.

The first half was a close battle between two teams having a fine running game. The halftime edge belonged to the Seahawks 52-49. It appeared that UNCW might run away with the contest in the second half as the Seahawks went ahead by thirteen points twice. The Bulldogs plugged away at the lead until they managed to tie the score at 92 with twenty-four seconds remaining. At that point, Delaney Jones went to the free throw line with chance to put UNCW into the lead. Jones hit both free throws, and South Carolina State brought the ball down court trying to score. The Bulldogs missed two shots and after UNCW had grabbed the rebound, John Haskins hit a pair of free throws to put the Seahawks ahead 96-92. State tried to maneuver the ball back down court but the clock ran out on them.

For UNCW the game matched the team's highest point output of the year. For Dave Wolff and John Haskins it meant personal season high point outputs.

Seahawk Sports

Hawks headed for 20-win season

"Danny has learned so much since Garry's injury. If Garry would come back it would be hard to take Danny out of the lineup. Someone else would have to come out."

Mel Gibson

by Dillon Bryant

Four UNCW players combined for 64 points, as the "relaxed" Seahawks dumped Charleston Baptist, 95-78.

Dave Wolff, Danny Davis, John Haskins and Dennis Tobin each contributed 16 points in winning their 15th game of the season.

The Seahawks spent most of the first half doubling-up the score (seven times from 4-2 to 40-20) on the hapless Bucs, now 2-18, and the first eight minutes after the break watching the lead dwindle from a high of 22 points (40-18) to six at 58-52.

"It was touch and go for a while," said coach Mel Gibson, "but I just felt like we could bring them out of the zone anytime."

Baptist stayed packed into a zone despite trailing throughout most of the game and came out of it only after falling behind by 10 points after its early second-half surge.

Danny Davis

UNCW assumed command almost immediately as Haskins scored on a break and three jump shots to push the 'Hawks to a 16-8 bulge just over six minutes into the game. A 12-point Seahawk binge stretched it to 32-12 only seven minutes later.

"I was glad to get the perimeter shooting from Haskins and Tobin," said Gibson.

The 'Hawks, 15-5, travel to Charlotte Thursday to meet the 49'ers of UNCC and then head to Appalachian State Saturday.

The 49'ers are led by all-American candidate Chad Kinch, the 6-3 guard averaging 21.4 points per game. Appalachian, meanwhile, has defeated UNCC this year and have fifteen wins so far.

Intramurals:

Men's basketball features 28 teams

The Sea Puppies, Lahaina Luna, F. Joe's Bar and Grill, Dog Eyes, and the Wilmington "10" are not names one would immediately associate with basketball. Unless, of course, you are familiar with the men's intramural basketball league.

There are twenty-eight different teams in men's basketball this year. These twenty-eight teams are separated into four leagues. Upon watching games between teams in their respective leagues, it becomes obvious that the teams were grouped according to size, talent, and ability.

The "A" league is the toughest league. It is on these teams where you can find UNCW's best basketball players (excluding our fine varsity, of course). In fact some of these young men have, at one time, tried out for Mel Gibson's Seahawks.

Although being on an "A" league team is somewhat prestigious, most of the guys playing in the other leagues are happy right where they are. "Who cares about leagues," says Phil Vanderbosch, Charlotte freshman playing for the Bongers (B league), "Sure, we go all out, but it's all for the fun of it." Freshman Hal Jones, a native Wilmingtonian, agrees. "Our team (Rowdies) was just moved from league C to D," laughed Jones, "but it's still the same game."

But is it the same game from league to league? Gregg Capps, captain of the now "A" league Pi Kappa Phi team, doesn't think so. "We still enjoy playing as much as we did when we were "B" league," says the junior from Dunn, "but our tallest man is 6'2" and we're facing teams with 6'5" and 6'6" centers and forwards. It's hard to be a contender facing those odds."

Several teams, like Pi Kappa Phi and Jones' Rowdies, were subject to league changes over the Christmas holiday. Some teams moved "up" and some moved "down." Whether any of these teams will try to appeal these changes is not known at this time.

Everyone should catch the action of men's intramural basketball one of these nights. These guys play their hearts out twice a week, and with 28 teams, there are games going on in Trask and in Hanover Hall almost every night. If you don't happen to see the best in non-varsity basketball, you are guaranteed to see ten guys having a heck of a lot of fun.

Seahawk swimmers continue record-setting pace despite youth

by Steve Wallace

Coach Dave Allen's Seahawk swimmers continued their record-setting pace during the last week in meets with East Carolina, South Carolina State, Furman and James Madison. According to Coach Allen, the squad averages about five or six records per meet.

UNCW was defeated by a strong ECU team on Jan. 27 in Greenville. The men's score was UNCW, 34; ECU, 79, while our women lost 65-44.

Last Thursday, the UNCW men's team was involved in a record-setting win over South Carolina State, 81-30. Sam O'Leary, a freshman, set a new school record in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:03.28. The freestyle relay team of O'Leary, Jim Baker, Roddy Michalove, and Pete Gratali also set a new school record.

Saturday, at UNCW's dual meet with Furman and James Madison, more records fell. Sam O'Leary broke his own record while winning the 200-yard freestyle (1:45.55) and the 100-yard freestyle (47.53).

Skip Thompson set a new record in the 200-yard individual medley (2:03.11), breaking O'Leary's previous mark. New records were also set by Skip Thompson in the 200-yard backstroke, Mike Malone in the 200-yard breaststroke and the men's relay team in the 400-yard freestyle relay. The UNCW men's team defeated both Furman, 71-39, and James Madison 62-47, while the Seahawk women lost 80-42 to Furman. The UNCW men now have a record of 7-2.

In only their record season ever, the Seahawk swim team is indeed giving an excellent account of itself. "I'm very pleased with what we've done," commented Coach Allen. The team, with five women and 16 men, is almost totally composed of freshmen (only five sophomores).

Coach Allen points to the youth factor "as an advantage because since he has to rely on his freshmen, they have really gotten up for every meet." Most of the Seahawk's opponents swim their upperclassmen, but says Allen, "We're running highly competitive times and I believe we can honestly compete with these schools." Allen emphasizes that, "Every individual on this team has contributed."

The women's team with a 2-3 overall mark, have been plagued by a lack of swimmers. There are only five girls on the team, but they have consistently placed first and second. All five have qualified for the women's nationals in either medley or individual competition.

The next action for the Seahawk swim team will come this Saturday at 3 p.m. against William and Mary, at home. On Feb. 22-24, the Seahawk swimmers will play host for the UNCW Invitational Championship. ECU, the University of Tampa, College of Charleston, and Furman will provide the opposition.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

As you sit as the UNCW basketball games, leafing through your program, stop and think about why you have a program.

"Anyone in a game wants a program," says John Justus. Which is precisely why he produces one for every home game. John Justus is the Sports Information Director of UNCW and the program, along with every other aspect of information and publicity about UNCW sports teams.

Mr. Justus devotes much of his time during the fall and early winter preparing the programs that fans sometimes take for granted but would be lost without. He starts in the fall by selling ads. Without ads the cost of programs would be much higher. As it is, ours is one of the few programs at a division I school that costs only a quarter. Even at that the fans are getting a bargain. This year program size has gone up from twenty pages to thirty-six pages. Ads make up about half of the increase.

What makes the ads go, however, is the content of the program. The constant content was put together way back in the fall. Mr. Justus put together rosters, pictures, scouting reports, etc., and had them ready to go. Then a few days before a game, he will call the school and double-check for any roster changes. He also will write a feature story to be included in the program.

"I wish we could do more," says Mr. Justus, "but it beats anything around for a quarter." This is Mr. Justus' second year at UNCW.

He came here after working in an assistant program with the Atlantic Coast Conference for nine months. When UNCW announced that they were accepting applications for the position of their first Sports Information Director, he applied and, after a nervous wait, was told he had the job. Now he sends out press releases, makes up the basketball press guide, (an interesting item, the press guide has 60 pages and is quite frankly one of the best I've seen) and aids Media personnel in any way he can. He is assisted by Dillon Bryant on many things, including the photographs. One thing you can say for sure about his success—he is the best S.I.D. that UNCW has ever had. Think about that as you read your program the next game.

Women win two

The UNC-Wilmington Women's basketball team, only one point shy of a three-game winning streak, has a relatively slow week ahead with just one game on tap—that coming Friday (Feb. 9) evening in Trask Coliseum when the Lady 'Hawks host UNC-Asheville.

UNCW captured wins over Meredith, 75-57, and Charleston Baptist, 65-59, last week, before dropping a hard-fought 77-76 decision to the North Carolina junior varsity on Sunday.

The She-Hawks missed on both a field goal try and a free throw during the game's final 10 seconds versus the Tar Heel jv's as they failed to put three wins together for the first time this season. UNCW is 4-14 on the year.

Sophomores Jenny Allen (19.7 ppg) and April Lewis (11.9) lead the Lady 'Hawk attack, with freshman Janet Grady also in double figures at 11.4. First-year player Kathy Shands also played extremely well last week, totaling 52 points in the three contests.

Tip-off time for this Friday's UNCW-UNCA clash is 7 p.m. in Trask.

Neil Diamond's 15th LP release headed for certified gold

Usually an unauthorized version of a song only leads to trouble, but in the case of a radio deejay who spiced two solo versions of "Flowers" together the response was just the opposite. The response to the Barbara Streisand and Neil Diamond solos together prompted the two to record "You Don't Bring Me Flowers" and add it to each of their newest albums. Diamond chose to make the song the title of his fifteenth LP in his 15-year career.

Although the duet is a great success, this is not the first time Diamond and Streisand have sung together. The first time was 20 years ago at Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn. The young soprano and baritone were just as great then.

Neil Diamond is one of the best easy-listening male vocalists today. You Don't Bring Me Flowers includes ballads which made Diamond but also includes a "rockish" Diamond which is a different style. The two different styles of Diamond's music are expressed on the two different sides of the LP.

Side one is the traditional Diamond with songs very similar to the autobiographical A Beautiful Noise. Included are "The American Popular Song," which goes on and on, "Forever in Blue Jeans," "Remember Me" written by Diamond, "You've Got Your Troubles," and the duet "Flowers" with Barbara Streisand.

Side two is the new Diamond which is light and flowing but also has a certain feeling of rock expressed in the remaining songs. Included are "The Dancing Bumble Bee/Bumble Boogie," "Mothers and Daughters, Fathers and Sons," "The rest of the LP cuts were all written by Diamond with "Memphis Flyer," "Say Maybe" which is my favorite, and "Diamond Girls" which I can't help thinking tells a little bit about Neil's "girls."

The orchestra featured in the LP adds a flowing link between all of the songs. The orchestration was arranged and conducted by Alan Lindgren and Tom Hensley.

Neil Diamond has previously released 14 LP's which have all been certified gold. I think Diamond just released his fifteenth gold album.

'California Suite' keeps you giggling

Moviegoers, are you ready for a game of verbal ping-pong? Neil Simon certainly hopes so, for his screenplay gives us almost ninety minutes of comical volleys in "California Suite." But with a cast including Jane Fonda, Alan Alda, Maggie Smith, Michael Caine, Richard Pryor, Bill Cosby and Walter Matthaw, how do you pick a winner? The solution is simple: pair them off and may the best character win.

More importantly, though, from the alphabetical introduction, no one character steals the show. In fact, no one gets more than an equal share of screen time but everyone puts on a fine performance and everyone wins. Centered within an elegant hotel on the coast of southern California during Academy Award week, four separate stories weave in and around each other, never quite touching.

Jane Fonda and Alan Alda are divorcees quarreling over the custody of their daughter. Fonda is admirable as a piece-of-the-rock "Newsweek" staffer who discovers that brains are not the only prerequisite for being a mother or a person. It would be nice if more women could have the physique at twenty that Fonda has at forty. Although she comes on as a hard-nose, Alan Alda manages to withstand her bite, getting her to take a U-turn in life.

The daughter is really the winner; she gets to visit Mom in New York, and Dad in California.

Leaving the family affair behind momentarily, the spotlight falls on two Londoners, Maggie Smith and Michael Caine, who visit the states for "Oscar" night. Miss Smith plays an unsure "Oscar" hopeful who indefat stumbles from room to room, two hours before sunrise, scouting for leftovers in the hall. Caine makes for her perfect mate as a "bisexual homosexual" antique dealer who also manages the antiques of his wife with an Englishman's flair: complete with a taste for fine gin and caviar.

With the appearance of Walter Matthaw, we can only wonder what he is doing in the film, or even southern California for that matter. It is a reunion with his swinging big brother who he hasn't seen in years. Matthaw convincingly plays a happily married clod who makes the most of his one day head start on his wife. Walter gets his hands caught in the cookie jar, however, when his brother sends a hooker up to his suite as an unexpected late night treat on the eve of his wife's early arrival.

On the physical side, there are Bill Cosby and Richard Pryor as two bumbling M.D.'s on a long overdue vacation with their wives. Their troubles get an early start as the good doctors manage to steer into a major freeway pile-up while enroute to the hotel. Besides being misfits, Pryor and Cosby develop a mutual dislike for each other which culminates in a winner-take-all tennis match between the couples. Tempers flare as the match goes on long after the game is over. At times their acting seems overstressed; perhaps professional comics feel they have to work harder.

In general, the casting is well done. That the characters seem particularly suited to their roles is perhaps the most notable aspect of the film. The dialogue is an unending barrage of one-liners which would tire many viewers if there were not so many stories spinning about at one time. However, at times the verbal flings are just too spontaneous, calling attention to themselves and reminding us that actors and actresses are merely memorizing lines. The purpose of the film is too obvious: keep them laughing. It achieves a compromise—it keeps you giggling.

Take some chapstick along for dry lips, just in case. "California Suite" might catch you off guard when its humor hits its mark. (Now playing at the Olander Cinema.)

Adult movie filmed in quiet of institute's library

(CPS)—The film "Debbie Does Dallas" is not an instructional film about libraries. The film's star, Bambi Woods, is not an inquisitive freshman who enjoys exploring the stacks.

Officials at Brooklyn's Pratt Institute learned this last week when the local adult theatre showed "Debbie," which includes 13 minutes filmed in the campus' turn-of-the-century-style library, gymnasium and sauna. The movie features numerous explicit sexual encounters among the characters, including a scene of group sex in the sauna.

Vice-president Joseph Azzinaro told Associated Press that last summer a group of producers came to campus and identified themselves as a filming company called "School Days."

"They told us they wanted to make an educational film on the library—how it operated, how the reference library works, etc.," Azzinaro explained.

Azzinaro said it isn't uncommon for film crews to come to Pratt, and that a Doctor Pepper commercial was being filmed on the steps of the library at the same time as "Debbie" was unfolding inside. But he admits that he "should have known better. 'School Days' does sound like a phony name."

In addition to the trickery with Pratt officials, the film company may be pulling another fast one. Eighteen-year-old Bambi Woods is advertised as a former cheerleader for the Dallas Cowboys football team. But Suzanne Mitchell, director of the cheerleaders, denies that Woods ever was a member of her squad.

Pied Piper Theatre to present 'Orion Princess Caper' Sunday

The Pied Piper Theatre of Wilmington will present on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, at 3 p.m., in Kenan Auditorium this year's childrens play entitled "The Orion Princess Caper."

In 1953, the Junior League of Wilmington began producing, financing, writing, directing, performing and touring the Children's Theatre productions to school children in New Hanover County, reaching as many as 10,000 students each year. Some of the plays that were presented were: "Box of Smiles," "Snow White and Rose Red," "Dr. Cappelius," "Beauty and the Beast," "The Emperor's New Clothes," "Rumpelstiltskin," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Magic Flute," "Hansel and Gretel," and "The Chinese Nightingale."

After 16 years, the Children's Theatre took on the new name of Pied Piper Theatre and became a joint project of the Junior League, UNCW, New Hanover County Board of Education and the Beggars Theatre. The Junior League coordinates the finances and helps with the stage production; UNCW furnishes the auditorium and facilities; the city-county school administration finances and arranges the transportation for the students to and from Kenan Auditorium; and the Beggars Theatre group is charged with supplying scenery and costumes for the play.

The production is now performed for all the first and second grade students in the school system, as well as area kindergartens and private schools, with a Sunday performance open to the public for a small fee.

"The Orion Princess Caper" marks the ninth season of the Pied Piper Theatre. Previous productions have been "The Clock Shop" (1971), "Pinocchio" (1971), "Alice in Wonderland" (1973), "Hansel and Gretel" (1974), "Sleeping Beauty" (1975), "Rip Van Winkle" (1976), "Winnie-the-Pooh" (1977), and "Cats With Hats" (1978).

"The Orion Princess Caper" is an original script with music written by Darrell E. Hope, a junior at UNCW. It is a play that he specifically wrote for the Pied Piper Theatre while he was enrolled in the playwriting class taught by Professor Anne M. Fitzgibbon of the Creative Arts Department. Darrell Hope and James Burke have composed the music.

The play selected this year for the Pied Piper Theatre is designed to please young people who have been subjected the science fiction stories found in other medias of entertainment.

The story opens with the fact that the Orion Princess Thoris, played by Jan Peters, is on her way home when she crosses the boundary of Emperor Ragameany's space on the advice of her lying ship's computer P.C.B. 7:30 A.M., portrayed by David Stone. The Princess is kidnapped as a prospective bride for the Emperor, played by Tony Kivenbark, and everything on board the ship is turned off except Ceta, a small android. Ceta (Jane Rippy) turns everything back on including the other androids, Alpha (Louise Gorham) and Beta (Mary Alice Pennington). While singing the song, "If We Don't Find the Princess, We'll Be Scrapped," they decided to go to Earth and find a human hero to save the Princess.

While orbiting Earth, they accidentally beam up a young man, Mike and his sister, Ginny, played by Don Carmen and Linda Cooper respectively. The trouble is Mike doesn't know how to be a hero and the androids can't help him. But Ginny saves them all with her song, "A Hero Is" which teaches Mike about how to be a hero. Then off they go to free the Princess.

In the Evil Imperial Palace Ragameany, the Horrible, woos the unwilling Princess and introduces her to the Slither Thing, a creature that eats anything. They then meet his Imperial Mother portrayed by Jenene Smith who doesn't like her.

Our Hero and his friends arrive just as the Imperial Mother is about to throw the Princess to the Slither Thing. Mike has to use a musical light-sabre called "The Singing Sword" in a duel with Brix (Polly Rust) and Brax (Penny Tillery), the Emperor's henchmen. He wins and the Imperial Mother with Brix and Brax land in the cage with the Slither Thing.

All ends well, Mike and Ginny are returned to Earth, and the Princess is saved.

Serving as chairmen of the Pied Piper Theatre are Sandra Price and Hilda King, with Lucy Banner as coordinator for the New Hanover County Board of Education. Kay and Doug W. Swink are the directors, with Allen Randall serving as scene designer and Gary Weathersbee as lighting designer. The set was constructed by Steve Chiappisi, Anne McKay Coble, Don Pickett, Steve Randall, Katsumi Shmizu and Andi Young.

No reservations will be necessary for the 3 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 11, performance in Kenan Auditorium. All children, 80 to 8, will be charged the same admission price, 50 cents.

Student author has play produced

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

Student playwrights, take heart! Your big break may not be long in coming. For junior Darrell Hope, the break came when his musical, "The Orion Princess Caper" was selected for production by the Pied Piper Theatre.

The one-act play was written expressly for the Pied Piper Theatre and is science fiction entertainment directed towards the younger audience. Explained Hope, "There are just a million stories in my head all screaming to come out."

A drama major, Hope entered UNCW planning a career in marine biology but changed his mind when "I decided that I couldn't spend the rest of my life looking at fish through a microscope."

Hope authored "The Orion Princess Caper" while he was enrolled in the playwriting class taught by Professor Anne Fitzgibbon of the Drama Division of the recently-formed Creative Arts Department. Hope and James Burke worked in collaboration to produce the musical score for "Caper."

Hope became interested in drama during his freshman year, when he began participating in summer stock theatre. He is presently appearing in the University Theatre production of "Tango," a play by Slawomir Mrozek. Directed by Dr. Terry Rogers, the play is "wonderful," according to Hope. "It's about a conformist and non-conformists and how they interact."

Hope, who plans to graduate in 1980, ultimately wants to be a film maker, or, failing that, a director or producer.

Volunteers sought for 'Atlantis' spring staff

The staff of "Atlantis," the UNCW literary magazine, are making preparations to begin the spring issue. Each staff must begin their work by collecting enough volunteers to ensure that the submitted prose, poetry, or art will be judged fairly.

Working with the poetry staff requires very little time or work and can be enjoyable for those who like to read poetry, according to staff members.

To work on the poetry staff, all one has to do is read the poems submitted and rate them excellent, good, fair, or poor, attend a meeting to discuss the poems and, if possible, assist the editors with the final layout of "Atlantis."

Every staff member's opinion about the poems is needed because the ratings determine which poems are printed in "Atlantis" and which are not. Anyone interested in volunteering their services to the "Atlantis" poetry staff should contact poetry editor Bobbie Padgett at 791-8136.

NAVY OFFICER.
YOU GET RESPONSIBILITY
THE MOMENT YOU GET THE STRIPES.

A lot of companies will offer you an important sounding title.
But how many offer you a really important job?
In the Navy, you get one as soon as you earn your commission. A job with responsibility. A job that requires skill and leadership. A job that's more than just a job, because it's also an adventure.
If that's the kind of job you're looking for, speak to your local recruiter.

Navy Lt. Roger Ross will be in the front lobby of Trask Coliseum during Career Day '79 on Wednesday, Feb. 14, from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Students interested in a Navy commission are cordially invited to stop by and talk with him. Or they may call the Officer Programs Office in Raleigh at 1-800-682-7588.

NAVY OFFICER. IT'S NOT JUST A JOB, IT'S AN ADVENTURE.

It's just been one of those days

Today, friends, has been One Of Those Days. Everybody has 'em, now and then. Some people have them more than others, but that's life. So it is with total understanding that I have prepared a little survival guide that tells you how to recognize a real teeth-grinding day.

You know it's gonna be one o' those days when

(a) Your Pop Tarts explode inside the toaster

(b) That in-grown toenail makes you limp like Quasimodo but you'd risk gangrene before you'd wear a corn pad.

(c) Your genetics prof (the sadist) gives a pop test with a smile on his face.

(d) That cafeteria hot dog screams before you bite into it.

(e) Your dearest friend in the world refuses to set you up with her boyfriend's brother.

(f) The library contains everything but cool, good-looking intellectuals.

(g) You run sobbing to your advisor because you're only taking twelve hours and you're failing two classes and they're going to take away your financial aid and whatamgonna-do?—and he denies ever knowing you.

(h) That cute little blonde in history turns out to have garlic breath.

(i) For some insane reason you chug 27 laps in the gym and right before you go into convulsions, coach claps you on the shoulder and says heartily, "Believe we've got us a cross-country runner here!"

(j) A letter arrives from your hometown beau that starts out, "Dear Ex,"....

(k) The speakers on your stereo blow up before you have a chance to play the new Rod Stewart album.

So there you have it, for good or gross, a diagram of a rotten day. And if it takes you all the way to (k) to figure out what kind of day you're having... well, you're either a little slow or an incurable optimist!

Delta Zeta Sorority will meet Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in H221. All interested girls are invited to attend.

The NCSL will meet Thursday, February 15 at 3:00 p.m.—study room #3.

The Student Legislature will meet in C218 at 7 p.m. Thursday, February 15.

NOTES

The Chemistry Department will present Dr. James R. Kuppern, a professor at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, who will give a lecture on "Structure—Aqueous Solutions," 2:30 p.m. in C114 on Friday, February 16. All interested students are invited to attend.

The UNCW Chemistry Club will be raffling a keg of beer through the week of Homecoming. Tickets are $1 each. A winner will be selected by random drawing on February 16. All interested persons should contact a Chemistry Club member or Robin in C115.

The deadline for submissions to the Human Relations Essay Contest is February 16 at 5 p.m. Submit essays to the English Department secretary.

The Social Work Club (S.W.A.P.) meeting was held on Thursday, Feb. 1. It was agreed upon to proceed with elections of officers. The next meeting will be Thursday, February 8 in H103 at 2:30 p.m. All interested persons are invited to attend.

ECU is coming to town, and it's time for UNCW to unite against the purple pirate. APO will be toasting the Pirates, in a roaring blaze destined to scuttle their timbers. Seahawk spirit rouser will be served to all Hawks coming out for the bonfire. The bonfire will be Feb. 13 at 6:30 p.m. behind Trask tennis courts.

Valentine's Day is your day to be a real sweetheart. The Career Planning and Placement Office, in cooperation with Sigma Alpha Beta and Phi Beta Lambda, is offering you a chance to bring your favorite person to the lobby of Trask Coliseum to explore employment opportunities in your chosen field.

Representatives from businesses, industries, military services, and graduate schools will be here to talk with students. This is an information session. The representatives will discuss various areas of employment and what majors and courses will be most suited to their needs.

Plan now to attend UNCW's second annual campus-wide Career Day. The big day is February 14, in the lobby of Trask, from 10:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. All students, faculty and staff are invited to celebrate Valentine's Day with us.

Are those liquor bottles full of pennies getting too heavy to carry around? Well, a solution is here at last.

Alpha Phi Omega will be attempting to collect a mile of pennies for the Heart Fund, February 12-16. Each penny donated will be attached to a mile-long strip of paper located in the cafeteria courtyard. If the mile is completed, we will succeed in contributing about $600 to the Heart Fund. APO Brothers and Pledges will be manning the mile from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. all through Homecoming week. Come out and see us and leave a few pennies; each one brings us closer. Look for our campaign on Feb. 14, the Heart Day of Heart Month.

The NCSL has changed its meeting time to 3 p.m. on Thursday. This new time will allow all members to have a voice on the plans now being made for session. Come and get in on the fun of the February IC and session.

Anyone interested in joining NCSL is invited to attend the meeting every Thursday at 3 p.m. in the library seminar room #3. All majors are invited.

All members of Phi Eta Sigma, who did not attend the meeting Monday night Feb. 5, need to see Dr. Lee Johnston in H221 as soon as possible.

The UNCW Alumni Association will hold its sixth annual dinner dance at Gray Gables Restaurant on February 10. Tickets at $30 per couple are now available in the UNCW Alumni office and at Bob King Pontiac on New Centre Drive.

Monday, February 12
"Pride and Prejudice," starring Sir Lawrence Olivier and Maureen O'Sullivan, will be shown in the Randall Library Auditorium at 7 p.m., as part of the UNCW English Club's Film-from-Literature Series.

Appointments with recruiters should be made in the Office of Career Planning and Placement, 207 Alderman Administration Building. Sign-up sheets for recruiting interviews are available beginning Monday mornings, three weeks in advance of the scheduled interview.

Students must be registered with the Placement Office in order to sign up for interviews and are expected to honor appointments scheduled. To avoid disappointment, interview appointments should be scheduled as early as possible. Come by or call the Placement Office if there are questions or for additional information.

Volunteer opportunities

Special classroom aide! Assist in class of young teenagers who have communication handicaps. Trask School. (Call Mr. Jackie O'Grady, 799-2827 until 4 p.m.)

Now is the time—Volunteers are needed to assist with training of special athletes in swimming, soccer skills and track and field events for the Special Olympics, which will be held in April. Requirements for volunteers are a few free hours per week and some knowledge in any of these sports.

Help someone find the joy of reading—The Wilmington Literacy Group has scheduled a volunteer tutor's workshop for daytime classes on Mondays and evening classes on Tuesdays. Trained tutors work one-to-one with English speaking adults a few hours per week at a time and place arranged by the tutor and his student.

For more details on these and other volunteer opportunities, see Linda Moore, Student Activities, or call the Volunteer Action Center, 762-9611.

Commencement set for May 12; committee in process of planning

by Dotty Shoffner
Seahawk Contributor

The big event for graduating seniors--commencement--will take place on Saturday, May 12, at 10 a.m. in Trask Coliseum. Dr. John Stokes made this announcement during the second meeting of the Ad Hoc Commencement Committee.

"Any graduation exercise requires months of planning and candidates for graduation are encouraged to participate in this planning process," Dr. Stokes says. "Good planning now will minimize mistakes later and we hope students will share their suggestions with members of the committee."

Committee members, who were appointed by Academic Dean Daniel Plyler, are: Dorothy Marshall, Admissions office; Helena Cheek, dean of students; Dr. Richard Deas, Creative Arts Department; Dr. James BEEler, Modern Languages Department; Dr. Gary Faulkner, Sociology-Anthropology Department; J. Carl Dempsey, Business Affairs; Patricia Blanton, senior class president; Wayne Dunlap, SGA President; and Dorothy Shoffner, student at-large representative.

Marshall, Dempsey, Blanton and Dunlap did not attend the meeting.

According to Dr. Stokes, committee chair, "The committee has limited authority and only makes recommendations to the Chancellor. Dr. Wagoner makes the final decisions."

The committee will reconvene in approximately three weeks to continue the process of finalizing its recommendations. Items to be discussed include, possible commencement speakers, the procedure for conferring degrees, special musical selections, and appropriate social activities for graduates and their families.

A survey is being conducted to get student ideas for the committee. Graduating seniors are asked to clip the form from this newspaper and return them to the SGA office.

Placement office, others to sponsor Career Day

by Susan Parnell
Staff Writer

Are you thinking about the future and wondering what kind of job you will want when you finish college? The Career Planning and Placement Office, in cooperation with Sigma Alpha Beta and Phi Beta Lambda, is sponsoring the second annual Career Day at UNCW. This is a day for students to talk with various business, industries, military branches and graduate schools about jobs, without the pressures of an interview.

Career Day will give students an opportunity to find a good paying, respectable job in an area of their major. There is a wide variety of employment opportunities for freshmen as well as seniors.

Ken Wright will be on campus for Career Day with information about summer internships. Internships are a good way to receive work experience in areas of one's major or can be related to courses one is taking. For more information on these summer internships stop by room 207 in the Administration Building.

Career Day is planned for Feb. 14, 10:30 to 3, in the lobby of Trask Coliseum. Come by any time and start making plans for your future.

Register is named Fledgling editor

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

Robbie Register has been named the new editor of the Fledgling, the student yearbook, by the Media and Publications Board. Register replaces Margie McLamb who resigned the position in the midst of a controversy involving staff problems and an SGA investigation of the yearbook organization.

Register is a senior English major from Wilmington.

Having worked on the Fledgling staff last year in the sports section, Register is no stranger to the mysteries of yearbook editing. Also, prior to McLamb's resignation, Register had been designated as assistant to the editor, a capacity that entails added levels of responsibility. Commented Register, "I guess you could say I'm not having too much trouble...Actually, the pressure is almost nil."

The editor's duties include being responsible for the proofs that literally make up the entire annual, and also seeing that the various departments meet their respective deadlines.

"The first deadline is on Feb. 25, so up til now things haven't really been rough," Register explained. There are approximately five deadlines that have to be met per semester, the final one being in June. After the usual printer's rendezvous, they are then distributed to the student body in September.

"The photographers are the ones who really feel the heat," remarked Register. "If the pictures don't get done, then everything else falls behind schedule too."

How about the creative prospects?

"Well," admits Register, "it is a good feeling to see your efforts on paper."

When interviewed by the Media and Publications Board, Register told its members that she sees no conflict with putting past problems of this year's Fledgling behind the staff to move forward to completion of the book.

Since her appointment, Register has been pulling the rest of the staff together to see what kind of help she will have in the task ahead of her.

Women fill management positions at radio WLOZ

A victory of sorts for campus women was won last week as the Media and Publications Board appointed a completely new management staff for radio station WLOZ. Coincidentally, all four of the top management officers are now women.

Karen King was named station manager, replacing Steve Hess who resigned recently as the result of a controversy involving staff management.

Other officers approved by the Media Board are Tamisha Williamson, program director; Gale Eubanks, music director; and Donna McMillan, business manager.

The new officers were recommended by WLOZ adviser Dr. Irvin Clator. Clator told the board that three of the four women also received the unanimous endorsement of WLOZ staff members at an earlier meeting.

UNC desegregation plan rejected, program duplication cited

by Cathy Horrell
Staff Writer

The UNC desegregation plan submitted to the U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare (HEW) has recently been rejected by Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. who said the plan did not eliminate program duplication at the predominantly black and predominantly white universities located near each other.

The issue of program duplication is focused at six universities: the predominantly white campuses of UNC-Chapel Hill, UNC-Greensboro, and NC State and the historically black campuses of NC A. & T. State, NC Central, and Winston-Salem State University. While UNC-Chapel Hill and NC Central have competing law schools, both UNC-G and NC A. & T. have nursing programs. NC State and NC A. & T. were candidates for a veterinary program. NC State was granted the program.

Desegregation

UNC officials believe that there is not any "unnecessary program duplication between the six black and white universities." But HEW officials have called for measures to strengthen the programs at the black campuses.

In 1974 UNC created a new plan to encourage a push for an increase of black students on traditionally white campuses; however, this marked the beginnings of the current dilemma between HEW and the UNC system. HEW not only wants an increase of black students on white campuses, it wants an elimination of programs that are duplicated. In essence, HEW would prefer that each university have its own program. This would solve the problem of having predominantly black or white universities.

On April 1, 1977, a court order was issued to NC Gov. James B. Hunt stating that the desegregation plan was not acceptable because it "failed to achieve significant progress toward higher education desegregation." Another plan was sent to HEW in August 1978.

On Dec. 19, 1978, a meeting was held between Mary F. Berry, HEW's assistant secretary for education, and several leaders of the National Association for Equal Opportunities in Higher Education. NAFEO represents the nation's historically black college presidents.

Black college presidents are concerned that their schools would suffer if HEW insisted on mergers to achieve desegregation. Berry reportedly told the presidents that HEW would approve the desegregation plans of Georgia, Virginia and Florida, and single-out North Carolina's as the only one yet unapproved.

HEW would reject North Carolina's plan to force the state to accept its methods in achieving desegregation. If any programs were merged, the duplicated programs would probably still exist on the traditionally black campuses and be eliminated on the predominantly white campuses.

The so-called strategy to isolate North Carolina has been denied by a HEW spokesman.

HEW had threatened to cut off federal funds if the latest plan is unacceptable. UNC expects to receive $89 million in federal aid this year.

Califano's announcement of the rejection of the UNC plan came during a news conference announcing approval of Georgia's desegregation plan. He also stated that hopefully HEW and UNC could reach an agreement by March 14, the court deadline for HEW to accept or reject the desegregation plan.

(Next week, reporter Horrell will explore the possible effects of the desegregation controversy at UNCW.)

Graduation plans should consider students first, prestige last Administration officials are in the process of making plans for the annual commencement ceremony in May, deciding such things as the choice of a speaker, how diplomas will be handed out, and time and location. To discuss these decisions, the academic dean has appointed a special committee of administrators, faculty and students in an effort to bring more people into the planning process. A survey has also been circulated among prospective graduates by the student members of this committee to gather even more suggestions for this year's graduation.

These attempts to involve students in the planning of commencement appear to be merely cosmetic, however, for, as we are ever reminded, the final decisions rest with Chancellor William Wagoner. No matter what the committee suggests or what the results of any survey recommend, the Chancellor retains all authority to do exactly as he decides.

It seems logical that the Chancellor would have the final authority; after all, when it comes down to reality, he has the final authority in whatever goes on within the university. He is the chancellor.

But must we constantly be reminded of the veto power? What is the incentive for students to become concerned with the planning if they are told at every turn that one official will make the final decisions?

Graduating students might feel more comfortable about making suggestions were it not for recent history which indicates those suggestions will be ignored. Last year, major changes were announced including day, place and time, the method of recognizing graduates, and increased emphasis on the speaker. The changes were met by a wave of opposition from seniors and a compromise on student recognition was worked out between administration and student leaders. The important fact here, however, is that the changes were proclaimed without prior consultation with students.

Perhaps university officials are expecting applause for their efforts to involve students on the planning committee. But before that happens, there must be some positive indication that this student involvement is not just for an appearance of concern for student opinions that is not really there.

We hope that the university's administration realizes that the importance of a graduation ceremony is not to add prestige to the school's reputation; neither is it to put on a spectacular show for outsiders to view. The importance of graduation is the individual meaning it holds for individual students. The ceremony is not for the institution; it is for the people.

There may be a good argument that the ceremony and ritual of graduation have lost much of their meaning among today's students. It's a sure bet that when people take second place to institutions, the meaning was lost long ago.

Nader's warning: Students should question testing monopoly

by Ralph Nader

The next time you pick up a well-sharpened No. 2 pencil and begin to hurriedly answer a standardized, multiple-choice test, chances are that your test is one of more than eight million given annually by the Educational Testing Service (ETS). You may know ETS manufactures SATs, LSATs, GREs and GMATs. With these tests alone, ETS influences the educational and career opportunities of millions of people. But the power of ETS does not begin or end with those tests.

ETS markets 299 different tests. ETS tests are used to determine entrance to over 60 occupations including fire-fighters, actuaries, policemen, real estate brokers, sailors, teachers, gynecologists, engineers, and auto mechanics. ETS test results are the standards of access to some of the most powerful professions: foreign service officers, New York stockbrokers, lawyers in over 40 states, CIA agents. Two million elementary students take ETS tests, and ETS is even developing ways to test infants.

ETS helps determine who will be eligible for financial aid and how much they will receive. The financial information ETC obtains on nearly two million families is more detailed than a mortgage application or an IRS return. ETS consultants and trainees help shape education and labor allocation policy in scores of countries, including Singapore, Brazil, and Saudi Arabia. And ETS has test centers in 120 countries.

In 30 years, probably 90 million people have had their schooling, jobs, prospects for advancement, and beliefs in their own potential directly shaped by the quiet but pervasive power of ETS.

Ralph Nader

This is one of a series of articles prepared by consumer advocate Nader especially for college campuses.

Despite its massive influence, few people question ETS. Students may want to tear up test forms in moments of frustration, but few of us think of challenging the corporation that makes the tests.

Indeed, ETS is, in non-dollar ways, a large corporation. It has more customers per year than GM and Ford combined. Despite its non-profit status, it declares roughly $1 million in "non-profits" each year. This money is plowed back into corporate expansion and maintaining the ETS estate, which includes a 400-acre head quarters in Princeton, New Jersey, a $250,000 home for the president, William Turnbull, and a $3 million hotel/conference center—all built with student test fees. Its revenue from test fees enabled ETS to double in size every five years from 1948 to 1972, a rate of growth faster than IBM.

ETS's sales and near monopoly power, combined with its privileged legal status as a non-profit corporation, make it unprecedented in corporate history. ETS is exempt from federal and state income taxes, is effectively beyond the reach of many anti-trust laws, and has no stockholders. ETS escapes the restraints governing other corporations because it is an "educational" institution.

The power of ETS is massive, as even one ETS executive conceded. "No matter what they try to tell you here about how we really don't have much power," he said, "we know we do. We know we're the nation's gatekeeper." This gatekeeper can determine who enters college, graduate and professional schools, as well as many occupations and professions. Is that power legitimate?

ETS defends its role as the gatekeeper by claiming it has developed the "science of mental measurement," but the tests measure nothing more than how you answered a few multiple-choice questions. (See Nader, page 3.)

College catalogues said not very helpful in planning education

by Chip Berlet

(CPS)--Most college catalogues seem to favor artful photo essays of pastoral campus scenes, coupled with encyclopedic listings of courses offered at least once a century. Their object, of course, is to lure high school seniors into the schools. But in truth not much of the information in the catalogues helps in choosing a college, or planning an education.

Those catalogues have, since the beginning of the decade, been the focus of a gathering protest by education activists who want colleges to provide information in their publications that might actually be useful to their students. Much of the protest, though, has been in sedate conference talk. Now, however, the federal government and student lobby groups have imposed a deadline of sorts of the schools. The "movement" has suddenly gained some power. And, later this month, a major report from a conference on catalogue information promises to cause great commotion among college administrators.

In December, Ted Marchese of Barat College in Illinois coordinated a federally-sponsored conference, call Improving Information For Student Choice, which, for the first time, brought together a broad range of student consumerists. They drew up a report, and will release it to the public in late February.

A copy of the draft report released to CPS details strategies for improving the flow of information to students. Ken Fischer, a higher education consultant says the conference participants went "beyond the point of merely developing a plan to the point where names, dates and tasks--who'll do what, when, and where--were identified. Commitments were made to (implement) the plan."

The report includes a draft list of steps colleges can take without performing a major overhaul of the current publications. This core list of important information includes 19 topic areas ranging from financial aid and job prospects for certain kinds of majors to grievance procedures and how credits earned at the school will transfer to another school.

The report also calls for legislation requiring schools to publicize "significant" changes in admissions policies and the names of courses that may prove hard to get because of staff shortages.

Those latter two items alone would be a major reform that could end cases of students enrolling in a college only to find their majors are being phased out, or prerequisite courses with severely limited enrollments.

Such reforms are especially threatening to colleges because they stand a very good chance of passage. As the report is released, conference participants will be testifying at congressional hearings on the Higher Education Act of 1976. That act is up for renewal this year and is the umbrella legislation that makes all federal funding of education possible. Congress' self-imposed deadline for renewing the act is this October. In the meantime, several key congressional staff members involved in drafting the renewal have already expressed concern over colleges' compliance with current federal laws dictating what kinds of information the schools must provide their students.

Current federal law, originally sponsored by Sen. Jacob Javits of New York at the behest of several student groups, says that colleges must supply students and prospective students with various types of information--mostly concerning financial aid--or lose their eligibility for federal funding.

In the law's wake, the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education financed several projects to show schools what Congress intended. The National Student Educational Fund used the grant for its Information Gap project. Funds also went to a coalition of eleven colleges, including Marchese's Barat, that revamped their catalogues to provide unusually candid information about their institutions.

Despite the mountain of research reports and the 11 exemplary catalogues, the vast majority of colleges continue to view the student consumer movement with either indifference or bald hostility. Many institutions now begrudgingly provide the information required by federal law "on request," but few have actually tampered with their catalogues.

The reason is that, with the pool of potential students shrinking and the rates of tuition rising, a much more spirited competition among schools for students has replaced the laissez-faire admissions recruitment of prior years. In the heat of recruitment, many schools have adopted classic commercial marketing techniques to "sell" their programs. One of the most visible selling tools a school has is its catalogue.

Colleges and universities apparently are reluctant to sacrifice those tools. But with the new higher education authorizing legislation promised for October, there's a kind of legislative "Sword of Damocles" hanging over their heads. Fearful of tougher federal catalogue requirements, the schools have been scurrying to develop guidelines of their own to head off federal intervention.

Most recently, the National Association of College Admissions Counselors published a "Statement of Students' Rights and Responsibilities in the College Admissions Process." Other groups are expected to follow suit.

But meanwhile, the pressure promises to 'keep' building. In April, the prestigious Carnegie Commission on Policy Studies in Higher Education is expected to release its long-delayed "Fair Practice in Higher Education: Rights and Responsibilities in a Period of Competition for Students." Observers anticipate the report as a kind of code of ethics for college administrators in this era of enrollment decline. Student consumerists expect it to deal extensively with how to provide useful information to students.

And this month, the second annual conference on Statewide Educational Information & Counseling Services has listed Marchese's conference report on improving the information flow as a major topic.

Marchese is confident some of the report's recommendations will become law, no matter what kinds of guidelines schools impose on themselves. "People realize that what's in the law regarding student information now is a little cockeyed. Anything that's down on paper and makes sense has a chance of being included in the legislation."

The correlation between SAT scores and first-year grades in college, for example, is often lower than the correlation between the test scores and the income of the test taker's parents. At best, standardized tests measure the specialized skill of test-taking, but they do not measure key determinants of success such as writing and research skill, ability to make coherent arguments, creativity, motivation, stamina, judgment, experience, or ethics.

ETS not only influences how institutions judge individuals, however; it also influences how individuals judge themselves. A false self-estimate or image is instilled in the mind of the individual who receives a standardized test score. For although the scores are significantly determined by social class, he is told they are objective, scientific measures of the individual.

Moreover, test takers are subject to numerous injustices, ranging from incorrect scoring of tests, to late reporting of applicant information, to secret evaluation of grades and test scores--and they have no recourse.

We must begin to examine the examiners.

There is a growing movement to reform and restructure the testing industry. In New York, Ohio, Texas and other states, student-run Public Interest Research Groups (PIRGs) have introduced "Truth in Testing" legislation in their state legislatures. This legislation would force ETS and other testing companies to disclose test questions and answers, and all studies and data on the tests; it would also require companies to keep information on applicants confidential.

Disclosing test answers would enable students to contest disputed answers, and thus eliminate much of the mystery surrounding the tests.

ETS has said it is willing to release 99 percent of its test data. But the bulk of this 99 percent is the material provided by the test-takers themselves--name, social security number, etc. That last one percent includes ETS's extrapolations from the information provided by test-takers--such as predictions of future academic success.

The testing reform movement has other facets. Jesse Jackson is organizing around the issue of the ETS National Teacher Examinations which have systematically eliminated qualified black applicants from teaching jobs. The Federal Trade Commission has apparently found, contrary to ETS claims, that certain kinds of prep or cram courses can raise test scores--but the report has been withheld at this time. And several members of Congress have called for an investigation of the testing industry.

Students now have opportunities to challenge the test makers.

'Hey! Look at me!' opens Saturday

The art and spirit of inner-city Washington, D.C., school children are captured by "Hey! Look at Me!," an exhibition and film circulated by the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service. It opens at Heritage House, 918 Wooster St., on Saturday, Feb. 18, and will remain on view through March 18.

Produced by Washington artist and photographer Sybil Meyersburg, the exhibition communicates the energy and joyfulness of children everywhere. Beginning in 1970 with the premise that a greater willingness to learn develops from an improved self-image, Meyersburg began to record on film and on tape the images and sounds of the children at school. She let them express themselves through their art, their poetry and their movement, and when they saw these images of themselves, they responded with even further creativity. A positive self-image had been enhanced.

Included in the exhibition are the children's drawings, poetry, self-portraits, and feelings about themselves and others in their environment. The images stand as a testament to their basically optimistic outlook, tempered by the realism of their daily lives. "Hey! Look at Me!" shows us that our children will continue to strive if given the chance.

Seminar to feature Dr. Koppers

The fifth UNCW Chemistry Department Spring Seminar will feature a discussion of "Structure in Aqueous Solutions," by Dr. James R. Koppers of UNC-Charlotte. The seminar will be held at 2:30 p.m. Friday, in Room C-114 of the Chemistry Building.

Dr. Koppers received his B.S. degree from the University of Florida in 1943 and his M.S. in 1947 from Louisiana State University. He obtained his Ph.D in physical chemistry at the University of Florida in 1957. Dr. Koppers has worked as a food technologist for the United Fruit Company and a research chemist in textile fibers for E.I. duPont. He joined the faculty of Pfeiffer College in 1960 and came to UNC-Charlotte in 1968. His areas of research include surface chemistry, membrane phenomena and solution thermodynamics.

Fraternities growing in number

by Chip Plyler

With the revival of short hair, loafers and pleated skirts, fraternities and sororities are once again on the uprise across the southern college scene. UNCW is no exception to this rule with a growing Greek culture all its own. Once a dying relic, fraternities and sororities are growing at a rate unequaled in the last ten years.

In just two years the number of social fraternities on this campus has more than doubled to its current level of five. Also, there is now a sorority established on campus. Even though the sorority is still very young and in a colony status, the members seem to be well organized and gaining popularity rapidly.

For those of you who are wondering what a social fraternity can do for you, unfortunately, there is no all-incompassing answer. Each "frat" is different with its own traditions and styles. They do, however, have certain similarities.

Certainly the first thing that you think of when you hear the word "fraternity" is their reputation for partying. This is one aspect in which most every fraternity takes an active role on a regular basis.

But partying is not all that fraternities are involved with. Each frat also averages one service project per semester, raising money for various charities. A rock-a-thon for cystic fibrosis, a blood drive for the Red Cross, and a pole sit to raise money for muscular dystrophy are just some of the ways that the social fraternities on campus help the community.

Psychology workshop

The Psychology Club will sponsor a workshop on test-taking anxiety beginning Thursday. This workshop will be conducted as a series of presentations given by faculty members who have researched this topic in order to provide students with valuable information concerning math anxiety, efficient study methods, test-taking strategy, standardized tests and general test anxiety.

Dr. Grace Burton will conduct the first seminar on math anxiety Thursday at 4 p.m. upstairs in the Education-Psychology Building. The remaining seminars will be presented by Dr. Sue Lamb and Dr. Robert Brown of the Psychology Department and Dr. Darwin Newton of the university's Counseling and Testing center.

The workshop is a student service project of the Psychology Club and no fees will be charged. Necessary materials will be provided.

"Our club is responding to the student's needs. All you have to do is take the responsibility for helping yourself," said one member of the club.

All students and faculty are invited.

SGA treasurer urges lump sum allocation for program board

by Bobby Parker
Editor

SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan urged the Student Legislature to consider allocating funds for program committees in a lump sum to the Program Board which would in turn designate the money for various programs to the individual committees.

Reagan, who said the proposal had been discussed by the SGA finance committee, suggested that the new system would give programming executives a freer hand in planning.

"They (Program Board) have their hands tied as far as signing contracts a year in advance," Reagan stated.

The treasurer said that under current SGA policy, it is "illegal" for programmers to spend money without prior approval of the finance committee.

Program officials have complained that the present funding system hampers the Program Board because delays in getting SGA approval mean that commitments cannot be made with entertainers early enough.

Program Board chair Cindy Cole said last week that the board misses out on "black bookings" which may offer discounts on fees, is limited in flexibility to shift funds among its committees, and forfeits opportunities for specialized programs which do not fall under the jurisdiction of one of the boards standing committees.

The Program Board consists of the Fine Arts, Dance, Concert, Homecoming, Lecture and Coffeehouse committees, and it is in its first year of operation.

Reagan recommended that a treasurer be added to the Program Board staff if the funding policy is changed and suggested that the SGA treasurer fill the position. Reagan said that this would allow the SGA treasurer to monitor expenditures of the board and report to the Legislature.

In other Legislative activity, two athletic clubs were granted funds, with the Legislature adopting the recommendations of the finance committee in each case.

The Racquetball Club had requested an allocation of $280-$155 for shirts and equipment and $125 for a bulletin board to be placed near the racquetball courts for posting notices.

Legislator Mark Beanblos-som said that the request for a bulletin board seemed "too expensive" and should be financed by the Athletic Department.

The Legislature approved the total allocation of $280.

A request from the Sailing Club for $421 to finance several trips and membership dues was approved without opposition.

The Sailing Club will attend two regattas in Charleston, S.C., at $99 per trip and a regatta at Clemson University at $148. The expenses will include transportation and hotel accommodations for four to six members on each trip.

The Sailing Club allocation also includes $75 for membership in the Southern Collegiate Sailing Association.

Attorney General Glen Downs and freshman class president John Owens were appointed to investigate several matters pertaining to parking on campus.

Legislator Sara Deen requested an inquiry into the elimination of temporary parking spaces at Galloway Hall before permanent facilities were provided.

Deen stated that many students have complained about having to walk a considerable distance late at

Black History Month: Charles Richard Drew founded blood bank

Charles Richard Drew was born June 3, 1904, the eldest of five children. His parents were of average education but they had high ideals for their children. These good Baptist people believed in the value of a good education. Their eldest son graduated from Dunbar High School, one of the foremost black high schools in the country at the time.

In 1922, he received an athletic scholarship to Amherst College where he received the Howard Hill Mossman Trophy for having brought the most honor to the school in a four-year period. He did this by his excellence in track and football. His football coach, D.O. "Tuss" McLaughlin, said that Drew was the "best player I ever coached." He was also the captain of the track team and the national junior champion in the high hurdles.

In spite of the heavy sports schedules that he had while at college, Drew maintained his grades and a strong interest in biology. Before he graduated from Amherst, he decided to become a doctor; however, he lacked the necessary funds to enter medical school in the fall of 1926. He graduated with top honors and subsequently accepted positions in teaching in biology and as athletic director at Morgan College in Maryland.

With a loan from his classmates at Amherst and a position as a table waiter in Montreal, Drew entered McGill University Medical School in Montreal, Canada, in 1928.

Drew, who continued to excel in sports, proved to be the top scorer in track competition in all Canada. However, he had an increasing devotion to medicine, and in his third year at McGill he received a scholarship to help allay some of his expenses. At this time he was befriended by a young English doctor, John Beattie, who taught bacteriology. It was Beattie who influenced Drew to do research in blood groups and typing.

After graduation from McGill, Drew served one year as an intern at the Royal Victorian Hospital and a year as a resident at the Montreal General Hospital specializing in surgery and blood typing and problems of transfusion. During this time he was appointed as a diplomat by the National Board of Medical Examiners. By 1935 he had returned to the United States to Howard University Medical College as an instructor in Pathology and Surgery.

In 1940, before the fall of France and its subsequent occupation, the United States sought ways to actively aid the Allies, so Drew was appointed as the director of the Blood Bank because he was "the best qualified of anyone we know to act in this important development." The Allies were not only suffering from lack of blood, but also from deaths stemming from the use of spoiled blood. After the fall of France, Drew returned to Howard University to resume his teaching duties only to be recalled to New York to head the Blood Bank collecting for Great Britain, who was under the blitz attacks of the Germans. In February of 1941 with the active involvement of the United States in the war, Drew received an official directive from the armed forces which stated the non-white blood should be segregated from blood of white donors.

The American Red Cross officials freely admitted that their blood segregation policy was an appeasement to prejudice and that there was no scientific basis for blood segregation. At this time, Drew complied with the ruling from the armed forces officials, however, he also stated that the Army and Navy ruling was an indefensible one from any point of view. Within three months after accepting the post of the American Red Cross Blood Bank, Drew resigned, mostly because of the prejudices that were evidenced by the Army and Navy.

Drew returned to Howard University Medical College to resume his teaching and surgical duties. At Freedman's Hospital he was promoted to chief surgeon and later the chief of staff. The NAACP bestowed the Spingarn Medal for "highest achievement by an American Negro during the preceding year or years." Certainly during the time of the war Drew's accomplishments were a great help to the Allies of the United States in his discovery of the means of shipping plasma and blood in a stable form.

Drew was killed in an automobile crash near Burlington, N.C., in June of 1950, while on his way to deliver a lecture at the John A. Andrew Memorial Clinic at Tuskegee Institute. What is most ironic is that Charles Richard Drew actually died because he was not given any of the white blood from the very blood bank that he helped found.

Seahawks lose two; 20 wins in doubt

by J. Dillon Bryant
Staff Writer

The chances of a 20-win season were dimmed this past week when UNCW suffered two losses. This lowers their record to 15-7, with only five games remaining and means the Seahawks must go undefeated during their final games.

Playing in some of the worst conditions possible, UNC-Charlotte's Mine Shaft, the Hawks were thrashed by the 49ers, 75-57.

After a quick 1-0 lead, UNCW quickly went down 6-1 and eventually by 25 points. The Hawks never recovered from first half during which it shot 26 percent (7 of 27) and trailed at the break 35-19.

The Seahawks eventually shot a season-low 36 percent from the field.

"We rebounded very well but it seemed like we were intimidated on shots in close when we got them. They cut off our inside game and had us on our perimeter more than we like."

"There's nothing bad to say about what we did in the second half," said Gibson.

"We lost it by two points (40-38) and the kids did everything we asked. We just got caught up with the crowd and took some bad shots early. Charlotte plays so well here."

Leading the Seahawks was Danny Davis with a career and game-high 17 points. Davis also took game rebound honors with 11.

After taking Friday off for traveling, the Seahawks met the Mounties of Appalachian State only to be turned back in overtime 62-60 on a last second tip-in.

Because of Appalachian's win over Furman, the team that beat UNC-Chapel Hill, UNCW could have gained national recognition with a win over the Mountaineers.

The first Seahawk lead had come with 4:51 remaining on a Barry Taylor jumper which made it 56-55. The second Seahawk lead had come when Danny Davis, who led the Hawks with 16 points, had scored on a rebound with 1:16 to make it 58-57.

A free throw by the Apps sent the game into overtime.

With :02 remaining in the overtime, Appalachian's Darryl Robinson shot a 15 foot jumper that bounced off the back of the rim and came back to Robinson for an easy tip-in.

"He made the basket that won it before the buzzer," said Gibson. "But that's just focusing in on just one shot."

The big play was when we were tied up and he drove the base line. We just shouldn't let anyone drive through a zone like that."

Win dance tickets, enter sports quiz

The Seahawk sports staff is proud to announce the formation of a sports quiz. The quiz will consist of ten questions with the person answering the greater number of questions receiving a prize.

The prize for this week will be two free tickets to the Homecoming dance. Answers to these questions must be in before noon Friday.

1. Who has the highest number of rebounds in an NBA game and how many?
2. How many golf tournaments did Tom Watson win in 1978?
3. How many gold medals did Mark Spitz win in the 1972 Olympics?
4. Who is the winningest active coach in college basketball?
5. Before Secretariat, who was the last horse to win the triple crown?
6. Who was the last Major League baseball pitcher to win 30 games in one season?
7. Who played in the longest football game ever played in the NFL and when was it?
8. Who was the most valuable player in the 1978 World Series?
9. What is the Lady Byng Trophy award for in the National Hockey League?
10. Who is boxing's featherweight champion of the world?

Patience pays off for Peterson

Patience is endurance without complaint, the power to wait calmly to show perseverance. Patience is what has enabled Ralph Peterson to play basketball at UNCW.

After waiting "patiently" for 3 years, Peterson's time has finally come. He is now a starter after sitting on the bench for 3 years.

Ralph plays second guard for UNCW. What is a second guard? A second guard is essentially a runner. Meaning when we rebound, the second guard is the first player down court for the Seahawks. Not necessarily to score but to pass off to a player coming from behind. This is known as a secondary break, when players such as Danny Davis or Dave Wolff come from behind, take a pass from Peterson and then score a basket.

The second guard's main job is to guard the best backcourt player on the opposing team. Peterson enjoys penetrating and passing off to a teammate who scores. This is known as an assist.

Ralph does not score a great deal, but he has scored in double figures a number of times this year with many baskets coming on fastbreaks or coming after a steal.

At 6'2", 180 pounds Ralph has the size and strength to cover big guards but he also has the speed to cover quick guards. Last Thursday, Peterson held UNC-Charlotte's All-American candidate, Chad Kinch to 16 points, five points below his average.

Peterson was on a part time scholarship his freshman year and saw little playing time, but he worked hard, with the hope of playing his sophomore year.

But that was the year that Billy and Bobby Martin transferred to UNCW. Knowing that he would not play for two more years, until the Martin twins left, Peterson almost decided to leave UNCW, forget about basketball and devote his time completely to his studies, but Ralph's father persuaded him to stay, by "patient," and his time would come.

Staying at UNCW has turned out to be a good decision for Peterson who is now a starter on full scholarship in his senior year. Peterson feels that he "has no more physical ability than any other player but makes up for it with his knowledge and experience of the game."

Peterson says that "patience is important because of little things, like clearing out for players and for good ball movement." Being a starter and being named captain has added confidence to his game and Ralph feels that "confidence and patience can carry a little talent a long way."

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

Most of my life I have been curious about things. Why was I not supposed to touch that red hot burner? Why not take that comic book instead of pay for it? So it bothered me as to why so many people jogged on this campus. I decided to find out.

Deciding to go running and doing it is a totally different thing. I got up at about 6 a.m., my roommate threatening to throw my alarm clock at me. I put on my sweat pants and sweat shirt and then I pulled my gym shorts over my sweat pants. No one knows why this is done, but every true runner does it.

After getting outside the dorm and across the street I began following the fence at a brisk trot. My pace, however, soon dropped off to a mechanical leglifting motion, which barely kept me from falling down.

I had run almost half a mile, most of it looking at the ground, when I noticed her. Another runner! She was too close for me to turn around.

As we approached, I tried to square my shoulders and look very athletic and non-chalant. It must have worked because she did not fall down in laughing hysterics.

I worked my way around to the baja, feeling worse every minute. "Why does everyone do this," I kept asking myself? The baja only seemed to slow me down. I imagined myself on the world's biggest beach, never able to get to the water.

Finally I made it back to the dorm. I still had not figured out just why people ran at 6 o'clock in the morning, but I hoped to get some sort of prize for my gallant try.

I moved through the lobby with all the grace of Joe Jock—with two broken legs. The girl on the elevator did not seem at all impressed by my sweat, which I kept wiping in her direction. Getting off at my floor, I finally believed that I did not care why people ran. I felt proud that I had done what I did. I got up at 6 o'clock and ran over a mile. If I try it again, I hope someone stops me.

Spring football!

Most people believe that since the Super Bowl is over, football is over until next year's pre-season. But at UNCW there is a group that believes football is never over. That's right—from the folks who brought you action-packed Sunday afternoon football last semester comes SPRING FOOTBALL '79! The football club welcomes any former gridiron greats, managers, and just plain good ol' boys who want to get involved. We figure just about anyone who likes to hit (and doesn't mind being hit) would be a welcome addition to the most exciting club on campus.

Spring Football is not unique to UNCW. Most colleges and universities that have football programs also have spring workouts. The difference is, UNCW not only practices, we play! The spring schedule has 3 games against the club teams of Duke, Davidson, and Chapel Hill. Not only that—UNCW hosts the Azalea Festival Tournament which offers 3 games on our home turf. Besides the UNCW vs Carolina game, there will be 2 other games involving 4 other club federation teams.

Dues for new members are only $5.00 for the spring season. Practice will start March 13 at 3:30 p.m. So get out your old cleats and get involved... we promise spring ball will be a big hit!

Creative Arts' Brass Festival to end with two performances

Two performances this week-end will complete the Brass Festival '79 series being sponsored by the music division of the Department of Creative Arts.

The third event of Brass Festival '79 will be a horn performance by Steve Skillman at 8 p.m. Friday in King Auditorium. Works on the program are the Mozart Concerto Rondo K.171 and Trio, Opus 40 by Brahms.

Skillman will be assisted by Richard Deas, pianist, and Jane McKinney, Violinist. No fee will be charged for admission.

The series will conclude with a trumpet and organ recital by Christine Burkholder and Frank Wiles at 4 p.m. Sunday at St. James Episcopal Church. No fee will be charged for admission.

Works in the recital will include several Baroque compositions for piccolo, trumpet and organ and Vincent Persichetti's "The Hollow Men." A special feature will be the premier performance of a work composed for Brass Festival '79 by Wiley. The composition was commissioned by and is dedicated to Burkholder. The work is titled "Pentagram" and is written for C trumpet, flugelhorn, piccolo trumpet and organ.

Skillman is director of bands at South Brunswick High School in Southport. He was previously assistant director of bands at East Bladen High School in Elizabethtown and conductor of the Goldsboro Civic Orchestra.

He is an honor graduate of East Carolina University, where he was named by the music faculty the outstanding senior in the school of music. As an undergraduate he served as principal horn player in the symphony orchestra and the symphonic wind ensemble.

Skillman has served as a member of the staff of UNCW and ECU summer music camp. He is a member of the board of directors of the N.C. Music Educators Association.

Wiley and Burkholder are on the faculty of the UNCW department of creative arts.

Burkholder teaches brass and percussion, wind ensemble and freshman theory. She has a B.S. degree in music education from Pennsylvania State University, a master of music degree in wind instruments from the University of Michigan and a D.M.A. degree in trumpet performance from the University of Southern California. Her principal trumpet teachers were Rex Rockwell, Clifford Lilly, Robert Nagel and James Stamp.

She has taught instrumental music in the public schools of Pennsylvania, New York, California and England and has performed as a soloist and recitalist. In Wilmington she has performed primarily with the Wilmington Pro Musica.

Wiley teaches courses in composition, theory, electronic music and organ. He is also musical director of the Wilmington Pro Musica. He received a bachelor of music degree in organ and a master of music degree in composition from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He also holds a doctor of musical arts degree from the Cleveland Institute of Music and Case Western Reserve University. He studied organ with Ronald Davis and Rudolph Kremer, and his principal teachers of composition have been Roger Hannay and Donald Erb. He also studied briefly with Mario Davidovsky and John Eaton. His compositions include orchestral, choral, chamber, solo and electronic music.

Steen and Dorsey to appear in Thalian Music Series concert

The Thalian Music Series will present Richard Steen and Sam Dorsey in a recital of voice and guitar Sunday, Feb. 18, at 3 p.m. in historic Thalian Hall. This recital will be the third in a series of six concerts offered this year by the Wilmington Thalian Association.

Baritone Richard Steen is assistant professor of creative arts at UNCW. He teaches voice and directs the University's Concert Choir. Steen earned his bachelor of arts degree from Saint Olaf College and his master and doctorate of musical arts degrees from the Yale School of Music.

One year ago, while on leave of absence from UNCW, Steen studied voice in New York City while performing oratorios, opera and a solo concert at Carnegie Recital Hall. Of his New York recital debut, New York Times reviewer Joseph Horowitz wrote, "Richard Steen is a singer of obvious intelligence and musicality. He possesses a light, but resonant, well equalized baritone with a bright, open top of considerable beauty...."

Steen has appeared as soloist with the Detroit Symphony in two performances of Penderechis' "Magnificat" with the composer conducting, and has performed in recital throughout the eastern United States.

Sam Dorsey, instructor of guitar at UNCW, began his formal music education at UNC-Greensboro in 1973. He completed two summers of study with Jesus Silva at the North Carolina School of the Arts and spent the summer of Sam Dorsey and Richard Steen rehearse for recital.

1976 in that institution's International Music Program. He received his bachelor of music degree in 1977.

Dorsey has attended master classes with Andres Segovia and has performed in the master classes of Alirio Diaz, Michael Lowrimer, Jesus Silva, and Manuel Barrueco. He has also performed on recital in Switzerland, Italy, Connecticut, Florida, Virginia, North Carolina, along with many appearances on public and local television.

Before coming to Wilmington, Dorsey was instructor of guitar at Greensboro and Guilford Colleges.

Featured works on the program are Theme Variet

Finale by Ponce, selections from Die Schone Mullern, by Schubert, accompanied by Gregory Bell, pianist, and Six Sequidillas by Fernando Sor. Also included are Renaissance guitar pieces by Narvaez, Milan and Mudarra as well as lute songs by Dowland, Morley and Hume.

Admission to the recital will be $2. Season memberships to the Thalian Music Series are also available. For further information contact N. Alexander Miller, 20 South 3rd Street, Wilmington.

'A Piece of the Action' presented next week

The UNCW Fine Arts Committee will present the humorous movie "A Piece of the Action," on Tuesday, Feb. 20, in Kenan Auditorium at 8 p.m.

This is the seventh motion picture to be shown this semester by the Fine Arts Committee. Starring in this film, listed by Kevin Thomas of the Los Angeles Times as "uproarious yet poignant," are Sidney Poitier, Bill Cosby and James Earl Jones.

Poitier and Cosby, two gifted comics, are back again in a hilarious, fun movie. Poitier is off a Mafia don for half a million dollars. Cosby is a safe cracker who digs the discos and foxy ladies.

They are being blackmailed by a mystery man, Jones, who apparently knows enough about their enemies to send them to prison. Instead of having the two sent to jail, he offers them an alternative of working with a group of slum children. They accept this and teach these deprived and poor children how to survive in today's society.

Directed by Sidney Poitier, "A Piece of the action" was referred to by Rona Barrett of ABC-TV as "a wise, winning and wonderful movie." It is rated PG and is in color.

David Ansen wrote in Newsweek, "It touches the funny bone and the heart and leaves you feeling good. This is by all means superbly Poitier and Cosby's best effort. For fun see it."

The admission, except for those with season passes, will be 50 cents for UNCW students with ID cards and $1 for all non-students.

THE SKY'S THE LIMIT IN NAVAL AVIATION.

If you want to get to the top in aviation, the Navy is the way to go. We offer unlimited opportunities as pilots and Naval Flight Officers.

As a pilot, you'll be trained to fly the most advanced jets ever developed. As a Naval Flight Officer, you'll operate the sophisticated weapon systems, computers and advanced electronics. As either, you'll wear the wings of Naval Aviation.

If you're a college man in good physical condition, Naval Aviation could be your route to the top. Find out about it from your local recruiter.

Navy Lt. Roger Ross will be in the front lobby of Trask Coliseum during Career Day '79 on Wednesday, Feb. 14, from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Students interested in a Navy commission are cordially invited to stop by and talk with him. Or they may call the Officer Programs Office in Raleigh at 1-800-682-7568.

Toto: style, talent, beat — success

Put six studio musicians together with style, talent and beat—what do you have? One of the best new bands of the year—Toto.

Toto's debut lp Toto, has its music provided by David Hungate (bass), Bobby Kimball (vocals), Steve Lukather (guitars, vocals), David Paich (keyboards, vocals), Jeffery Procaro (drums, percussion), and Steve Porcaro (keyboards, vocals).

Toto, who released their now-hit single, "Hold the Line" before Thanksgiving, is climbing to the top of the new talent charts, although all six members are music vets. Boz Scaggs had three members of the Toto gang when he recorded Silk Degrees. Jeff Porcaro has also performed with Steely

RECORDS

Dan. Toto has opened shows for Frampton, Styx and Loggins.

Toto is one of the most talented bands around with David Paich writing most of the cuts on the disc and featured in "Rockmaker."

Toto gets most of its energy from guitarist Steve Lukather who also has a soft, deep-feeling voice in "Angela," which contains a combination of the band's styles.

Bobby Kimball does the rockers on the lp including the debut hit "Hold the Line," "Girl Goodbye," and the next released single, "I Supply the Love."

Steve Porcaro does the easy listening, mellow cut "Taken it Back."

My favorite non-released cut is the instrumental "Child's Anthem" which takes your breath away.

Toto by Toto deserves double attention and I'm looking forward to their second album.

Dorm contracts to be available

The Room and Board Contracts for 1979-80 will be available in Office II in Belk Hall starting February 19, 1979. ALL persons, including athletes must sign a contract if a dorm room is desired for 1979-80. Only students taking a minimum course load of twelve (12) semester hours of credit will be eligible to live in the residence halls.

The charges for the 15 meal plan will be $675 per semester and for the 21 meal plan $700 per semester. Four hundred (400) spaces have been reserved for present residence hall students.

Housing contracts will be issued starting February 19, 1979 from 1:30 - 4:30 p.m. in Office II in Belk Hall. (After February 23, 1979, contracts will be issued in the Housing Office in Alderman 201.) Students wishing to reserve a room will be required to make a $50 room deposit. Those individuals desiring to be roommates must turn housing contracts in together.

NOTE TO THE WISE: Of the eight hundred (800) students now living in the residence halls approximately 200 women and 200 men will receive dorm rooms for next year. Make sure you are one of those individuals, get your deposit in early.

Changes in Azalea Festival announced by president

Changes in the queen's coronation and show to only one performance and at a new location represent major revisions scheduled for this year's North Carolina Azalea Festival in Wilmington on April 5-8. The coronation of Queen Azalea XXXII will be held Saturday night, April 7, departing from the traditional format of a Friday night presentation, followed by a repeat performance on the next night.

This year, the Friday night program will be entertainment geared with special appeal and interest for college-age and young adult audiences.

Both programs will be held in Trask Coliseum, changing the site from Brogden Hall for the first time in 20 years.

The changes are being planned for several reasons, explains Paul G. Burton, president of the 1979 N.C. Azalea Festival. He says the move to Trask Coliseum will provide significantly increased seating capacity, "which we need in order to attract larger crowds." Also, he points out, there will be no longer a need for a repeat performance of the coronation and show, and this will provide an excellent opportunity to bring in outstanding entertainment as an added attraction.

"We want to broaden the Festival's appeal, and a special show on Friday night in Trask Coliseum aimed at college students should fill the bill," Burton says that age group is a segment of the population which needs greater participation in Festival activities.

Burton says the new format should prove popular with all age groups because it broadens the entertainment aspects of the Azalea Festival, without reducing the traditional pomp and pageantry of the spectacular queen's coronation and show.

Other changes in the 1979 Festival are the cancellation of the Azalea Ball, after a one-time resurrection last year; and to bring into one exhibition two different art shows.

Trash chute problem causes rash of false fire alarms

by Artesa Bannan
Seahawk Contributor

In recent weeks, Hewlett Hall residents have been plagued by annoying sounds both day and night. The sirens blare the call of a fire while students plug their ears and continue their normal activities.

The lack of response to the fire alarms is due to the fact that they are false alarms. In just one day, the alarm sounded on twelve different occasions.

The reason for the false alarms is a malfunction in the new trash chute system. Chief Resident Brad Dawson comments "The trash chute system is new and like any other mechanism, it needs adjustments. The proper authorities have been notified of the problem."

"The system is very sensitive and malfunctions because of many different problems, one being the change in recent weather conditions," Dawson adds.

Many students speculated that the alarms were going off "because of those stupid smoke detectors." Dawson, however, says that this is not part of the problem.

Nevertheless, a very serious problem has stemmed from the malfunction: the residents' attitude towards these and future alarms.

Some second and third floor residents simply shrug off the blaring sirens while others curse "the powers that be" and return to their respective activities.

Many students fear the consequences of future alarms when there just might be an actual emergency. The "cry wolf" theory seems to have a lot of impact on students.

All students invited to Career Day

All UNCW students are invited to visit Career Day '79 any time today between 10:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. The event is being held in the front foyer of Trask Coliseum with an open schedule so that students may attend for whatever period of time preferred.

Organizations participating in Career Day '79 include the following:

INDUSTRIAL: Hercofina, Babcock & Wilcox, De Poortere Corp., Fieldcrest, Federal Paper Board, Federal Paper Board, Carton Division, The Singer Co., Carolina Power & Light Co., W. R. Grace, Southern Bell Telephone Co., DuPont, General Electric, Corning Glass Works.

GOVERNMENT: National Weather Service, Southeast Regional Education Center, Wilmington Police Department, City of Wilmington, Internal Revenue Service, Employment Security Commission, New Hanover County, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Corps of Engineers.

RETAIL: K-Mart, Belk Berry.

EDUCATIONAL: Appalachian State University Graduate School, NC State University School of Textiles, NC State University Graduate School, NC Internship Program.

MILITARY: US Marine Corps, US Coast Guard, US Navy, US Air Force.

SALES: Burroughs Wellcome Company, Burroughs Corporation, Century 21, Jefferson Standard Insurance, Pilot Life Insurance, Equitable Life Insurance, Pine Valley Real Estate.

FINANCIAL: Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., Waccamaw Bank & Trust Co., North Carolina National Bank, First Citizens Bank & Trust Co., First Union National Bank.

SERVICES- MISCELLANEOUS:

OUS: Law & Co., Church-Related Careers, NC 4-H Camps, Boy Scouts of America, McAnderson's Inc. (McDonalds).

As part of the Career Day '79 activities, there will be brief meetings scheduled by the NC Internship Office and the Corps of Engineers for students particularly interested in state internships or federal employment opportunities.

These meetings will begin at 3:30 p.m. following Career Day, and will provide interested students additional time to discuss the opportunities and application procedures for either area. Ken Wright of the NC Internship Office will meet in Trask, room 142 at 3:30 to provide information about summer 1979 internships. Tim Grey of the Corps of Engineers will meet with anyone interested in federal employment at 3:30 in Trask, room 143.

You know when the end is near . . .

Valentine's Day! This is the day for all you soupy-eyed sweethearts out there in Cupidville. You know it's Heart-throb City between you 'n your true squeeze when he gives you a huge box of chocolates and you don't even mention your 300-calorie-a-day diet. And isn't it sweet when girls send their guys flowers? One friend of mine even wrote a little verse on the accompanying card that went like this: "Roses are red/ Your eyes are blue/ If you can send me candy/ I can send these to you!" So what if the guy was allergic to gardenias? Enough of the mush! After all, being in love is the simplest thing in the world, right? And falling out of love is painful as hell, eh? So what happens when you're somewhere in-between? How do you know when you're slowly sliding out of love? Glad you asked. You know the End is Near When...

SNCAE will hold its monthly meeting in the Education Building at 3:30 p.m. The guest speaker will be Dr. Grace Burton, who will conduct a mini-workshop on "Sex Role Stereotyping in the Classroom." All interested persons are welcome.

There will be a meeting of Phi Eta Sigma at 6:30 p.m. in the library conference room.

NOTES

The deadline for submissions to the Human Relations Essay Contest is February 16 at 5 p.m. Submit essays to the English Department secretary.

Are those liquor bottles full of pennies getting too heavy to carry around? Well, a solution is here at last.

Alpha Phi Omega will be attempting to collect a mile of pennies for the Heart Fund, February 12-16. Each penny donated will be attached to a mile-long strip of paper located in the cafeteria courtyard. If the mile is completed, we will succeed in contributing about $600 to the Heart Fund. APO Brothers and Pledges will be manning the mile from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. all through Homecoming week. Come out and see us and leave a few pennies; each one brings us closer. Look for our campaign on Feb. 14, the Heart Day of Heart Month.

The UNCW Chemistry Club will be raffling a keg of beer through the week of Homecoming. Tickets are $1 each. A winner will be selected by random drawing on February 16. All interested persons should contact a Chemistry Club member or Robin in C115.

The SGA is requesting that any club or organization that is planning to be subsidized by the SGA in the 1979-80 academic year to please turn in a budget request to the SGA office by Feb. 23.

A field study in tropical biology will be conducted July 12-Aug. 21 in Bolivia. For more information contact Dr. Charles Fugler, Biology Department.

The Psychology Club will sponsor a workshop on test taking anxiety beginning Thursday, February 15, 4 p.m. in Education Building.

SNCAE will host a very special guest on Thursday, Feb. 22, 1979 at 2:30 p.m. Larry Bateman, the National SNEA president, will be here from Washington, D.C. to speak to all educational majors and interested persons. Anyone interested is urged to attend. The meeting will be held in King Auditorium in the Education Building.

The fraternity of De Kappa Tate is proud to recognize the following nine pledges for this spring semester: Chip Gunter, Randy Varner, Dennis Smith, Mark Pindexter, Ernie Lynn, Robby Strickland, Frank Colvin, Jackie Autrey and Tom Lang. Best of Luck, guys!

Dr. David G. Haase from N.C. State University in Raleigh will speak before the Society of Physics Students on the topic: "Physics at Ultralow Temperatures." Thursday, February 15 at 4:00 p.m. in the Chemistry/Physics Building, Room C-218. All interested persons are cordially invited to attend.

Friday, February 16
Deadline for submissions to the Human Relations Essay Contest. Essays should be left with the English department secretary in the new classroom building. Prizes are: $50, 1st place; $30, 2nd; $20, 3rd; with a plaque going to the subject of the winning essay.

Appointments with recruiters should be made in the Office of Career Planning and Placement, 207 Alderman Administration Building. Sign-up sheets for recruiting interviews are available beginning Monday mornings, three weeks in advance of the scheduled interview.

Students must be registered with the Placement Office in order to sign up for interviews and are expected to honor appointments scheduled. To avoid disappointment, interview appointments should be scheduled as early as possible. Come by or call the Placement Office if there are questions or for additional information.

Volunteer opportunities

Enjoy the outdoors and help others at the same time--Volunteers are needed to cut, load, and deliver wood to some cold needy family, each Saturday, 9-12 noon.

Needed--Carpenters to make simple objects at home for use by handicapped children. Volunteers must have their own tools.

Volunteers are needed to assist with arts and crafts, Bingo, and individual visitation and recreation in a convalescent center.

For more information on these and other volunteer openings, see Linda Moore, Student Activities, or call the Voluntary Action Center, 762-9611.

Field study to Bolivia offered by Biology Department July 12

by Sherron McCombs
Seahawk Contributor

A field study in tropical biology to Bolivia on July 12-Aug. 21 is being offered to students by the Biology Department. This trip is to take the place of the originally scheduled field study to the Philippines on May 22-July 3.

The trip will include no more than 36 students and six field supervisors, divided into six groups of different study. The six major areas of research will include mammology, ecological mammology, ornithology, mammalian parasitology, ichthyology and herpetology. Heading these groups will be Walter C. Biggs and Phil Wiley of UNCW; David Webster of Texas Tech University; J. Van Remsen of Louisiana State University, Dr. Grover C. Miller of N.C. State University, and Dr. John Ramsey of Auburn University.

The groups will be collecting in the eastern lowlands of Bolivia, an area that is virtually unexplored zoologically, and chances are excellent that species unknown to science will be brought back for classification. Most of the areas to be explored will have to be reached on foot, as there are few roads in this region.

Students will be living in the jungle 24 hours a day. They will have the chance to be exposed to different cultures and languages, and there may possibly be encounters with primitive Indian tribes. These valuable experiences should enhance the student's appreciation for the preservation of nature and these unique cultures. Students will also be exposed to close group interaction and hardship living.

All participants will be instructed in field techniques for preparing specimens for scientific study, identification of species in the field, collecting strategies, and preparation of field notes. The materials brought back will also be available for further use.

UNCW is one of few schools offering extensive field studies in tropical biology to undergraduates. As a direct result of these trips students have presented past papers at the N.C. Academy of Sciences.

Field supervisors David Webster and Phil Wiley, who have done extensive work in Mexico and South America, will be returning to UNCW, in the fall as lecturers in biology, establishing along with Dr. Charles M. Fugler a valuable expertise in tropical biology for UNCW.

Southeast gay conference in Chapel Hill

Lesbians and gay men from around the Southeast will join together in Chapel Hill this spring to celebrate and demonstrate "unity through diversity," the theme chosen for the fourth annual Southeastern Conference of Lesbians and Gay Men. Although lesbians and gay men represent varied races, creeds, classes, backgrounds and lifestyles, the meeting is designed to explore and celebrate their common experience.

UNC-Chapel Hill will be the setting for the gathering to be held April 6 through 8.

The conference is seen as yet another link in the continuing growth of the gay movement in the Southeast, its organizers say. In order to facilitate the growth of the gay community and draw upon its diversity, the conference is reaching out to traditionally non-included groups and individuals: rural, handicapped, parents (child-care available) and other minorities.

A focal point of the conference will be a panel presentation representing many of gay lifestyles, supplemented by discussion and skill-sharing workshops. Space, time and activities are planned for celebration, including concerts, films, a picnic, and a dance.

In order to minimize the economic impact in an ERA-unratified state, free housing is guaranteed to those who pre-register. Conference participants are asked to bring food, so they may also share at mealtimes.

Registration is $8 regular and $4 for limited-income participants (at the door:$10, regular: $5, limited income). Sponsors are encouraged to help defray the registration and travel costs of limited income participants by sending a greater amount.

Information and registration forms are available from Carolina Gay Association, Box 39, Carolina Union, UNC, Chapel Hill, N.C. 27514.

Space will be available for exhibits and activities. Special arrangements can be made for handicapped participants with prior notice.

The next regional planning meeting will be Saturday, Feb. 17 in Chapel Hill. Call the Duke Gay Alliance, (919) 684-3043, for further information.

McKim places first in Lower Cape Fear art exhibition

An untitled acrylic by Wilmington artist George McKim won the top prize in the 17th Annual Lower Cape Fear Art Exhibition now in progress in the Kenan Hall Gallery.

The show will remain on public exhibition from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays through the month of February.

McKim received the $100 first prize. The $75 second prize was awarded to Mary Ellen Golden of Wilmington for a watercolor entitled "Skyline." An oil painting by William Lloyd of Wilmington, "Petal Forms," won the third place prize of $25.

Juror Michael Brantley, head of the educational services branch of the N.C. Museum of Art, awarded five honorable mentions in the show, which is composed of 62 pieces chosen from 137 entries.

Works receiving honorable mention were done by Georgeann McNeill Haas of Wilmington, Mavis Wyche of Hallsboro, Earl S. Bragg of Wilmington, Lorenzo Ripa of Wilmington and Henry Wyche of Hallsboro.

Cold protest

Dormitory students camp out for room contracts

by Bobby Parker
Editor

A group of about 50 angry dormitory residents camped out on the steps of Hanover Hall gymnasium in freezing temperatures Monday night to insure first chance at reserving a dorm room for next year. But according to Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy and student chief resident assistant Tom Hunt, the students were overreacting.

Contracts for dormitory rooms were scheduled to be available Monday at 1:30 p.m., but by 8:30 a.m. students had already begun to line up in Belk Hall. By noon, the lobby was filled with approximately 250 students, according to official estimates.

Problems arose when a group of students—identified by some as athletes and, more specifically by others, as members of the men's swim team—pushed through to the front of the line about 1:15 p.m.

Malloy said that when administration officials arrived on the scene, they decided to reschedule the contract distribution for Tuesday morning.

"There was no way to get (students) back in a line," Malloy said of the confusion. "There was no way to control it."

Malloy said that this is the first time the university has "had anything like this" and that officials were not anticipating such problems.

Several students among the groups camping out Monday night said it was "the only sure way" they could get a dorm contract. Many complained about the "lack of organization" during Monday's contract-letting session.

Students also expressed resentment that half of the residence capacity of the dorms will be reserved for incoming freshmen.

Malloy said that the Housing Office had reserved 400 spaces for freshmen as they did last year. But Malloy said that only 365 students had actually returned to the dorms from

Court ruling on student registration won't have immediate effect in county

by Bobby Parker
Editor

A recent ruling by the N.C. Supreme Court on residency requirements for student voters will not have any effect in New Hanover County until elections officials here are notified of changes by the state attorney general's office, according to New Hanover elections officer Dorothy Harrell.

The ruling, which stems from a suit filed in Orange County to prevent the registration of more than 2000 students at UNC-Chapel Hill, modifies provisions of a previous court decision which had been the basis of registering student voters in the state.

The most recent opinion states that a student cannot be denied the right to vote in his or her college community simply because the student does not intend to remain in that community after graduation. The decision also allows the use of additional questions to determine a student's eligibility to register.

In its unanimous decision, the court ruled that a student can be considered a local resident for voting purposes if the student "has abandoned his prior home, has a present intention of making the college town his home and intends to remain in the college town at least as long as he is a student there and until he acquires a new domicile."

In the past, questions asked of students have included inquiries about permanent possessions, location after graduation, church affiliation and business and banking connections.

According to Harrell, this type of questionnaire is still used in some cases in New Hanover County.

The earlier decision, used as a model for elections boards statewide, included a presumption that a student who leaves his or her parents' home to attend college is not domiciled in the place where the college is located.

The student voting controversy dates back to February 1978 when members of a conservative Orange County political organization filed suit charging that the Orange County Board of Elections was allowing students who were not residents of the county to vote there.

Superior Court Judge James H. Pou Bailey ordered the elections board to compare its voter rolls with UNC registration records and remove all full-time students who listed a home address outside Orange County. The N.C. Court of Appeals later stayed Bailey's order, however.

Harrell said that few students have attempted to register in New Hanover County, although a few were turned down during registration for the recent liquor-by-the-drink referendum.

"I don't have too many students to approach me (for registration)," Harrell said.

Benita Wilson crowned queen

Ms. Benita Wilson, a freshman from Magnolia, NC, was crowned Homecoming Queen at halftime of the Homecoming game against East Carolina. Wilson was sponsored by the Omega Psi Phi fraternity.

Wilson was escorted by Synclair Harris who is a member of the Omega Psi Phi fraternity.

The queen, who is studying physical therapy said she was excited about the idea of being Homecoming queen. Included in the duties of being Homecoming queen, Wilson will be making many public appearances during the next year.

The queen's extracurricular activities include being secretary of the Black Student Union. Her hobbies are sewing, dancing and athletics.

Homecoming Week presents success, failure of Program Board

In its first real test, Homecoming Week, the Program Board should be applauded--and reprimanded.

As a whole, Homecoming Week was carefully planned and well executed. There were events scheduled for every night of Homecoming Week and each event was aimed at satisfying a particular student interest. Under the direction of individual board members, each program was held with no admissions cost to the student body.

Cindy Coie, Program Board chair, has proven herself worthy of praise. Guiding the board through a successful week of events, Coie has shown insight and dedication to her work. Having gained the trust and following of the student body, Coie and the Program Board can look forward to greater student turnout and increased interest in their efforts to bring about better programming to UNCW.

Individual events, such as the Dating Game and the Fine Arts movie, were well received by students, perhaps because Committee Chairs Mark Davis and Steve Chiappisi were coordinated in their efforts for a smooth production.

Andy Wahlberg, Locomotion Circus and Triangle were, although not as well attended as the other events, scheduled and carried out as well as the others. However, this was accomplished only after weeks of preparation.

Unfortunately, the only fly in the ointment came as what some viewed as the climax of Homecoming Week, the Homecoming Dance.

Homecoming Committee Chair Tammy Holder was not as coordinated as her fellow board members in her efforts to follow up good programming with good programming. Working with a nearly non-existent committee and a last-minute deadline, the dance was pulled off, much to the surprise of a few. This should not have been the case, though, and perhaps Holder should have followed her fellow programmers and made Homecoming

THIS NEWSPAPER'S OPINION

'79 a complete success.

There were many factors involved in the handling of the dance. The major flaw lies in the mismanagement of time and lack of available resources, namely student manpower. Rather than relying upon a committee designed specifically for the purpose of concerted programming, Holder depended upon members of the Program Board who were by the end of the week, tired and not at all prepared to meet another deadline without advance notice.

Most people who attended the dance, however, were pleased with the outcome of it. But this does not a good program make. Success is not only measured in terms of how well it was received (this is an essential part of it, though), but how well it was put together and carried out. Even though the dance was successful in the eyes of those who did not work behind the scenes, unfortunately it could not have been that successful to those members of the board and their committees.

Perhaps by using Homecoming Week as a learning experience and a meter stick, the Program Board can look forward to success in the future and greater student awareness.

Editorial shortsighted, ill-timed

To the Editor:

It seems to me that your latest editorial concerning the graduation committee is shortsighted and ill-timed. Efforts are being made to include suggestions from students; surely, that is the important point.

You have labelled the efforts "cosmetic" and have, in essence, insured apathy in the response of graduating students to the survey. Why should they bother? According to you, it will make no difference. I strongly disagree.

I will agree, however, that graduation is for the students, but the prestige of the university is important, too. What graduate wouldn't like to see Harvard, Radcliff or other prestigious label on their diploma? It may not mean a better education, but it could help on a job application. The more prestige the university can generate through academics or athletics, the more valuable the UNCW label will become.

People who continuously look backward can never see where they are going. Last year is not this year. Let's try to build on the efforts of the students and the administration. No one expects applause; neither should criticisms be levied for efforts toward cooperative progress.

Return the survey, seniors. Give the committee a chance.

Election thanks

To the Editor:

This is an open letter of thanks to all those who helped with the elections for Homecoming queen. A special thank you is extended to the pledges of APO and also to Maurice Smith of Omega Psi Phi for manning the polls.

Many thanks are offered to Dr. Malloy, Dean Parker, Sherri King and Linda Huntley for their help in counting the ballots.

And to Wayne Dunlap, Linda Moore, Jon Greene and Chryl Kane--saying thank you isn't nearly enough.

Residents

last year.

The policy, Malloy said, is to let 400 contracts to returning residents and put others waiting rooms on a waiting list. Every student on the waiting list last spring was eventually accommodated. Malloy also said, and he added that he expects the same outcome this year.

Malloy said that the major problem Monday was poor communication of the situation to students. He criticized an announcement in the Seahawk provided by the Housing Office which warned students to "get your deposit in early" to be sure of getting a room contract.

Administration officials were hoping that a change in location and method of distributing contracts would help avoid a repeat Tuesday of Monday's confusion. The site was moved to Hanover Hall and students were supposed to receive a number when they arrived to insure order in lining up for contracts.

Malloy said that the students camping out Monday were "determined to get the room they want and that's what they feel they have to do to get it."

Several of the student group said they were not only concerned about getting a room but in which dorm their room would be. Most expressed a desire to be located in the two coed dormitories.

Malloy said the situation was symptomatic of the university's "growing pains" because more and more students now want to reside on campus.

Ramblings on state issues: Brown-Hunt, ERA, 1980 elections

On the general topic of state government and politics, the following observations of recent issues and events:

BROWN-HUNT? Speculation that California Gov. Jerry Brown may be warming up to NC Gov. Jim Hunt as a possible running mate in Brown's challenge to President Carter for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination is best described as frivolous.

Although fueled by recent contacts between the two to discuss the proposed federal balanced budget amendment and constitutional convention, the speculation appears to be a one-sided attempt by Brown to enlist Hunt's support. And as long as it remains that way, there's not a chance anything serious will result from the talk.

Hunt's support would be a decisive boost for Brown's 1980 chances, which appear doubtful from the start simply because of Carter's incumbency. A Brown-Hunt ticket would mold together the two regions of the country which form the basis of the "new conservatism," characterized by the "me first" issues of the pocketbook. If Brown could bring Hunt into his camp, it would be a coup de politique bringing a Southern governor in opposition with another Southern governor of similar backgrounds and positions.

Hunt has responded to the speculation by declaring his support for the President and more-or-less laughing at the prospect of sharing a Democratic ticket with Brown. This is probably not so much that Hunt is not interested in the prospect—he probably is. But he is not likely to unseat Carter and that it would be better for both the state and his own political futures to continue his support of the President.

This brings to mind an interesting comparison between Gov. Hunt and NC's Republican senator, Jesse Helms. In 1976, Helms jumped on the Reagan bandwagon very early in an attempt to unseat President Gerald Ford. Reagan, of course, lost the nomination and there was little chance that had Ford won re-election, Helms would have carried any political clout for the state or himself.

Hunt has a much more practical approach to politics and government than the ideologically-inclined Helms. That's why Hunt can do so much more for his state than Helms would ever hope to do.

Hunt himself is sure of what his support means to both Carter and Brown, and he knows how to swing it in his favor. Why, then, would he take a chance on Brown and spoil a good relationship with the solid favorite?

ERA'S DEFEAT. Ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment in NC's General Assembly died a quick death in committee last week—the fourth defeat in as many years for the amendment in this state. ERA supporters saw the certainty of defeat on the floor of the state senate and decided to give in to avoid another psychological bruising.

Part of the responsibility for the defeat belongs to Lieutenant Gov. Jimmy Green who has taken an opposing position to ratification and works quietly behind the scenes keeping "no" votes in line. Green could probably care less about the amendment itself; he is simply using the issue as a weapon in his continuing power struggle with Gov. Hunt.

Hunt lobbied extensively for ERA ratification this year as opposed to previous years when his support was not as strenuous as it might have been due to priority given the gubernatorial succession amendment. Many ERA supporters are reportedly blaming Hunt for the defeat this year, expecting the governor to produce instant ratification at will.

ERA is a highly emotional issue, however, that has brought out the worst demagogic tactics of forces opposed to most any civil and human rights legislation. Their distortion of the issue—portraits of women in combat boots, homosexual marriages, destruction of the family—has had a great effect on the senators. The lobbying of anti-ERA forces has probably been stronger than pro-ERA supporters.

ERA still needs the approval of three state legislatures before it becomes part of the Constitution. It will likely be an issue again next year for the General Assembly, and until the deadline expires or it is ratified.

1980 ELECTIONS. Some very interesting match-ups appear in the works for the 1980 state elections within the state Democratic party.

For Republicans, however, 1980 looks like such a dismal prospect that one GOP legislator even suggested that the party sit out the races for governor and lieutenant governor and concentrate on the state senate. That strategy has been wisely rebuked by the party's leadership.

If the Republicans ever want to become a political force in a viable two-party structure in North Carolina, they can't afford to not field as many candidates for as many offices as they can find.

It was probably inevitable that state Insurance Commissioner John Ingram would figure into the key races for the Democrats in 1980. Ingram, the party's unsuccessful nominee for Jesse Helms' U.S. Senate seat in 1978, has been putting out political "feelers" for the governor's race and the contest for Democrat Robert Morgan's U.S. Senate seat, both of which are up for election in 1980.

Word has it that Ingram accuses both Hunt and Morgan of lackluster support in his race against Helms. That is probably true of Morgan, but Ingram actually owes a great deal of his support in 1978 to Hunt and his followers who came in line for the party's sake. Ingram would do well to not bother the Governor, because it won't do him any good anyway.

State Attorney General Rufus Edmisten is likely to challenge Morgan for the Democratic Senate nomination. Edmisten has been positioning himself for higher office since he became attorney general, and his heart is in Washington, not Raleigh.

The most interesting race in 1980 could be for lieutenant governor where Jimmy Green will have to settle for a re-election bid (though he would like to run for governor) and face a challenge from state House speaker Carl Stewart (who would also like to run for governor). Stewart is gearing a campaign committee for a statewide race and would probably use the lieutenant governorship as a stepping stone to the governor's mansion in 1984.

Stewart's problem will be that Green has a solid organization already in operation. It will be interesting to see how active Gov. Hunt becomes in the race (overtly or covertly), but one thing is certain: Hunt's supporters will welcome anyone with a reasonable chance of defeating Green.

Two other names to look for on Democratic ballots next year are Lillian Woo and George Breece. Both were unsuccessful candidates for council of state positions in 1976; Woo for state auditor and Breece for secretary of state. Their problem then was that they were running against 40-year veterans in both offices: state Auditor Henry Bridges and Secretary of State Thad Eure.

Woo forced Bridges into a runoff in the primary last time and gave him the political workout of his career. Breece came as close to defeating Eure as anyone in memory. Bridges may choose to retire this time around, but count on Eure to run again. He doesn't scare easily.

Kapraun nominated for Fulbright-Hays award

by Sherron McCombs
Seahawk Contributor

Dr. Donald H. Kapraun of the Biology Department has recently been nominated for a research position in Norway under the Fulbright-Hays Award, a program set up for the exchange of scholars between the U.S. and other countries.

The Fulbright-Hays program is sponsored by the Council for the International Exchange of Scholars (CIES), the principle agency cooperating in the administration of grants for American university lecturers and advanced research scholars. The program is designed "to enable the government of the U.S. to increase mutual understanding between the people of the U.S. and the people of other countries." The U.S. Department of State has administered this program with the assistance of over 40 bi-national educational commissions and foundations in countries that have an executive agreement with the U.S. for a continuing exchange program.

Kapraun applied for the scholarship, as did many others, upon discovering a general research position available in Norway, where the University of Oslo is conducting extensive research in marine biology.

Kapraun's interest lies in discovering if there is any genetic continuity between certain seaweeds that occur on this Atlantic coast during the winter, and along the Norwegian coast throughout the summer. The water temperatures of the two coastlines correspond during alternate seasons, therefore causing one algae to be flourishing here in the winter, and in Norway during the summer.

In order to test this hypothesis, the plants must be collected in each area at the appropriate times, kept alive, allowed to become reproductive concurrently and then crossed to determine if the hybridization will occur. From the results of this experiment, the evolutionary rate among the chosen species could be established.

Rejection of desegregation plan won't end search for blacks, officials say

by Cathy Horrell
Staff Writer

The rejection of the UNC desegregation plan will not have any effect on UNCW unless HEW discontinues federal aid funds. Dr. James K. McGowan, assistant to the chancellor and federal compliance officer, says, however, that "the rejection of the UNC desegregation plan does not mean UNCW will not continue its program to increase the black student enrollment."

Douglas L. Johnson, assistant to the director of admissions, discussed the school's plans in recruiting black students. College visitation is generally conducted during the months of September through December. During this time he covers five counties: New Hanover, Duplin, Pender, Robeson, and Columbus.

Johnson says that there are many problems he faces in encouraging black students to come to UNCW. For example, there is a slim chance of getting a room in the dormitory after December. Some students want to go to a university near their home. Many black students have complained about a lack of activities such as a football team or a marching band.

But the main reason black students from other cities in NC (especially from the western part of the state) do not attend UNCW is because of an identity problem with this area, Johnson says.

Johnson's immediate solution to the problem is to bring a black student from UNCW with him on his follow-up visits. He said he prefers a black student who went to that particular high school. For example, if he visits Hoggard High School he would choose a black student that attended there or was from the Wilmington area.

Johnson adds that "other alternatives are being looked into such as bringing a black faculty member on these follow-up visits."

Another possibility is to have different school organizations schedule participating students on campus to be in a specific area or office from 10 to 11 a.m. and 3 to 4 p.m. This would provide guides to enable parents and incoming students to ask questions while they tour UNCW.

Johnson emphasized that "the black students here are the key to encouraging other (black) students" to enroll here.

Black enrollment in the fall of 1977 was 266; in the fall of 1978, that number had increased to 280.

pointed representative-at-large, Karin Whaley officially resigned as senior vice-president.

In speaking to the members of the Legislature, SGA President Wayne Dunlap urged that legislators draw up a preliminary budget for the 1979-80 school year.

Whaley asked the members present if there was enough interest to support a student legal service at UNCW. As part of her honors work, Whaley is looking into the feasibility of a legal service to determine if there is sufficient funds (and interest) to support such a service.

Legislature again fails to go gather quorum

by Helen Hazelton

The Student Legislature failed to gather enough legislators to conduct a meeting last Thursday night, the third such meeting this semester that failed to gather a quorum.

The first meeting that failed to gather a quorum was held in December of last year. In January, the Legislature was scheduled to meet, but lost its quorum as the meeting progressed.

Two new senators were sworn in for the spring term. Gracie Johnson was appointed to the position of junior senator and John Wiley was ap-

The Southeast Corner:

The fifth season at residence halls

by Artesa Bohannon
Staff Writer

There is a fifth season settling in Belk, Galloway and Hewlett Halls. It arrived soon after classes began this semester. What else but the ACC basketball season!

In the dorms, memorabilia of favorite teams can be seen worn on bodies, sticking on walls, windows, and toothbrushes, and covering beds, tables, and floors.

More and more of the young women on campus, particularly in Belk and Galloway, are changing their dials from romantic movies and situation comedies (even Starsky's losing some viewers) to follow the ACC roundball action.

On any given game day, a certain chain of events prevail.

Most fans have to talk about the game throughout the morning and afternoon to psych themselves out.

Some Galloway Hall residents meet to set their own games plans in motion.

"Where should we watch! How early should we be? Who's going to Kroger?"

Game time is set for 9 p.m., and the fans are getting somewhat restless by 8:45. Rooms and suites begin to fill as the last show's credits roll by. Almost simultaneously, can taps open and that long-awaited sight appears—a full-court shot of the two teams of the hour.

The bets have been finalized, and the only tip-off is just moments away. The tension thickens as the viewers lean forward in their seats.

The ball goes up and the game is finally under way.

There are sighs and moans through the first few possessions. Suddenly the viewers have loosened up and are ready for a good loud contest.

Now the avid dorm fan never gives up on his or her team, even if the team is down by 25 points with 30 seconds left in the first half and his or her favorite player has the hiccups.

It's half-time and suddenly doors open—people mingle in the halls, answer nature's call, and reach for the 'frige a few more times.

Some wander down to their game rooms where they play a couple of games of foosball and pinball. More and more prefer backgammon (with numerous variations) for their halftime entertainment.

The intermission is almost over as the groups return to their viewing centers. Roars of approval ring out on fabulous slam dunks, amazing passes, steals, and rebounds.

The game is winding down to the final seconds as each fan takes a deep breath. The game is closer than expected as the crowds count the seconds off.

The chants ring out in the Southeast Corner as the victory followers cheer. But the agony of defeat will linger campus wide . . . until the next game.

Black History Month:

Anderson is outstanding contralto

Marian Anderson (1908-), one of the outstanding contraltos of our time, was born and educated in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She began her singing career at the age of six in the choir of the Union Baptist Church. Recognizing her unusual talent, the members of the church started a trust fund, "Marian Anderson's Future," for the purpose of securing adequate musical training for the young girl. This fund made it possible for her to study under Giuseppe Boghetti.

After several years of private study, Anderson made a tour of Southern Negro colleges, where she gained considerable poise and control. She made her professional debut in 1924, and in 1925 she was chosen from among 300 competitors to sing with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. Later, she was invited to appear as guest soloist with the Philadelphia Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

Anderson received a Rosenwald scholarship, which enabled her to study in Germany. She made her European debut in Berlin and was invited to tour the Scandinavian countries, where she sang in both Swedish and Finnish. Returning to America, she traveled on the concert circuit from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

During her next tour of Europe, she sang in Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Norway, and was decorated by the king of Sweden and the king of Denmark. The famous Finnish composer Sibelius was so moved by her rich contralto voice that he dedicated a composition to her. The London Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Sir Henry Wood, engaged her for two concerts; and Arturo Toscanini, after hearing Anderson sing in Salzburg, expressed the opinion that a voice such as hers "comes once in a century."

In spite of the recognition of her talent and the acclaim accorded Anderson in Europe and among music lovers in America, she was to experience the bitterness of racial bigotry in Washington, D.C., when the Daughters of the American Revolution refused to allow her to sing in Constitution Hall in 1939. To express disapproval of the actions of the D.A.R., some 75,000 people appeared at the Lincoln Memorial on that Easter Sunday morning to hear Anderson sing in an open-air concert.

Anderson has received many honorary degrees and awards for her achievements in the field of music. Some of them are: a request for a command performance by the British crown; a decoration from the government of Finland; the Spingarn Medal; the Order of African Redemption of the Republic of Liberia; and the Bok Award of $10,000. She was the first Negro to sing at the Metropolitan Opera; and in 1961, she was named one of the world's 10 most-admired women by the American Institute of Public Opinion poll. She was appointed United States delegate to the 13th General Assembly of the United Nations and was sent on a good-will tour of the Far East by the State Department.

Remembering her struggles, and the encouragement that she received from the Union Baptist Church and the National Association of Negro Musicians, Anderson has established a trust fund to aid talented American artists.

Legal service agency proposed for UNCW

by Karin Whaley
Staff Writer

Faced with an increasingly complex myriad of laws governing their lives, students are turning more and more to their student legal services for answers.

Student legal services are being adopted by many universities across the nation. They provide free legal advice on most any subject for all full-time students. They are programs that can be sponsored by either the student government or through a separate fee (similar to the Student Health Service).

Cost per student would be approximately 50 cents per semester. One hour in a lawyer's office for counseling, can cost on the average $35.

Students on the university campus are legal adults. They are responsible for all contracts they sign—on-campus housing contracts, apartment leases, loans, car payments, insurance plans, student loans—all of which involve legal contracts and therefore legal problems. Other problems students might encounter are traffic violations (driving under the influence) and drug charges.

In the coming weeks, a ground work for a student legal service at UNCW will be laid. Any student interested in the legal services program should contact the student government office, upstairs in the Pub. Students working with the project hope to establish a viable service which will become an invaluable part of the university.

Who's who lists 28 students

The 1978-79 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges will carry the names of 28 students from UNCW who have been selected as being among the country's most outstanding campus leaders.

Campus nominating committees and editors of the annual directory have included the names of these students based on their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities and future potential. They join a group of students selected from more than 1000 institutions of higher learning in all 50 states, the District of Columbia and several foreign nations.

Outstanding students have been honored in the annual directory since it was first published in 1934.

Students named this year from UNCW are:

John Norman, Ray C. Blackburn, Patricia Jean Blanton, Dorothy Faye Brags, James Cecil Burke, Connie Sue Butner, Cindy Diane Cole, Franklin Edwards Colvin, Jr., Francis Deluca and Glen Alan Downs.

Also, Jonathan H. Faill, Jr., Sandra Kay Hales, Angela Janette Hankins, Greta Anita Lint, Richard Long, Melissa Ann McIntosh, Majorie Woodhurst McLamb, Frances Lee Marshburn, Robert Berry Parker and Robin Beth Romblad.

Others include Joan Margaret Rovinski, Jackie Shanklin, Deborah Jean Sloan, Lana D. Taylor, Raymond Allan Warren, Karin Lee Whaley, Pamela Bostick Whitlock and David Paul Wolff.

Hawks say good-bye to seniors, 20-win season

by J. Dillon Bryant
Managing Editor

The Seahawks ended their chances of a 20-win season last week with a 78-70 loss to the East Carolina Pirates.

Up at the break, 36-31, the 'Hawks played a dismal second-half in which they saw Oliver Mack lead E.C.U. to a come-from-behind win.

Art Paschal and Ralph Peterson, rained by fellow teammates, cut down the first net. Dave Wolff and Delaney Jones down the second.

The scene, of course, was this past Monday night at Trask Gymnasium in which four UNCW Seahawks said goodbye to coach Mel Gibson and their season fans.

Ralph Peterson, Art Paschal, Delaney Jones and Dave Wolff had an emotional farewell while helping to crush the University of Maine, 85-64.

With Barry Taylor, the four seniors paced to a 14-2 lead in the first half, 17-31 halftime lead.

A 26-6 second half explosion blew the game wide open at 43-47 as the 'Hawks hit their first 11 shots in a row.

Leading the way was Wolff with 25 points, Peterson 16 points and Danny Davis and Barry Cooper 12 points each. Wolff also grabbed 14 rebounds while Taylor dished out six assists.

The Seahawks shot a blistering 65.5 percent in the second half to end up with a 59.7 game percentage.

The four seniors leave behind them a young but successful tradition of winning basketball that is admittedly still in the formative stages here at UNCW. It is this that they will be remembered for much more appreciatively than for any points or rebounds they contributed.

"All four of these young men deserve a lot of credit for what they've given UNCW basketball during their college careers," Seahawk coach Mel Gibson says.

"Art, of course, has been a welcome addition to our squad the past two seasons, but I would be negligent if I did not devote special praise to the other three."

"Dave, Ralph and D.J. have been through a lot together here during their four years. They played on our last NAIA squad and helped us make the transition to Division I. They have experienced a coaching change in our staff (Rick Holdt replacing Calvin Bayley) and, too, they were with us as we moved into our new facility."

There have been many good times and some rough times, too," Gibson says. "but I have always been confident in all three of these fellows that they would give me their best effort and that's about all anyone could ever ask for."

The efforts of the Wolff-Peterson-Jones trio have contributed to 63 wins already, still with three games remaining.

Not since the days of Wilmington Junior College have four seasons been put together in such winning fashion.

The future? Art will in all likelihood be pursuing a coaching and teaching career this time next year, as will Delaney.

Dave is also in education (a dean's list student and nominee for Academic All-American the past two years), but he hopes to have an opportunity to continue playing basketball, combining that with his strong Christian beliefs, as a member of an Athletes-in-Action type organization.

Ralph is likewise a very successful business major who could possibly end up in graduate school next year, if the right professional opportunity does not open up.

Whatever the case may be—goodbye, seniors, to a job well done.

Swim team finishes season 9-2

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW swim team closed out their season Saturday, defeating both Washington and Lee and Virginia Commonwealth before a crowd of about 200 spectators. The men's team finished the season at 9-2 while the women recorded a 2-4 mark.

The men's team defeated Washington and Lee, 65-48, and dropped Virginia Commonwealth, 71-42. UNCW placed first in the 400-yard medley relay (Thompson, Malone, Gratale, Sasscer), the 200-yard butterfly (O'Leary), the 100-yard freestyle (Gratale), the 1,000-yard freestyle (Cascaddan), the 200-yard breaststroke (Malone), and the 400-yard freestyle relay (O'Leary, Sasscer, Michalove, Baker). In the 200-yard butterfly, Sam O'Leary broke his own school record of 1:56.90 with a new time of 1:56.84.

The UNCW women's team was defeated by Virginia Commonwealth, 77-36. Even though the team lost, several swimmers recorded times that qualified them for the NIAA championships in Reno, Nevada, March 8-10. Valerie Newlin qualified for the 400-yard individual medley (5:01.74), Denise Squires and Debbie Sproles in the 100-yard breaststroke (1:12.18 and 1:12.21, respectively), Debbie Sproles in the 100-yard freestyle (56.33), Denise Squires in the 200-yard individual medley (2:20.89), and the relay team of Karen Young, Ellen Cushman, Debbie Sproles, and Valerie Newlin in the 400-yard freestyle relay. UNCW took first place in the 100-yard backstroke (Cushman, 1:04.70), the 200-yard backstroke (Cushman, 2:19.87), the 200-yard individual medley (Squires, 2:20.89), and the 500-yard freestyle (Newlin, 5:29.78).

This Thursday through Saturday, February 22-24, UNCW will host its biggest swim meet ever, the three-day UNCW Invitational Championships. The field includes East Carolina, Baptist College of Charleston, the University of Tampa, and Pfeiffer College (women). Probably the strongest team competing is ECU, which lost to N.C. State and UNC-Chapel Hill in two very close meets.

The real opponent in the invitational, however, will be the clock. Since UNCW is not affiliated with any conference, the invitational gives the Seahawk swimmers "something to peak for," according to Coach Dave Allen. The real emphasis here is for the swimmers to achieve their best times, especially in the individual categories, in order to qualify for the Eastern Seaboard Championships to be held at Harvard, March 1-3. In preparation for this weekend, the team is resting up, and morning workouts have been eliminated. All the swimmers are gearing up for that one all-out performance. The UNCW Invitational will begin tomorrow at 12 noon with the preliminaries in 12 events. The finals in those events will start at 7:30 p.m. Thursday. A different set of events will begin on Friday with 12 noon preliminaries and the finals at 7:30 p.m. The meet will wind up on Saturday with another set of events. The preliminaries will start at 10 a.m. and the finals are set for 4 p.m.

"We're really looking forward to this one," Coach Allen commented. "Running a meet like this one is harder because swimming is so new here. We hope this one will get people ready to help with later meets of this kind."

A large crowd is expected at the UNCW natatorium for the three-day event, as the Seahawks drive towards possible post season competition.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

Last Monday's game against the University of Maine marked the end of four fine basketball careers. Ralph Peterson, Delaney Jones, Art Paschal, and Dave Wolff all played their last game in a UNCW uniform. This quartet of players has led the Seahawks to many fine victories in their seasons here.

Peterson has experienced his first year as full-time starter. Ralph is the team leader in steals and is averaging around seven points per game. He is a take-charge guy, too, as they looked to him for an important basket or assist when things got tight.

Delaney Jones has started many times this year, as in all his other three years before. Jones has been among leading rebounders all year, and in fact, led the team in grabs in two games. He is also an inspirational leader, giving the team support with his easy going, friendly attitude.

Paschal is a transfer to UNCW from Lenoir-Rhyne College in Hickory. Since becoming eligible in mid season last year he has provided the team with a proven outside shooter and reliable depth in the front-court.

Wolff will be sorely missed. The likeable 6-5 forward was the team captain and the team's leading scorer averaging about 15 points per game. He was also among tops in rebounding, steals, and shooting percentage. Wolff also provided the intangible leadership for the young Seahawk team.

These four players will be missed for their contributions on and off the court. Where will they go? Peterson is a business major and hopes to go to graduate school. Jones wants to be a Physical Ed teacher. Paschal is planning on coaching and Wolff is a history major, but would like to go on in basketball, possibly playing for Athletes-In-Action.

Everyone at UNCW hopes these guys are as successful in the future as they were in basketball for the Seahawks.

Intramurals: Some good, some bad

by Danny Cuffe
Staff Writer

In the talent-rich "A" league, two teams are tied for the top spot. After eight games both the Phantoms and the Dog Eyes post the league's best records at 7-1.

Close behind the leaders is the Wilmington "10". The "10" are a well-coached team and may be the quickest club in the "A" league. They handed the Dog Eyes their only loss in a one-point squeaker last Wednesday night, February 7. The "10" are second at 6-2.

In third and fourth place, respectively, the Devil Dogs and the Hounds are two very similar teams. Both rely on strong outside shooting, and each could improve on re-bouncing. The Hounds stand at 3-4, the Devil Dogs at 4-4.

Despite having what may be the league's best 2-1-2 zone defense, Pi Kappa Phi can't seem to win the close ones. At 1-7, they have suffered three straight losses to the Devil Dogs, the Wilmington "10", and the Phantoms, all by 6 or less.

In last place, Thunder and Lightning is still trying to iron out its problems. They remain winless at 0-9.

In the "B" league three teams claim the most victories, with the Running Rebels, Breezin', and the Manor Nerf Kids all having 5 a piece. The Rebels, however, take the number one spot as they own the fewest losses with 2.

Breezin' and the Nerf Kids come next, suffering 3 and 4 defeats respectively. The Bongers have only lost 3, yet with only 4 wins, they remain at number four.

Fifth place is shared by F. Joe's Bar and Grill and the Long Johns, both at 3-5. The JoJos also claim three wins but their six defeats keep them in the cellar of the "B" league.

The Heads are ahead of everyone in the "C" league, alone at the top with a 6-1 record. In a three-way tie for second Punk Dunk, Father's Finest, and Harrison's Guerillas all stand at 5-4.

At 4-3 the Hawks take third place, while the Wrightsboro Warriors, 1-6, are clearly last. The "C" league has only six teams, the other three leagues have seven.

The steadily improving "D" league shows the Red Rockets as its top team at 7-1. The Bruins also claim only one loss but, at 6-1, must settle for second.

The Outlaws and the Nuggets both own 4-3 records and are tied for third. Also tied, but for fourth, are the Sea Puppies and the Rowdies, both 2-5.

And, finally, newcomer TKE struggles along, still at the bottom of the "D" league at 0-5.

Theatre to present Polish production, 'Tango,' this weekend in SRO

The University Theatre will present Slawomir Mrozek's lively and witty international triumph "Tango" in the SRO Theatre opening Friday, Feb. 23, and running through Monday, Feb. 26, with an 8:15 p.m. curtain. Reservations may be made by calling 791-4330, extension 2440, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. during the week of production.

"Tango" was first performed at the Yugoslavensko Dramsko Pozoriste in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, on April 21, 1965. The first performance of "Tango" in New York took place at the Pocket Theatre on Jan. 20, 1969. "Tango" has become the most produced contemporary Polish play and has established Slawomir Mrozek as one of the leading European playwrights.

"Tango" is exciting enough and funny enough to command attention on any viewing level. But apart from its intrinsic attractiveness, it can also be seen as a parable of modern history, with its Bohemian family reflecting the disorder of life between the wars and its hero reflecting the nostalgia of reaction. "Tango" belongs to Mrozek's continuing war against power's savage parody of logic.

In "Tango," as in Mrozek's earlier plays, perfect logic is energetically applied to illogical ends. Arthur, the young seeker for order, lives with his disorderly family in a state of total illogicality: his mother sleeps with a vulgar hoodlum; his father looks the other way, while writing avant-garde plays; and his grandmother plays cards incessantly with his Uncle Eugene or anyone else she can con into her game.

Arthur's elaborate coup d'état, with the unthinking aid of his sweetheart, is attempted in order to establish the logical order that is non-existent in his home. This final move on his part leads to one of the most chilling moments in the literature of the modern theatre.

The production is under the direction of W. Terry Rogers with Larry Mathews serving as assistant director. Tim Wesner and Don Pickett serve respectively as the scene designer and the lighting designer. Bonnie Rogers is designing the make-up and posters while Jean Wesner, Jon Mendel and Connie Liles are collecting properties. Darrel Killingsworth is designing the costumes. Appearing in the cast are Mark Barefoot, Jim Martin, Sheree Jones, Carolyn Creech, Kiri Allen, Darrell Hope, and Tim Wesner.

ENTERTAINMENT

Videotape committee to reorganize; officials optimistic of success

by Tom Lamont
Seahawk Contributor

Videa Incorporated Campus Entertainment (VICE) is coming back to UNCW. This student government-sponsored committee, dormant since the fall of 1977, is currently being reorganized.

Director of Student Activities Linda Moore is optimistic about reforming the committee. However, she realizes that it will take time, money and energy to get the program off the ground again.

Moore commented, "Many people, for different reasons, are looking forward to seeing this program revamped on campus. The committee will provide another source of entertainment and campus news for the student. It will also be a super learning tool for those involved with its work."

The VICE squad, as it is sometimes called, came into existence during the fall of 1973. At that time, some basic equipment was purchased including a portable black and white camera, a television monitor, a reel-to-reel tape recorder, a videotape recorder, and a cassette videotape recorder.

In the past, the committee rented films to show on campus from a videotape network out of New York. The programs included old serials, movies and sports events. Although most of the programs shown were rented by VICE, they did create some of their own programming including a weekly campus news broadcast.

Jon Greene, the assistant director of Student Activities, believes the committee could provide two primary functions for the university:

"First of all, it could provide entertainment through the National Association of Videotape Companies. It would also be instrumental as far as developing creative programming on campus. The possibilities of creating your own programming is unlimited."

He also pointed out that the university has no live visual means to publicize events and VICE could provide the answer.

Greene suggested that other areas which could be covered by VICE include committee meetings, educational programs, the student legislature, the university orientation program, and sports events. Looking even further into the future, Greene has visions of the closed circuit capabilities that will be available to the university when the new student union is constructed.

Dale Case of the Creative Arts Department will serve as the committee's adviser. He says that the committee will give all students on campus an opportunity to learn the uses and functions of videotape equipment.

Case added, "Hopefully this group will do some things to provide a wider flow of information on campus."

Case also mentioned that VICE may change its name.

"Of course," he said, "that depends on whether the students on the committee want to change it or not, but it is a possibility."

VICE will have its first organizational meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 28, in Kenan Hall, room 103. All people interested in bringing rented programs to our campus and developing creative programming are urged to attend. A group of 10-20 people are expected to be present at this first meeting.

Anyone interested in the program should stop by the Student Activities Office in the Pub and talk with Linda Moore or meet with Dale Case in Kenan 107 for further information.

Fourth release of Heart features masculine, feminine sides of band

The Wilson sisters released their first album, Dreamboat Annie, in 1976. Now, three years later, Heart has released their fourth and best LP Dog and Butterfly.

As with all their previous albums, Ann (lead vocals, flute and acoustic guitar) and Nancy Wilson (acoustic and electric guitars, blues harp and vocals) co-wrote all the songs on the LP with the help of Roger Fisher (lead guitars) and Howard Leese (guitars, keyboard, vocals). Other Heart members include: Steve Fossen (bass and vocals) and the only new member to the band since it was formed, Micheal Derosier (drums).

The title of the LP reflects the oriental painting on the cover and the title song further explains the meaning of the painting.

The dog side of the disc expresses the masculine side of Heart. The harder rock cuts include the selection "Cook with Fire" and "Straight On" which are both Heart all the way with "Cook with Fire" showing that Heart doesn't feel the "role thing" of males and females having different roles is justified in our society. Another dog cut is "Hijinx" which features the great guitar playing of Nancy Wilson and, of course, the voice of sister Ann Wilson.

RECORDS

"Straight On" was the first-released single off the LP. The newest release of the album is the first cut of the butterfly side, "Dog and Butterfly." The butterfly side of the album is the opposite—soft and feminine—side of Heart. "Lighter Touch" featured on this side expands on that concept.

Other songs included on the LP are: "High Time," "Nada One" and "Mistral Wind."

I feel that "Rolling Stone" said it all about Heart with "On Dog and Butterfly, Heart knows what it wants and exactly how to go after it...a great album."

Heart has improved with every new album and I wish them much continued success.

'Death in Venice' screened tonight

The film "Death in Venice" was reviewed by the New York Daily News as "a masterpiece! A film of rare beauty! A work of pure enchantment! Dirk Bogarde is brilliant!"

"Death in Venice" will be shown tonight at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. The admission to this film will be 50 cents for all UNCW students with ID cards, and $1 for all non-students. Season passes will be honored.

In 1913, Thomas Mann, a German novelist wrote "Der Tod in Venedig" ("Death in Venice"), which is the basis of the film.

This film is concerned with Aschenbach, an artist, and his search for purity and beauty.

This search leads him to Venice where he becomes infatuated with an exquisite young boy, Tadzio. The boy represents for him pure beauty.

When cholera spreads through Venice, Aschenbach refuses to leave, fantasizing that only he and Tadzio will be left behind. On the psychological level, Aschenbach is drawn as the aging artist whose rational, disciplined self is overwhelmed by a late and sudden eruption of emotional drives which had been too long suppressed.

Directed by Luchino Visconti, "Death in Venice" stars Dirk Bogarde and Bjorn Andersin. Also in this film is Leslie French, a British actor, who appeared on this campus in 1973, sponsored by the Fine Arts Committee.

The film is in color and rated PG.

University wind ensemble suffering from low membership; may not hold annual concert

by Keith Donnelly
Seahawk Contributor

It appears to be just another case of student apathy. The UNCW Wind Ensemble is forced to operate with only 20 members (at least twice that number is needed) due to nothing more than lack of student interest.

The ensemble, directed by Dr. Christine Burkholder, is offered as a one-hour course credit. If a student is judged good enough, scholarship programs are offered through the Music Curriculum of the Creative Arts Department. The only requirements to be a member of the ensemble is some degree of talent and the dedication to devote some time to practice.

Select members of the group are picked to play at local churches on occasion, and some of the brass players performed in downtown Wilmington at the Octoberfest last fall.

The goal of the ensemble is to give a concert by the end of each semester but because the group is so small and little interest has been generated, it will be almost impossible this spring.

Andy Wahlberg, Locomotion Circus overwhelm audience

Performing before a very disappointing turnout, Andy Wahlberg and the Locomotion Circus excited, enthralled, overwhelmed and involved their audience in Kenan Auditorium Thursday Feb. 15. The program was part of Homecoming '79 activities.

Wahlberg, with his unique style, instruments and stage presence, touched the group with many original songs and instrumentals. With a standard 12-string guitar, he presented his expertise of picking and steel slide aspects of guitar music.

After his first vocal note, Wahlberg captivated the audience with his strong baritone and falsetto range. Most of the originals performed will be on his latest album "Andy Wahlberg: Soon to be Released from Prison."

Wahlberg's rapport and style was received with pleasure as he played a very unusual guitar. The design was of a standard six-string with an added five-string harp-guitar that protruded from the basic body.

The most memorable of his performances occurred in a medley of western songs including "Bury Me Down on the Lone Prairie." His finger work and deep voice brought the feeling of the rustic cowboy on the open air.

Wahlberg's encore was a show in itself, as the suggestive lyrics grabbed the audience. The song was about a girl named Kay and his search for her.

During the brief intermission, an enticing invitation was made that moved the audience closer to the stage. Shortly after, the feature attraction began.

Three handsome and talented young men appeared and "jumped" right into their act. The Locomotion Circus is a composite of characters, acrobatics, comedy, slapstick and vaudeville that truly delighted the audience.

The group's first sketch of Chinese acrobatics captured the audience and held them through the final act. Bounce, Cyrus and Flip performed with a great sense of humor and the ability to spring back from accidents and total flops.

Flip, the most recent addition to the circus, received on-stage audience participation in the "Optical Trickery" and "Waldini the Magician" sketches. In white face and a Charlie Chaplin moustache, Flip the Clown was ingenious throughout the evening.

After a spike-through-the-balloon routine failed, the magician stepped down from the stage to pull a front-row female from the audience.

Flip's quick thinking and ability to make a grand retrieve removed scarf after scarf from a pouch to produce the young lady's underpants.

The tallest and best built of the trio, Cyrus, performed excellently on the accordion in many of the 17 sketches. As the backbone of the group, Cyrus bulged superbly as "Macho Man."

Last but not least was the unending talent, energy and finesse of Bounce. The smallest and blindest of the three performed exquisitely in jazz acrobatics and "Mechanical Mime."

The Locomotion Circus reluctantly departed as the small audience cheered and applauded their performance.

With such a poor turnout, Andy Wahlberg and the Locomotion Circus entertained as if it was a royal command performance. ARTESA BOHANNON

'Girl Driver's' first car: Hell on wheels

Once Upon a Time there lived a girl who walked everywhere. She walked to drive-in movies, funerals, and even to and from school and work. Life was hard and the bunions on her feet were even harder. Then one fine day this girl's bank account swelled to bursting and she hastily withdrew a sizable amount of lively hard cash.

With her earnings (her occupation shall not be disclosed—desperate people do terrible things) burning a hole in her already hot little hand, our heroine trundled herself to the nearest used car lot in search of a set of Wheels. Such shiny cars! Such friendly salesmen! And lo, at the far end of the lot sat a spiffy little orange car, make unknown. Little Miss Moneybags fell crown over corns in love with this adorable little vehicle and immediately filled out the necessary adoption papers.

And so the fun began. Upon driving her car away from the lot, our gal began hearing strange panting noises. Peculiar, yes, but easily identifiable. With her usual lightning perception, Girl Driver noted the gas needle was lying despondently below the big red "E." Aha, her purchase was thirsty! She swung into a gas station and then discovered just how much it cost to quench a gasoline gulper's thirst.

Shaken but nonetheless cheerful, G. D. chugged on down the road, in this case that monument to motor madness, Market Street. Suddenly the car began displaying paranoid tendencies: weaving distractedly from lane to lane, charging recklessly under all those pretty red lights, and roaring remorselessly past any drivers who actually obeyed the traffic laws.

Being nothing if not calm, our girl at first tried to reason with her headstrong auto by means of gentle persuasion (i.e., slamming viciously on the brakes). The car, by now obviously deranged, attacked and mangled a passing Toyota, which took off howling for the safety of its own garage. There was only one solution to the situation: Girl Driver gritted her teeth and threw the transmission into Park.

The car's vital signs underwent an astounding transformation. It shuddered, growled, screeched, and finally came to a bone-wrenching halt in the middle of a crowded intersection. This cruel treatment earned G. D. several nasty looks from passing motorists. One man, obviously a derelict mechanic, bawled, "Hey, umgonnareportcha! To the SPCA—the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Automobiles!"

After hearing this and other dire threats, our drives (only a rank novice, after all) broke into a cold sweat and hot tears at the same moment and in her anguish began hammering furiously on the steering wheel. Which is about when the horn proved that it worked perfectly . . .

After an understandable time lapse, both car and driver eventually made it to the sanctuary of the ol' home garage. But due to this trauma, our gal now feared anything bigger than a Moped. So it came to pass that her wise and greedy father put one spiffy orange car up for sale and made a very nice profit.

Transportation was still a problem, however, and so our former G. D. purchased an expensive English racer bike and relied on that (for in-town trips only, of course). As a direct result of all this legwork, she lost twelve pounds and lived happily ever after.

Moral: 'Tis better to ride a bike in the pouring rain than to risk a wreck in the bright sunshine.

Volunteer opportunities

Be a friend, supporter, and role model--The "Big Buddy" program needs volunteers (male or female) who would like to spend time developing a one-to-one relationship with a younger child. Volunteers are required to spend 2-3 hours per week with their "Little Buddy" for a year and to attend supervisory and sharing sessions with other volunteers.

Do you like working with small children?--Volunteers are needed to assist teachers with arts and crafts, dance, and educational activities for children at a local day care center.

For more information on these and other volunteer openings, see Linda Moore, Student Activities, or call the Voluntary Action Center, 762-9611.

'Outstanding Alumnus' award given, alumni officers elected

by Phillip Siler
Staff Writer

Jerry D. Coleman was named "Outstanding Alumnus of the Year" by the UNCW Alumni Association at the sixth annual alumni dinner and dance Saturday night, Feb. 10, at Gray Gables Restaurant. New officers and members of the board of directors were also chosen at the function.

"We give the Outstanding Alumnus Award to that graduate that best exemplifies community service and has given substantial contributions to the community," said Gwen Culbreth, secretary of the Alumni Association.

Coleman, a manager for Babcock and Wilcox's nuclear products machine division in Illinois, graduated from UNCW (then Wilmington College) in 1956. While living in Wilmington, he was a member of the board of directors of the UNCW Foundation, president of the Cape Fear Area United Way, and a member of the board of trustees of New Hanover Memorial Hospital.

Along with Coleman, Elton G. Tucker was installed as chair of the Alumni Association. Serving with Tucker on the board of directors are Vice-chair Bonita Coley and J. Carl Dempsey, treasurer. Dempsey is UNCW's assistant to the vice-chancellor for business affairs.

Besides holding a yearly dinner-dance, the Alumni Association sponsors family get-togethers, golf tournaments and receptions. The association also has a fund appeal to raise money to be put to use for the community and the university. Last fall, the association donated money to the Football Club prior to the club's division championship game against Central Piedmont.

The dinner-dance has been well-attended in the past and this year was no exception, with graduates coming from as far as Maryland, Virginia and Connecticut. The only change this time was that tickets were $30 per couple, the most expensive it has been in recent years.

Social Chair Thomas Hodges said, "We decided to make this a first class affair instead of trying to operate on a shoestring and hold the cost to the usual $20 per couple. We were unable to get anyone to quote a price of less than $27 per couple for the food and set-ups; and because the first annual social held at Gray Gables is the one everybody talks about, we decided to go back there."

Career Day '79 attracts large turnout

by Elizabeth Shoaf
Seahawk Contributor

Not everyone got positive answers about the career of their choice, but judging on the basis of attendance, Career Day '79 was clearly a success. Several hundred students attended the event last Wednesday in the lobby of Trask Coliseum.

Freshmen as well as upperclassmen attended, and students majoring in all areas of study were represented.

Career Day '79 was not held for the chance of accumulating job offers, but for students to get information about the type of career they are interested in. It was a more relaxed and less tension-filled environment than a traditional job interview situation.

Approximately 50 industrial, retail, government, financial, sales, and military services and companies were represented at the event. A few graduate schools were also represented, as the need of an education higher than just a four-year degree is becoming increasingly popular.

Tables bearing huge displays and stacks of pamphlets and booklets lined the walls of the lobby. Students wandered up and down, pausing sometimes to only look and other times to discuss the opportunity of employment with the representative.

Because of the lack of career opportunities in today's society, employers can afford to wait and choose only the most qualified person for the job.

Most companies look for business majors for their executive and management jobs and employ only those with a "B" or above average.

As students left the coliseum, they were asked to fill out a survey with their opinions on Career Day. Answers to questions such as what semester and day of the week should Career Day be on will probably influence when it will be held in years to come.

Career Day has become an annual event at UNCW. This year, Career Day was jointly sponsored by the Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, the UNCW Office of Career Planning and Placement, and two UNCW business fraternities, Sigma Alpha Beta and Phi Beta Lambda.

Essay contest awards presented

The awards ceremony for the Human Relations Essay Contest will be held February 25 in Kenan Auditorium at 3 p.m.

The contest is sponsored by the UNCW English Club with funds from the Human Relations Commission and the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

The author of the essay best describing a citizen on campus who has contributed to improving human relations will receive a $50 prize. A plaque will be awarded to the subject of the winning essay. The second place prize is $30 and $20 goes to the third place winner.

Submitted essays are being read and judged by Dr. Gerald Shinn of the UNCW Department of Philosophy and Religion, Dr. Gerald Rosselot of the English Department, and Jon Greene of Student Activities. Richard Long of the English Club is contest coordinator.

Proposed fee allocation change would take funds from SGA

by Bobby Parker

Editor

An administration proposal to radically change the method of allocating the portion of student fees currently controlled by SGA was submitted Friday to Vice-chancellor of Student Affairs William Malloy who is pushing for approval of the plan for implementation this spring.

The proposal, drawn up by Student Activities Director Linda Moore and Assistant Director Jon Greene, would create a Student Fee Allocation Board to take over the disbursement of the funds much the same as the Student Legislature does now. The board would allocate to student clubs and organizations, media and publications, and programming committees.

According to the recommendation, the purpose of the Fee Board would be to "appropriately allocate student funds in an equitable and responsible fashion." The board would be composed of three students elected by the student body, a faculty representative appointed by the Faculty Senate, and an administration representative appointed by the chancellor. In addition, the board would be chaired by one of the three vice-chancellors on an annual rotation, although the chair would have no vote.

Moore and Greene also recommended that the SGA Elections Board extend the filing deadline for candidates for the student positions until March 16 so these members could be elected in upcoming SGA elections.

Under the new plan, SGA, which now controls a fixed amount of fee money, would have to request its operating expenses from the Fee Board. "It's just a better way of allocating funds; (it's) more efficient," Malloy said in an interview. "I think it will be much fairer."

However, Malloy said that he does expect some opposition from SGA officers.

"It's going to create waves," he said.

But Malloy added that the university had grown so much that the amount of student fee money handled by SGA was simply too great.

This year, SGA has administered a budget of more than $110,000.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap said that he first knew of the recommendation Monday afternoon. Malloy had hoped to have the plan approved Monday, but a scheduled meeting among the vice-chancellors and chancellor was not held.

Dunlap expressed disappointment that he and other SGA officials had not been contacted about a proposal which would have so great an effect on student government operations.

"I don't think it's very effective," Dunlap said of the plan.

The proposal "shows no research as to what effect this would have on the university as a whole," he added.

Dunlap said that a change may be needed in the allocation system, but he said this proposal should be held until it is considered further.

"I believe the plan is rushed," Dunlap continued. "I don't believe we can consider it and make such a complete change in two or three weeks."

Dunlap criticized the proposal because the authority of the board is "unclear." He said he hopes implementation of the plan will be deferred until students are given a chance to discuss it with administration officials.

"I would be shocked if the administration were to make changes such as this without consulting SGA officials," Dunlap said.

He and SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan were scheduled to meet with Malloy Tuesday to discuss the issue.

Malloy said that there had been student input through discussions between Moore and Greene and student leaders, including some SGA and Program Board officials.

Greene and Moore reported in an interview Monday that they had devised the proposal by comparing UNCW's system with those of other schools. They said that most schools are now going with an allocation board system.

"I feel it is a long overdue

State legislature considers bill to increase in-state tuition 10 percent, out-of-state by 24

Despite strong opposition from university officials, a legislative subcommittee has proposed increasing UNC system tuition next year by 10 percent for in-state students and 24 percent for out-of-state students.

The subcommittee also recommended reducing the amount of money the university system uses to attract out-of-state athletes and talented students by giving them a break on out-of-state tuition.

In addition, the subcommittee endorsed the recommendation of Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. and the Advisory Budget Commission to increase state aid to private colleges from $600 per student to $750 per student over the next two years.

The state's public university system currently has the highest out-of-state tuition of any state in the Southeast. In-state tuition is about average for the region, university spokesmen said.

The Legislature last increased tuition in 1977.

The subcommittee's recommendations will go to the joint House-Senate education appropriations committees, where the fight over tuition is likely to get tough.

"We're very much opposed to any kind of tuition raise," R.D. McMillan, assistant to university President William C. Friday, said in an interview. McMillan said the reduction of money used to attract certain out-of-state students would cause serious damage to the university.

"There is no question that it will cripple the quality of educational research and hurt our athletic programs," McMillan said.

Rep. Horton Rountree, D-Pitt, said students shouldn't object to paying more for the education they receive.

Sen. Carolyn Mathis, the Mecklenburg Democrat who heads the subcommittee, asked: "Can we really afford to educate all these out-of-state students? I believe people will come, regardless of how much they have to pay."

Subcommittee member Sen. Robert M. Davis, D-Rowan, first proposed raising in-state tuition by 20 percent.

Noting the probable opposition that move would encounter, Sen. Sam R. Noble, D-Robeson, said, "I think 10 percent is as much as we're going to get."

According to an information sheet put out by the subcommittee, in-state tuition now makes up 10.7 percent of the total cost of a student's education. In 1973-74, it accounted for 13 percent.

Out-of-state tuition has dropped from 70 percent of per-student cost in 1973-74 to about 57 percent now.

Tuition among the state campuses ranges from $270 to $364 a year for in-state students.

Filing for SGA elections close Friday

Filing for SGA elections will continue through Friday for positions in the executive, legislative and judicial branches. Candidates should fill out petitions which can be obtained from the SGA office, upstairs in the Pub, or Director of Student Activities Linda Moore's office, downstairs in the Pub.

Positions in the executive branch include SGA president, vice-president and attorney general. Candidates for president must be a rising junior or senior.

Legislative positions include: senior, junior and sophomore class presidents and vice-presidents; two senators for each class; and eight at-large seats. Also up for election are one officer each for non-degree senator and graduate senator. The chief justice will be the only elected judicial officer.

Any student with a validated ID card is eligible to run for office. Elections are scheduled March 21-23.

More information can be obtained from the SGA office at 799-2105.

Administration allocation proposal needs time for consideration

An administration proposal to eliminate SGA from the allocation process of student fees and replace it with a Student Fee Allocation Board is headed in the right direction, but more time is needed to consider this proposal to insure that we are getting an effective system that is a genuine improvement on the present method.

Currently, SGA controls a fixed portion of student fee money which it allocates to student clubs, campus media and programming committees. This puts the Student Legislature in the position of spending more than $110,000 per year. The method has proved erratic, irresponsible and ineffective as the funds are dispersed according to the whims of an erratic, irresponsible and ineffective SGA. Student legislators have spent so much time dealing with money matters in recent years they have had little chance to tackle the important issues and problems affecting students.

With the proposal of a fee allocation board, there will be a more stable organization which can consider expenditures much more objectively and much more carefully. The smaller fee board would be a more workable organization which would provide consistency and, hopefully, a long-range view of funding.

There are several ways the fee board could be set up, and all of the ramifications need to be discussed among administration, faculty and students before any decision is made to implement the board. The board's jurisdiction and authority need to be defined, its operating rules should be clear, and its membership should be determined to insure fair representation of the entire campus.

THIS NEWSPAPER'S OPINION

As set up in the current recommendation, the board appears headed for a very active role in all funding requests. This would serve to make it a reflection of the Student Legislature, and we would probably end up with the same problems we have now.

The fee board should take a more general role, allowing greater freedom for organizations such as the Media and Publications Board, Program Board and SGA itself to administer the funds to the appropriate activities and organizations within its area of concern. Perhaps other categories are needed—a strong case would be made for athletic clubs, for instance.

The point is that these details need to be worked out now, before the plan is approved. Otherwise, it is impossible to make an intelligent decision based on a mere sketch of what we want the board to accomplish.

The fee board is a good idea that is long overdue. What a waste it would be if the idea was pushed into an uncertain beginning in a simple attempt to meet an arbitrary deadline which has no bearing on either the problem or the solution.

Legislature, DeLuca take positive stand for funding of campus media

The decision by the Student Legislature to support a change in the system of funding for campus media and publications is both wise and timely. Wise, because it will give the Media and Publications Board clear-cut authority to coordinate these student functions; timely, because it puts SGA officials in the position of supporting a funding change already in the works by administration officials and gives them greater opportunity to be involved in planning the nature of that change.

The Legislature's decision shows an intelligent perspective of the relationship between SGA and campus media. By resisting the temptation to fight the proposed change as a breach of SGA authority, the Legislature appears to have realized that its authority does not rest solely on the amount of dollars it has to allocate. SGA can be a mechanism to solve student problems and insure student opinions are heard; it doesn't have to limit its activity to functioning as a bank that merely doles out money here and there.

The resolution stating the SGA position, authored by vice-president Francis DeLuca, shows a good deal of research and preparation. DeLuca's stand for a change in the allocation system indicates that he realizes that the important thing is not that SGA has power of the purse, but that whoever does have this power should be the group best equipped to use it to the fullest advantage for students and the university. The resolution itself states that "In the end, both SGA and the Media and Publications Board strive to better serve the students and the campus."

Perhaps the most impressive aspect of the Legislature's action—and that which truly shows a sound perspective—is the provision that the Media and Publications Board devise its own plan deemed most feasible to implement the change. This realization that the Media Board is better able to determine the specifics of the change is a real indication that the intent of the proposal is to benefit the entire university community.

DeLuca and the Legislature are right in that they have more important problems to deal with besides money; they are right in that the Media Board is better prepared to handle funding of campus media; and they are right in that the board needs a better definition of the limits and extent of its authority to effectively coordinate media. The resolution is positive in every respect, and it is very good to see it.

VIEWPOINT

by Ray Warren

The modern version of the Republican party in North Carolina had its childhood during the 1960's. During those years, every election seemed to bring the party closer to the long-sought goal of parity with the Democrats. By 1972, a new high was achieved with the election of a U.S. senator, governor and close to one-third of the General Assembly. Analysts were nearly unanimous in predicting the imminent dawn of true two-party politics in the tar heel state.

That analysts aren't psychic was demonstrated in 1972, when from the G.O.P. point of view, the bottom fell out. Republican ranks in the legislature was decimated and two of the party's four congressmen went down in defeat. The 1976 elections failed to repair that damage, but last year's vote showed a rise in the number of Republicans in the General Assembly.

Some newspapers have intimated that the decline in G.O.P. fortunes was due to a lack of ideological flexibility. The facts, however, don't support such a contention. The Watergate fallout should not be underestimated. In 1976 the "born again" Southern democracy of Jimmy Carter did not destroy Republican footholds in the East, but severely weakened the G.O.P. base in the Western counties. Those candidates who did survive these calamities were not the wishy-washy moderates championed by the newspapers, but solid conservatives.

The policy of representing anything and everything serves the majority party well. It would not work, however, for a minority party trying to make converts. Only a solid program of principle can wean voters away from a century-old affiliation.

Conservatism, the basic ideology of the Republican party, need not, however, mean rigidity. Nor should the party confuse racism with economic conservatism. Rather than merely emphasizing what the party opposes, members of the minority must present the people with some positive proposals for real change. To this end, a positive platform is an imperative for the next state convention of the G.O.P. Republicans must prove that their conservatism is not mere negativism.

Among the issues which Republicans could support with a clean conscience are:

Referendum and Initiative--By allowing voters to bypass the lobbyist-dominated General Assembly, these provisions would bring government closer to the people. In championing the adoption of referendum and initiative, Republicans could also do much to combat their reputation for elitism.

Abolition of the State Milk Commission--This archaic body is supposed to protect the dairy industry from price wars. What it actually does is insure an unnaturally high price for milk. Consumers deserve the right to shop for the lowest price on milk as with any other commodity. The Milk Commission's policy of price fixing and its prohibition of selling milk below cost have no place in a free economy.

Voter Registration--In the rural East, voter participation is abysmally low, even in the supposedly important Democratic primary. One reason for this is that voters must often travel long distances to the county seat (30 days before an election) to register. This is an especial hardship on poor voters. By state law, local elections boards should be required to hold "registration" in each township at a county at least twice a month. Furthermore, other public agencies (in Mecklenburg County, the public library is used) should be empowered to register voters. Such auxiliary registrars should be mandated for any community with over 2500 residents. As a further reform, weekend hours for registration should be instituted.

School funding--The variability of facilities for education in North Carolina is a scandal. Many urban children have access to modern facilities and materials.

For the rural poor, however, facilities are often sub-standard. The right to an adequate education should belong to every North Carolina school child.

Therefore, counties should be required to maintain a certain level of expenditure and the state should help poor counties meet this goal. It is morally indefensible for a child in Hyde County to have only half the chance for a college education (or high paying job) as a child in Mecklenburg. Nor is it wise to allow a growing disparity in opportunity between our rich and poor counties.

Non-partisan election of judges--Party politics have no place in the judiciary. The Democratic label may have meaning in the other branches of government where decisions are primarily political in nature. In matters of judicial qualification, however, it is meaningless. North Carolinians deserve the highest quality in their judges, be they Democrats, Republicans or Independents.

Inventory tax--This tax is a good example of how governmental policy can do more harm than good. The revenue collected through its application is not great, but it is one of the biggest detriments to industrial recruitment. This is particularly true in the port of Wilmington. The tax should be abolished.

There are perhaps other issues in which the Republicans could grab the initiative. The important point, however, is that Republicans, if they are to succeed, must be seen as a party capable of action, rather than mere reaction.

Too often, Republicans have depended on dissatisfaction with the Democrats to garner their votes for them. That policy works only so long the Democrats are foolish enough to nominate George McGovern.

Genuine party politics in North Carolina depends on two things. In the first place, the Republicans must establish an ideological identity. This they have begun to do in their platforms and public utterances. In keeping with national party principles and the tenor of Tar Heel opinion, this ideology is conservative. Beyond ideology, however, the party must also develop positive answers to human needs to be considered a real alternative to the status quo.

Several other actions, besides the above named policy statements, would be in the best interest of the state convention. All are symbolic. The party should declare its belief in equality and government aid to the needy in general terms. The birthday of Martin Luther King Jr. should also be promoted as a state holiday. In this way much of the damage done by the semi-racist oratory of the past could be undone. As a final reform, the convention should change the name of the party to the Independent Republican party of North Carolina. This would not only give the party a fresh look, it would emphasize that today's Republican party is not a northern import, but a viable part of North Carolina's political culture. Provincialism, like it or not, is a powerful force in our state. There is no need for the Republican party, however, to allow it to impede its chances of presenting its program to the people. If a tobacco farmer in Martin County finds the new name less offensive than the old, then by all means it should be adopted.

Low number of black faculty cited as reason for low number of black students

by Wayne Bryant

Why do many blacks have an identity crisis at predominantly white universities of North Carolina? Why don't more black students apply at UNC-Wilmington?

Because we don't have enough black faculty members.

How is the number of black faculty members connected with black students applying at UNCW?

Black students have the ability to relate to black professors and advisors. Black students find it easier to approach black faculty, and black students find black faculty more helpful because of obvious cultural relationships. Black students adjust to the learning process if there is someone that is nearby or often available who has had exposure to the college education system and can offer their experiences and insights on how to perform well to make it at schools like UNC-Wilmington. A black student can find the social and educational benefits of black faculty in his or her particular field of study if there is some like that around.

I recall the experiences that I had initially when I entered a predominantly white university, N.C. State. I did not know how to adjust socially or academically to the environment around me. I was far from being like the average student there. I saw myself as the lone black at State who was inducted in the education system as a number to meet Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) specifications in minority recruitment. I saw myself within an institution where I had very few tools to aide my educational and social developments. I saw myself without any type of personal guidance or counselor suitable for me in an unfamiliar environment. I had no one to relate to or receive some sense of direction from. I had below minimum financial support to live on as well. Yet I was expected to perform well in this environment. I did perform, though, like a blind man who stumbles in the dark, through trial and error learning methods, often repeating mistakes until I could see my way clear.

In the midst of these conflicts, I began to visit the school counselor. After leaving his office on the first visit, I became conscious that this guy was white, and then I asked myself how could he identify with this young black man. I replied, he couldn't. Then I began to have feelings of insecurity because of the cultural and ethnic differences between us. I thought that I would overcome these feelings of insecurity, but I realized it was impossible. So I terminated the relationship, or what I would really describe as a non-relationship. This guy had nothing to offer me except more problems added on to the problems I already had.

But this attempt in college did benefit me, for I learned how to avoid faculty and instructors who were unconcerned with my growth, enlightenment and adaptations to my environment. Eventually I was able to perceive the kinds of students and faculty who consciously and unconsciously handicapped my academic development. Sometimes their efforts to hinder my performances were overt while other times I knew it was a built-in cultural bias that endorsed and encouraged such actions. Obviously this kind of learning took a considerable amount of my time that I could have used to improve my study habits.

Often times, because I did not have anyone to talk to and identify with, I felt inferior and questioned the utility of trying to achieve an intelligent understanding of the institution and world that I was living in. I often asked myself how do I fit into society and overcome what my parents and forefathers lacked and still have real feelings of accomplishment in my life. I found this depressing and unrewarding so I decided to leave N.C. State University.

Before I left that institution, I had an identity crisis. I felt I had to toss aside my cultural and ethnic background to become a competent student. I also felt I had to move in a direction accepting white, Anglo-Saxon, protestant values and behavior to become a successful student and eventually a success in life.

This was the most disturbing conflict in my life because I did not know how I could just throw away the lifestyle and culture that had sustained me thus far. I did not see the alternative of losing my past as a good one, so I discarded those ideas and retained my cultural and ethnic identity. It was at this point that I decided I would transfer to another UNC school, in hope that the environment and the number of black professors was better.

I chose UNCW, hoping to escape the problems that I had already dealt with at N.C. State. To my surprise, I found myself in the very same environment I left at N.C. State. My experiences at State allowed me to critically examine the school. Below are the existing conditions at UNCW as they were when I initially came here:

-Programs that provide the essentials necessary for educating a predominantly white student body.

-An atmosphere conducive to learning solely among white students.

-A student government predominantly white with all the financial and necessary aids supportive of a predominantly white student body.

-Faculty that provides an atmosphere more comfortable for teaching its white student body.

-Insufficient and a non-proportional number of black teaching faculty.

-Insufficient number of black students enrolled.

-Very few, if any, organizations supportive of the social life for blacks.

-An atmosphere that black instructors find not conducive for instructing black students.

-Predominately white cultural material in its library.

-Little accessible black source and cultural material in the UNCW library.

It is these conditions that encouraged and promoted the identity crisis for black students, and still continues today.

It seems evident that black students attending predominantly white UNC schools have (See Blacks, page 10).

'Rap' Session with dining director Welch held

The Artista Johnson
Staff Writer

On February 7, more than 50 students and dining director Phil Welch met for a "rap" session to discuss the quality of the food service provided by the University Food Management (UFM) and the university food service contractor.

Each president was informed a week prior to the meeting to prepare questions and/or suggestions to be presented during an hour-long session with the director of dining services, Phil Welch.

In a memorandum released to all departments, Welch listed the most-discussed items and action being taken. This memo, however, was not made available to students. The list was inadvertently posted on the bulletin board inside the cafeteria.

Examining some of the list's items reveals immediate action and changes. Many students had complained about over and undercooked vegetables. Within one week's time measures were taken to improve their quality.

An evaluation of the menu made by the UFM administrative personnel has brought about very noticeable improvements. A few students expressed an interest in sandwich-type items as entrees at the night meals.

Too many times we are served canned foods that have hardly been warmed at dinner," exclaimed one resident who wished not to be identified.

When some entrees run out at the supper hour (usually between 5:45 and 6:30), cans of spaghetti, ravioli, and other "quickies" are heated and placed on the line.

Most students attending the session expressed the feeling that Welch was very receptive and open to any suggestions that would improve the attitude of the students and the quality of the food service.

One major problem that has existed for years continues but much more extensively—carry outs. Revenue is lost through the loss of silverware, dishes, glasses, etc., as well as the large amounts of food.

Severe disciplinary actions will be henceforth taken against anyone seen and caught removing food or utensils from the cafeteria.

All in all, the cafeteria management is doing as much as possible to make the UNCW food service facilities better accepted. For the first time in many years, student feedback is being heard, accepted, and influential.

Any student wishing to express any feelings towards food service operations (whether positive or negative) may attend the next meeting scheduled for April 4 at 5:30 p.m. in the cafeteria meeting room. Your voice will be heard!

Deadline for short story contest extended

The deadline for submitting short stories to the Jessie Reinder Short Story Contest has been extended to March 15.

All UNCW students are eligible to enter the contest. Prizes include $100 first place, $50 second place, and $30 third place.

Stories should be submitted to the Department of English in the new classroom building. All entries should be in the English Department by 5 p.m.

on March 15.

The awards will be presented on Thursday, March 22, at 11:30 a.m. in the SRO Theatre in Kenan Hall. The awards presentation will include a reading of the winning story by Doug Swink of the Department of Creative Arts.

All students, faculty and staff are invited to attend the awards ceremony. Any student enrolled in one or more courses is eligible to enter the contest.

Media board receives greater power from SGA

by Bobby Parker
Editor

The Student Legislature moved last week to give the Media and Publications Board greater control over campus media and publications which could include control of funds for these organizations, currently financed through SGA.

SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca proposed a resolution which requested the Media Board "develop an internal system of controlling and allocating its own funds and take a greater control over all campus media and publications."

"I'd like to see student government just get out of (media and publications funding)," DeLuca said. He added that there are "too many things the Legislature doesn't have the expertise to handle" concerning campus media.

The Media and Publications Board has jurisdiction over the Seahawk; WLOZ radio; Fledgling, the student yearbook; Atlantis, student literary magazine; and the videotape committee. Currently, each organization is funded individually by SGA.

DeLuca's resolution stated that the matter would be referred to the Media Board which would devise the most feasible method of implementing his proposal. He indicated that there are two basic choices: to have a lump sum allocation to the board from SGA or to have a portion of student fee money designated for the board by administration.

Ironically, the Legislature's action coincides with plans being made separately by both Media Board and administration in the same direction. The Media Board has been discussing a lump sum allocation in recent meetings. A proposal from the Student Activities Office would totally change the complexion of allocations of the SGA portion of student fee by setting up an allocations board to distribute the money.

There had been speculation from administration and Media Board officials that SGA officers would oppose a change in the current method of funding, but the unanimous passage of this resolution may be an indication that the Legislature, at least, is in favor of some changes.

DeLuca noted that with control of media funding, the Media Board would "be able to perform its job more effectively . . . if given a greater degree of control and autonomy over its affairs." He said the board had "been doing a pretty good job" of overseeing media.

In other action, three constitutional amendments dealing with SGA elections were approved by the Legislature. One will require candidates for executive office to be a rising junior or senior, and a second would require the same of the chief justice.

The third amendment requires all candidates and voters in SGA elections to have a validated student ID except for the offices of non-degree and graduate senators. Elections Committee Chair Helen Hazelton told the Legislature that there are currently no qualifications for candidates stated in the constitution and that "Joe Blow off the street" could theoretically run for office.

The amendment means that candidates will be full- or part-time students.

Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene, representing the Media and Publications Board, asked the Legislature to award compensation for four students who hold management or editorial positions in campus media.

The compensation is necessary Greene said, because the students are ineligible for tuition scholarships which are normally given for service in their positions.

The students are Karen King, manager, Tamisha Williams, program director, and Donna McMillan, business manager, of WLOZ and Roger Knight, sports editor of the Seahawk.

The matter was referred to the Finance Committee.

Greene also told the Legislature that the Media Board had requested the appointment of an SGA representative to its membership. Freshman representative Cathy Robinson was appointed to the position.

In money matters handled by the Legislature, $550 was allocated to the Psychology Club for a trip to Raleigh to attend a conference on counseling services. Club members told the SGA Finance Committee that they may set up a counseling service here, but to do so it would be necessary to attend the conference.

From 14 to 17 students will be attending. The allocation will pay transportation and lodging costs.

The Rowing Club was allowed to transfer funds allocated last year for travel expenses toward the purchase of a floating dock.

The Black Student Union was given $325 for printing recruiting literature and for a picnic planned later this year.

A request for $1100 from Fine Arts Committee Chair Steve Chiappisi for a second all-night film festival was referred to the Finance Committee.

The charter of the Social Workers Association of People (SWAP) was also approved.

Six new legislators were sworn in to office, including: Grace Johnson, junior senator; Larry Hewlett, sophomore vice-president; and Donna McMillan, Darren McGuire, Jason Tyson and Charles Parsons, at-large representatives.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in room 218 of the Chemistry Building.

Dunlap charges constitution not effective

by Bobby Parker

SGA President Wayne Dunlap told members of the Student Legislature Thursday night that the SGA constitution is "not effective for this body and not effective for a school this size" and made several suggestions for improving regulations regarding SGA's operations.

Dunlap said the constitution, which underwent a major revision only a year ago, is "totally antiquated" and urged SGA officials to "move right now to plug the holes."

Dunlap suggested that the Legislature might work better if its membership were reduced. He said this would guarantee competitive elections and would attract the "most interested people." He added that more could be accomplished with a smaller group.

Three constitutional amendments which were later approved by the Legislature received Dunlap's endorsement.

The amendments set new qualifications for candidates for SGA office.

Dunlap said that the problems of SGA are both "immediate" and "general." He urged quick action on reforms.

"Otherwise, in the next year or so—and it may be next year—you're going to see a change (leaving SGA with) less power," Dunlap said.

Dunlap was evidently pointing to changes proposed by administration officials which would strip SGA of its authority to allocate a portion of student fees—well over $100,000—to campus organizations. The proposal would place allocation responsibilities under a board composed of students, faculty and administration.

Among his other proposals, Dunlap said that he "sees no need for having (class) presidents in the legislature." He said that there is little value of class representation because SGA deals primarily with campus-wide issues.

Dunlap said SGA should be concerned less with "giving out money" and more with finding solutions to student problems. He said the current move by SGA officials to establish a student legal service office is an example of what SGA should be doing more frequently.

Seniors asked to apply to National grad school

Outstanding college seniors who have been accepted for graduate school starting in fall of 1980 are invited to apply for the National Graduate School Institute preparatory program, to be held in Los Angeles, California, during June and July, 1979.

Students will attend a two-week intensive workshop and seminar designed to prepare them totally for the graduate school experience. The first week of the workshop will be a series of general skill sessions for all participants. The second week will be broken into specific skills needed in the various fields. For example, law students will learn about casebook briefing, how to write legal exams, and the famous Socratic Method of Inquiry used by almost all law schools.

Leading the general workshops will be an outstanding faculty from southern California and each specific workshop will be led by a noted scholar in that field. Tuition for the two week program is $350 plus room and board, which will be provided by the Institute. Only students who have actually been accepted to an accredited graduate school may participate in the institute and students finishing the non-graded program will be recognized at completion.

Students interested in attending should write to the National Graduate School Institute, 10100 Santa Monica #750, Los Angeles, CA. 90067.

Seahawks win two; can tie record with win tonight

by Roger Knight

The UNCW Seahawks shot sixty-four percent from the floor and got 25 points and 13 rebounds from Dave Wolff as they trimmed the pesky UNC-Asheville Bulldogs 90-87.

Wolff, the senior forward was 9 for 11 from the field and 7 for 11 from the free throw line to lead the Seahawks in one of their best offensive games of the year.

The 'Hawks opened up by hitting their first ten shots and zoomed ahead to a 20-8 lead in the first six minutes. The Seahawks led at 39-20 with 8:20 to go in the first half which was the game's biggest lead.

UNCA then started making their way back. They ran off eight straight points and kept coming until the half when they cut the lead to five at 47-42.

In the second half the two teams continued just about even, the lead staying at about five until UNCA's Carl Rount began a drive to cut the lead to three at 71-68.

It was about then that Wolff, the Seahawk co-captain began to make over, scoring UNCW's only seven points. Wolff also dominated the defensive boards and the Seahawks pushed the lead up to 78-68 with 5:10 left.

Four minutes later, after two jumpers by Eddie Latta, and three consecutive 'Hawk turnovers the score was 88-85. John Calipari then hit two free throws with 0:07 left to insure the victory.

In Monday night's contest, the Seahawks notched victory number 18 by defeating the University of Arkansas at Little Rock. The Seahawks put five players in double figures, led by senior forward Dave Wolff with 17. Danny Davis and Garry Cooper, the 'Hawks dynamic inside combination got fifteen points each.

Guards Barry Taylor and Dennis Tobin had 14 and 13 points respectively.

The 'Hawks jumped out to an early lead, much in the same fashion as the win over UNC-Asheville the previous Saturday. UNCW led at halftime 41-30. In the second half UNLAR, led by Marty Laquerre's 23 points, staged a comeback. They cut the margin to four at 75-71 late in the game. The Trojans shot a high percentage in the second half, but Seahawk coach Mel Gibson still felt good about the game.

"Even though they came back, we feel real good about the win tonight," said Gibson. "They had to hit a phenomenal percentage to come back. I can't say enough about our club. We played great! We did some things our club had not done all year."

Baseball season opens tomorrow

By John Justus

A challenging 42-game schedule, featuring 10 games with six Atlantic Coast Conference opponents, three doubleheaders and 28 home games--it's baseball 1979 at UNC-Wilmington.

The Seahawks open up at national power South Carolina on Thursday, March 1st, then travel to UNC-Charlotte the following day before opening their extensive home slate on Sunday, March 4th against Salisbury (Md.) State.

Coach Bill Brooks and new assistant coach Bobby Guthrie will test a veteran squad against what Brooks himself terms "probably the toughest" schedule in school history.

"We're playing more top teams in this area than we ever have before," Brooks says, "but we feel that's what we have to do to gain any attention since we are an independent."

"This club is probably as experienced as any we've had for a long time, except for the pitching."

"We have players who will produce some runs, I believe, and I think our defense should be improved. But as everyone knows, the real key to a successful team is its pitching. Our staff is a fairly young one, but nearly all of them gained some experience last year, either in the spring or summer."

UNCW's run production could come from many sources, beginning with last year's top two hitters, third baseman Herbie Dawkins (.365) and leftfielder Bubba Baldwin, who has moved to the outfield from shortstop.

Other likely offensive leaders are first baseman Larry Livingston, shortstop John Tallent, and outfielders Ron Peoples and Richard King.

Also returning from 1978's club are second baseman Mark Scalf, outfielder Dick Lancaster and catchers John Gourley and Jim Montague. All played a good deal last year and give Brooks' squad valuable experience throughout the lineup.

The pitching corps is led by righthander Roger Sutton, Sutton, who earned all-state and All-South Independent honors last year, was 10-3 in 1978 with a 1.84 earned run average.

Supporting Sutton in the starting rotation are returnees Mike Williams, Danny Houston, and either junior David Pope or freshman Ron Inman. Bill Rhodes, Jeff Cole and Rusty Wagstaff will likely make up the relief crew.

In addition to Inman, two other newcomers have been impressive in early season drills. Wilmington native Tim Whitehead has looked good in the infield while Brunswick County rookie Clyde Holley could help out in a designated hitter role.

Eight swimmers qualify for Eastern Championships

by Steve Wallace

UNCW swimming got perhaps the biggest boost of its two year existence, as the inaugural UNCW Invitational Championships, held here last Thursday through Saturday, proved to be a huge success. Not only did UNCW place second in both the men's and women's team competition, but the team also qualified eight men and all five women for post-season swimming competition.

East Carolina won both the men's and women's team competition. In the men's half of the meet, the final score was ECU first with 614 points, UNCW a solid second with 444 points. College of Charleston third with 224 points, and the University of Tampa fourth with 95 points. The women's score was ECU, 433; UNCW, 358; Pfeiffer, 339; College of Charleston, 333; and University of Tampa, 61.

During the meet, the UNCW natatorium record book was rewritten. Every one of the UNCW team and pool records were broken at the Invitational, while 13 Seahawk swimmers qualified for post-season competition.

Eight of the men qualified for the Eastern Seaboard Championships, which begin tomorrow in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Leading the men's team was freshman standout Sam O'Leary who qualified in a total of eight events (five individual and three relays): 50 and 100 yd. freestyle, 200 yd. freestyle, 100 and 200 yd. butterfly, 400 yd. medley relay, and the 400 and 800 yd. freestyle relays. Pete Grataie qualified in the 100 and 200 yd. butterfly, the 50 yd. freestyle, and the 400 yd. medley and freestyle relays. Ronnie Michalove qualified in the 200 and 400 yd. individual medleys, the 200 yd. butterfly, the 400 yd. freestyle relay, and was also moved into the 800 yd. freestyle relay. Mike Malone qualified in the 200 yd. breaststroke and the 400 yd. medley relay. Skip Thompson qualified in the 100 and 200 yd. backstroke. Robert Quigley also qualified in the 200 yd. backstroke, while Scott Sasser qualified in the 800 yd. freestyle relay and Jim Baker qualified in the 400 and 800 yd. freestyle relay.

All five of the women qualified for the NIAAW Championships in Reno, Nevada, March 8-10. UNCW qualified teams for all four relay events: the 200, 400, and 800 yd. freestyle relays, and the 400 yd. medley relay. Ellen Cushman qualified in the 100 and 200 yd. freestyle, the 200 yd. individual medley, and all 4 relays. Denise Squires qualified in the 200 yd. individual medley, the 100 yd. breaststroke, the 400 yd. medley relay, and the 200 and 400 yd. freestyle relays. Valerie Newlin qualified in the 500 yd. freestyle, the 400 yd. individual medley, the 200 yd. butterfly, the 400 yd. medley relay, and the 800 yd. freestyle relay. Debbie Sproles qualified in all 4 relays, plus the 100 yd. freestyle and breaststroke. Karen Young qualified in 200, 400, and 800 yd. freestyle relays.

There are all indications that the UNCW Invitational will become a permanent event. All the teams voted to make the Invitational an annual event, with UNCW as the permanent host. The field will also be expanded to include more teams.

"I'm very pleased with the whole thing (Invitational)," a happy Coach Dave Allen commented. The operation of the event went smoothly and overall attendance was good. Coach Allen also expressed his appreciation to the student body for its help and support during the meet.

The men's team is now in Cambridge for the upcoming Eastern Seaboard Championships (March 1-3). The women's team journeys to Reno, Nevada for the NIAAW Championships on March 8-10.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight

Sports Editor

The UNCW Seahawks have all but completed their 1979 basketball season. So, I guess it is time to look back on who did what and when statistically.

The Seahawks set four new individual records this year. Probably foremost among these is Garry Cooper's record for rebounds in a single game. Cooper grabbed 17 against South Carolina state. Another remarkable record was Barry Taylor's 50 minutes played in one game. The game was the double overtime affair against South Florida. The other records were Dave Wolff's free-throw attempts record of 16 against South Carolina State and Wolff's along with John Haskin's record for free-throws made, which was also set against South Carolina State.

The Seahawks also had some great high marks that were outstanding. Cooper scored a season high 30 points against Arkansas-Little Rock. Dave Wolff led the team in scoring with about a 17 points per game average. Barry Taylor had 9 assists against South Florida, and Garry Cooper blocked 4 shots on four different occasions.

UNCW's team highs this year include 96 points against Baltimore University. They shot 61 percent from the field against Stetson and 89.5 percent from the free throw line against Campbell.

Saving the best for last, Garry Cooper hit 12 free throws in 12 attempts, for 100 percent and yet another UNCW record.

The UNCW baseball team begins play tomorrow against South Carolina at Columbia. The Junior Varsity opens their schedule on Saturday against Garner.

UNCW netters play Friday

by John Justus
Sports Information Director

The largest schedule in school history awaits a youthful UNC-Wilmington men's tennis team this spring, with the opener for Coach Larry Honeycutt's squad set for March 2nd at Methodist.

The Seahawks, who were 14-10 a year ago, are missing number one player Ken House and number four Dave Shackelford, but a hungry group of young performers—none of them seniors—give Honeycutt reason for optimism.

"This should be a real interesting spring for us," Honeycutt says. "We have eight or nine opponents that we've never faced before with the caliber of competition probably as high as it's ever been."

"Paul Gemborys looks like he'll be at number one, but from there on down, we are very close in ability among ourselves."

Gemborys, a junior from Jacksonville, was the number two player on last year's team. Other returnees include Collin Sumrall (#3 in 1978), Gary Sue (#5) and Jeff Jackson (#6). Reserve Barry Harris also returns for the 'Hawks.

Challenging the veterans for the top six singles slots and in the doubles competition are freshmen Rick Watson from Southern Pines, Chuck Winslow of Goldsboro, and Charlie Ponton from Fayetteville.

Only 11 of UNCW's 29 matches are home affairs, with the four-team Azalea Classic on April 6-7 highlighting the home schedule. Top road contests are with Georgia Southern, The Citadel, Old Dominion, William & Mary and Virginia Tech. The Seahawks will also be meeting East Carolina and Campbell in home-and-home matches.

'Rocky Horror:' Religion, initiation

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is not just a movie. For those who are seeing it again and again, it is a religion. For those who are seeing it for the first time, it is an initiation. If you are seeing it a third, fourth or even tenth time, you come prepared; if you are seeing it for the first time, you'd better get prepared.

"Rocky Horror" is an offbeat rock musical that has enjoyed tremendous success on the weekend late-show circuit across the country. It premiered in 1975, and when it didn't make it on the normal premiere pattern, the producers found its niche entering through the back doors. The film's cultist audience has afforded it the best publicity campaign available—word of mouth.

The story of "Rocky Horror" centers around Dr. Frank N. Furter, a mad scientist who heads a colony of spaced-out characters from Transsexual, Transylvania. Dr. Furter is also a transvestite and bisexual.

The latest experiment of Furter is the creation of a perfect male body—which the doctor says is a tanned blond with a Charles Atlas build. The creation is Rocky Horror.

The movie is a spoof of the old monster and horror films you used to see at the Saturday matinee. Completing the story frame are a couple of young innocents who (you guessed it) are caught in a rainstorm and must go to Dr. Furter's eerie castle to get help. Also present is the Igor character—hunchbacked, groveling and utterly repulsive.

If there is a message from "Rocky Horror," it is that anything goes so long as you have a good time. There is a bit of everything in the film—heterosexuality, homosexuality, incest, and even some bloody violence. As the "normal" couple, Bryan and Janet, come to enjoy the free lifestyle, the message is that all of us would probably like it if we tried it—whatever "it" is.

There is, I suspect, some very good parody in the dialogue and lyrics, as well as the staging of the movie. Unfortunately, for us first-time viewers, much of that was lost amid the enthusiasm of "Rocky" cultists. They give stage directions to the characters, recite the dialogue, sing the songs, dance the dances (here's the infamous "time warp"), boo the villains, cheer the good guys and more.

It is best to go to the movie with proper headgear to protect yourself from all sorts of flying paraphenalia—rice, water, popcorn, etc. (I personally took a small Coke beside the head, among much else.) Since part of the experience for the first-time viewer is the surprise and incredibility of it all, it's best not to spoil it by telling too much.

Although viewers across the country have come dressed in costume—many in drag complete with fishnet hose, heels and garters—few in the Wilmington audience at Friday night's premiere were costumed. But there is a definite following in town, as evidenced by the line who braved pouring rain for as long as 30 minutes to see the movie.

As film, "Rocky Horror Picture Show" is pure fantasy and completely without value. As entertainment, it depends on audience fanaticism for half of the effect. I suspect it would have been funnier had the audience been able to hear the dialogue and understand the parody. But I also suspect that without the rowdiness, the audience wouldn't have had half as good a time. It was an unreal adventure, but not one that I particularly care to repeat.

"Rocky Horror Picture Show" is showing Friday and Saturday nights for the next few weekends at 11:30 at Long Leaf Cinema.

Marijuana:

NORML

speaker here

March 12

"Marijuana: The New Prohibition" will be the subject when Keith Stroup of NORML speaks at Kenan Auditorium on Monday, March 12, at 8 p.m. Stroup is being presented by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee.

Keith Stroup was the founder and national director of NORML (National Organization for Reform of Marijuana Laws). NORML has been working toward expanding public information and knowledge about marijuana, and has been instrumental in changing attitudes and laws about its use.

Marijuana use has grown very rapidly in the last few years, yet law against its use and misconceptions about its nature have sometimes caused enormous confusion and waste. Millions of young people have been arrested and thousands jailed for its possession. It has been called the "Devil's Weed" by its foes and lauded by its advocates. Several states, Oregon, Maine, California, Ohio, Colorado, and New York among them, have moved to decriminalize personal use of marijuana. Where does the truth lie?

Now NORML is presenting "Marijuana: The New Prohibition" all across the country. Two short films—"Marijuana: Assassin of Youth" and "Highlights of Reefer Madness"—are part of a comprehensive examination of the historical, medical, social and legal aspects of marijuana use.

Stroup will explore all aspects of the controversial subject matter. He will entertain at the conclusion of his lecture a question and answer period for his audience.

UNCW students will be admitted free upon presentation of their ID cards while non-students will be charged $2 at the box office.

Santana :

Just another remake

RECORDS

Seems that lately every new addition to the music charts is a remake. The newest Santana release is no exception. "Stormy" originally done by the Classics IV along with two more remakes on the album, Inner Secrets, are scattered through the LP. The other remakes include Traffic's "Dealer" and Buddy Holly's "Well All Right."

The remakes, like the other songs on Inner Secrets and the 1977 release Moon Flower, contain no jazz numbers but go back to the original 1969 style that made Santana famous. The album is enriched with the congas and percussion that seem to come naturally to the members of Santana.

The entire album seems to blend together in a style that is only expressed by Santana. Santana is: Devadip Carlos Santana (lead and rhythm guitar), Greg Walker (lead vocals and back ground vocals), Graham Lear (drums), David Margen (bass), Chris Solberg (rhythm, lead guitar and organ), Chris Rhyne (keyboards, synthesizers), Paul Pekow (congas, percussion), Armando Peraza (bongos, percussion) and Pete Evcoverde (timbales and percussion).

Inner Secrets, Santana's twelfth album, are revealed by the leader of the group Devadip Carlos Santana. Original music on the disc is written by the members of Santana and/or the producers of the LP, Laubert and Potter.

Traffic's "Dealer" opens the LP and features the blending of acoustic and electric guitar. This song also blends into "Spanish Rose" which really lets the musicians express their Latin style.

Carlos Santana's style that is totally his own is expressed in "Open Invitation."

Most of the music on the album is slow and low key. The Latin style is definitely there and Santana is definitely here. Other cuts include "Move on," "One Chain (Don't Make No Prison)," "Wham!", "Life is a Lady/Holiday" and "The Facts of Love."

ENGLISH CLUB

Senior places first in human relations contest

Robert Welch, a senior English major, placed first in a Human Relations Commission essay contest. As part of Human Relations Month, the contest, coordinated by the UNCW English Club, solicited essays from students on campus written about a student or member of the faculty and staff who had contributed most to improving human relations in the community.

Welch's essay was about Vivan Martindale, the UNCW campus minister. Although Martindale's position requires human relationship activities, many additional ones were cited that made his service commendable: a counselor to the Special Olympics, voluntary work with the Crisis Line-Drug Abuse Center, former chairman of the board of directors for the Human Relations Commission of Wilmington, and his involvement with the recently held Bio-Medical Symposium.

Lynda T. Strickland, a part-time student majoring in sociology, placed second. Her essay, entitled "An Outstanding Campus Citizen," focused on Dr. James K. McGowan. Strickland's essay discussed McGowan as a teacher, scholar, administrator, and community leader.

Third place went to Helen Pines. Her essay was written about Doug Swink and his work with the UNCW drama department and the S.R.O. Straw Hat Theatre.

Fine Arts Committee to present 'Cinderella'

"Cinderella" will be presented by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee Tuesday, March 13 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. This X-rated film takes an unusual twist to the original tale you read as a kid.

This hilarious bit of pseudo-erotica has been played with success on college campuses since its recent theatrical release. Produced by Charles Bond, dubbed "the new Roger Carman" by the trade press, "Cinderella" is impure fun, the irreverent opposite of "The Slipper and the Rose."

Played for broad comedy, its outrageous humor has Prince Charming trying on a parade of damsels in an attempt to find the missing girl who made the Royal Ball tingle with excitement. What he slipped Cinderella was not a slipper. Other bits of monkey business are created by Sy Richardson as Cinderella's fairy God-father and the actresses (?) gotten up like two bizarre Bette Midlers to play the ugly step-sisters.

The "X" rating is more for the level of taste than for anything else.

No one under the age of 18 will be admitted and everyone will be asked to show their ID cards. This admission to this film will be 50 cents for all UNCW students with ID cards, and $1 for all non-students. Season passes shall be honored.

Studying in library almost unheard of

There are a lot of myths associated with life on the university level. The biggest one is the naive assumption that students go to the library to study. They do not. They go to flirt, to sleep, to leer at legs, to munch Crackerjacks behind the stacks, to meditate in the restrooms, and to get out of the wind. Only occasionally do they go to read.

Cynical, you say? No way, no sir, no ma'am. If you think I fib, check it out for your own suspicious self. Go ahead and walk on in, admission's free. Stay calm (you'd be amazed how many people break out in a cold sweat at the sight of a book) and take a look around. Are the assembled masses reverently caressing Roget's Thesaurus? Heck no, they're over there behind the reference shelves caressing each other. No dummies, today's students!

That strange munching noise you hear is not the sound of a mind eagerly devouring knowledge. Nope, it's the sound of some starving sucker eagerly devouring a box of M & M's while his buddy keeps an eye out for the librarian (who would rather find rats than students eating in her library).

Sleep is definitely the main activity that is pursued in the library. It's very simple and requires no special equipment or previous training. Just find an empty couch and dive, preferable head-first. Feet first can cause hardship to the springs and cushions, not to mention injury to your prized bubblegum sneakers. Infrequently, one spots a sleeper with a book modestly draped over his features. This is to prevent recognition by one's professors, who tend to frown on public twitching and snoring.

Those misguided souls who duck inside the library doors to get out of a blizzard are pitifully easy to spot. They are the ones who take on look around, realize where they are, and then head on down the road. To these people, books have all the appeal of congealed castor oil.

As for those sickies who leer at legs, well, we won't talk about them. They are sex-oriented, chauvinistic, and generally very shallow. (Besides, the editor of this newspaper is a leg man and this is my way of really sticking it to him!)

Now after all you've seen and I've said, is there any doubt remaining in your feeble little mind? There's lots of activity going on in good ol' William Madison Randall, but very little of it involves studying.

Oh, every now and then you might spot some weirdo poring over a magazine, but that's just a local wveman scanning the latest issue of Surfer!

and welcome change," Moore said. She said the amount of money involved and the type of activities being sponsored with the money necessitate the change.

Greene said the board would be a "consistent, concise form of distributing money... that now does not exist."

The business of allocating and monitoring funds also detracts from other important SGA concerns, Greene said.

Vice-chancellor Malloy said that under the new system, "the emotional factor will be eliminated." He also pointed out that with a majority of voting members on the new board, "students carry the power, and that's the way we want it."

Two of the major areas of funding, media and publications and programming, would likely receive a percentage to be distributed among the individual media organizations or program committees by separate agencies. These agencies would be the Media and Publications Board and the Program Board, the latter currently under SGA.

The Media Board is currently exploring the best alternatives to its funding situation, action which was endorsed by the Student Legislature last week.

Program Board officials have also looked at funding program committees from a lump sum allocation to the entire board. Several SGA officials, including Treasurer Reagan, support this change.

Although administration and faculty representatives are included on both the Media Board and the proposed Fee Board, Malloy pointed out that the intention is to leave programming in student hands.

The Fee Board would also be given control of any surplus funds such as money retained from the previous year or an unexpected increase in fee collections.

The proposal recommends that most money be earmarked prior to the beginning of the fall semester and that the board hold its first meeting within two weeks of its approval and student elections. The board, however, is intended to meet throughout the year to hear requests for reallocations.

Moore said the idea of an allocation board has been discussed by administration officials since her arrival here in 1972.

If the new board is approved, the student body will elect three members. Requirements set down for these representatives include maintaining a required grade average, sophomore standing and not being in an executive position with any groups receiving student fee funds.

Blacks

two choices: one, the student conforms to the white, Anglo-Saxon, protestant values and behavior and lives under those conditions stated above; or, two, he leaves the university system to attend a private or predominately black school or transfers to an out-of-state school. The worst that could happen is the student terminates his or her education because of the way the state educational system is designed.

We must realize that there are problems: (1) making available the means by which blacks can enter the university system, (2) increasing the enrollment of blacks at predominately white institutions, (3) providing the necessary essentials to maintain a black student enrollment by establishing programs to benefit blacks in moral, cultural and ethnic aspects, and (4) solving problems in identity crises among blacks. Without solving these problems, there will be blacks who lose their ethnicity, fall into a subjective position and lull complacent state. What many conceptualize as most beneficial to their careers, such as accepting and conforming to white, Anglo-Saxon, protestant values and behavior, is in actuality degrading and has no positive prospects for their life careers. These problems will perpetuate themselves as long as the UNC schools permit them to. Solutions to these problems have been provided by HEW.

A general answer to the problems lies in the affirmative action programs. This accepted principle of seeking qualified minority group members for open positions applies to all federally aided programs in this country. I believe that a major resolution to the UNC school system problems is to establish a back-up commitment to the employment of qualified black teaching personnel at the predominately white institutions. To do this, one needs to provide incentives, financial and otherwise, that will attract those qualified minority group members for open positions.

Board seeks at-large member

The Media and Publications Board is looking for an at large student representative to be added to its membership. The student will join a recently appointed SGA representative on the board to provide greater objectivity in governing campus media and publications.

The board includes the Seahawk, WLOZ radio, Fledgling (yearbook), Atlantis (literary magazine), and videotape committee. Meetings are usually held at 11:15 on Tuesdays or Thursdays, averaging once every two weeks.

Interested persons should contact Linda Moore or Jon Greene in the Student Activities Office in the Pub.

The board asks that applicants not be affiliated with any of the media or publications under its jurisdiction.

The Counseling and Testing Office has moved into its permanent quarters in the Student Services Building. The office is located in the first floor in the rooms formerly housing the bookstore.

The office was temporarily located in Randall Library while renovations were being made to the present facility.

Radio station has positions open

Applications for the position of news director for WLOZ radio may be picked up from Dr. Irvin Clator in C-204. A job description is also available.

Also, there are one-half tuition scholarships available for an assistant program director and an assistant music director at WLOZ. Applications for these positions are also available from Dr. Clator.

Yoga course is offered

A course in beginning yoga is being offered by the office of Continuing Education. The course is scheduled to last from March 6 through April 24.

Members will meet on Tuesday evenings from 6:30-8:30 p.m. The instructor will be Mary L. Humphreys. A fee is required of $30.

Class instruction will focus on integration of physical and mental energy, toning and flexibility of total muscle structure, proper breathing, and release of tension and fatigue. There will also be discussion centered around the new awareness of individual potential.

Applications being accepted for dormitory positions

The Student Affairs Office is now accepting applications for employment as Chief Resident Assistants and Resident Assistants in Belk Hall, Galloway Hall, Hewlett Hall and Dorm '79 for the 1979-80 academic year. The basic qualifications for these positions are as follows:

CHIEF RESIDENT ASSISTANTS

Must be enrolled at UNCW with preferably junior or senior academic status. Responsibilities include overall supervision of the assigned residence hall and some office duties. Compensation includes free room and board in the residence hall and a monthly salary.

RESIDENT ASSISTANTS

Must be enrolled as a full-time student at UNCW. Responsibilities include supervising designated areas of the residence hall and some office duties. An accumulative quality point average of 2.00 or better is required. Minimum wages.

Applications may be picked up in the offices of Belk Hall, Galloway Hall, Hewlett Hall and the Student Affairs Office, Alderman Building, room 104. Deadline for returning applications is Friday, March 16.

WLOZ manager hopes for happier days

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

Happy days are here again for UNCW's on-campus radio station, WLOZ. This is according to the newly-elected station manager, Karen King. Enthused King, "There are a lot of things happening with WLOZ--we're making all kinds of improvements and we've got a great staff!"

King elaborated upon this statement by explaining that, with the new management staff and a rejuvenated control board in the offing, WLOZ is in the process of getting a much-needed shot in the arm.

"Some of the equipment is really shot," the new manager said. "That which is salvageable is in the process of being repaired; that which is not is stored in case we ever need some of those parts. Right now Dr. Irvin Clator, our adviser, is working on getting the control board set up in what will be the production room. Until then we are more or less making do with what's available."

Other members of the management staff include Gail Eubanks, program director; Temesia Williamson, music director; and Donna McMilllan, business manager. Rick Larrimore serves as the station's student engineer.

"We have accumulated a really capable, hard-working staff. Together we can promise to bring about some changes in policy and operation," declared King.

King, who is employed at WLCM-FM as music director, explained WLOZ's operational policy. The station is currently functioning under a telegram for a required program test period, and later will be issued a broadcasting license. Also, according to King, in the near future there will be a search for someone to head up the news department. Persons functioning in managerial positions receive scholarships, and half-scholarships for their efforts.

Concluded King, "We want everyone to realize that this is the new Z-91. The staff has been working very hard and we are ready to listen to anyone who might have any ideas to contribute to our efforts. WLOZ is an album-oriented station, designed for the entertainment of students. Anyone who has any interest in what we're doing can come in and we'll be glad to listen."

In addition to reorganization efforts under way within the radio station's staff, a special study commission established by the Media and Publications Board held its first meeting last week.

Residence hall contracts dispersed smoothly

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Residence hall contracts for next year were dispersed in a little more than an hour last Tuesday after approximately 150 students camped out on the steps of Hanover Hall the night before to insure themselves of getting a room. A waiting list of 68 men and 66 women was also accumulated as some students who wanted rooms were unable to obtain them immediately.

The contracts were scheduled to be let Monday, Feb. 19, but administration officials postponed the distribution after a disturbance broke out in the line of about 250 students.

The Housing Office had reserved 400 rooms for returning students with the remaining 600 designated for freshmen and transfer students.

According to Director of Housing Charlie King, students were not as concerned about getting a room as they were about in which dormitory that room would be. King said the most popular dorm was the one which will open next year ("Dorm '79") because it is the only one which will be both coed and in a suite arrangement.

"The real problem of Monday was that everybody wanted to get into Dorm '79," King said.

For the first time since the university has had on-campus housing, two dorms will be single sex residences and two will be coed next year.

King said, however, that administration officials are not thinking about reverting back to an entirely coed residence complex because of its apparent popularity. He said that among freshmen applicants, about half of the students are signing for coed dorms and half for single-sex halls.

King reiterated that the Housing Office expects to accommodate all students on the waiting list as they did last year. He said the number on the list is approximately equal to last year's.

King said that many students sign for rooms as a "safety valve" to insure housing the next year, but then look for apartments, transfer or drop out of school. At least one student has already changed his mind this week, King reported.

Housing officials are preparing to institute a lottery system for next year's contract distribution because of the growing number of students wanting to live on campus. King said the system is employed at many schools already. Students would sign up for rooms and a draw would be held to determine a designated number of spaces.

Quotas ruled discriminatory

(CPS)--A federal court has ruled that the University of North Carolina's efforts to make sure blacks and women are represented in student government amount to reverse discrimination.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld its earlier decision, appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court and then sent back to the appeals court for reconsideration, that UNC had violated two white students' constitutional rights when it enforced its regulation that the 18-member Campus Governing Council include at least two men, two women, and two blacks of either gender. UNC regulations said that if student elections failed to fill those quotas, the council president had to appoint students to fill them.

Two white male students sued the school when they were denied seats on the council by the council president's appointments. The appeals court first ruled in favor of the students. Lawrence Uzzell and Robert Arrington. The university then appealed the ruling to the U.S. Supreme Court, which, soon after handing down its more-celebrated Bakke ruling, sent the case back to the lower court for a new decision.

On Feb. 5, the lower court determined that UNC had imposed a racial classification on council membership, and as such had violated the federal prohibition of racial discrimination. UNC is reportedly considering appealing the decision again.

... "If a man can sell alcohol... then why the uproar about selling weed?"

Marijuana reform

Former NORML head addresses large crowd, advocates decriminalization of weed

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

Have you ever had the munchies? Experienced cotton-mouth? Wished marijuana would be decriminalized?

If so, chances are you were one of the many students and faculty members who crowded into Kenan Auditorium Monday evening.

The featured speaker was Keith Stroup, ex-national director of NORML (the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws). Stroup addressed the audience of approximately 500 for the better part of an hour before initiating a question-and-answer period. Then followed a series of anti-marijuana propaganda films that were greeted by catcalls and hoots of disbelief from the viewers.

Founded in 1970, NORML, under Stroup's leadership, has become one of the most effective citizen-action lobby groups in Washington. NORML's major efforts have been in the areas of marijuana decriminalization and reclassification for medical purposes. More recently, NORML has been lobbying to stop the U.S.-supported spraying of paraquat on Mexican marijuana fields.

Throughout his enthusiastically received speech, Stroup emphasized his stand on the issue of legalizing pot.

"Sellers should have the same rights as the users," he reasoned. "People are going to get their grass from somewhere. If a man can sell alcohol, which is also a drug, then why the uproar about selling weed?"

Stroup continued the lecture by briefly detailing an abbreviated history of marijuana and its effects on man. "The Mexicans smoked it like fiends. Pancho Villa and his followers were buzzed all the time," declared Stroup, possibly with tongue-in-cheek.

Divorced and the father of a 10-year-old daughter, Stroup, 35, said he smokes grass on a regular basis. "I do it, my ex-wife does it, and I've no doubt that one day my daughter will want to try drugs," Stroup remarked. He added, "I must say I'd prefer she waited until she was a post-adolescent, but in my position, I cannot forbid her access to smoking pot."

A lawyer, Stroup responded to questions pertaining to his retirement as NORML's national director with this stock reply: "I was growing weary of the intensifying pressure that came with the job responsibilities. Also, after the Peter Bourne drug expose, there was considerable 'urging' from the White House for me to resign my position."

Stroup explained, however, that he is presently serving as chairman of the board of directors for NORML. He is currently conducting a nationwide lecture tour of universities and has no plans to halt his crusade for the legalization of marijuana.

"Smoking grass is a victimless crime, and far more widespread than most of us realize. It's time it is recognized as a recreational, non-addictive part of American life," concluded Stroup.

Firing of concert chair may lead to court action

The firing of Concert Committee Chair David Carter by SGA President Wayne Dunlap, which has forced the cancellation of a Waylon Jennings concert scheduled later this month, has sparked debate which may lead to a challenge of the action in the Student Court.

The firing of Concert Committee Chair David Carter by SGA President Wayne Dunlap, which has forced the cancellation of a Waylon Jennings concert scheduled later this month, has sparked debate which may lead to a challenge of the action in the Student Court.

Dunlap, who informed the Student Legislature of his decision March 1, said that Carter was fired because he had not participated in Program Board meetings and had planned the Jennings concert without consulting with the Board or SGA officials.

Carter, however, feels that Dunlap dismissed him because of personal differences and that Program Board officials should have been consulted before Dunlap made his decision.

Carter and Dunlap both said that the conflict between them arose when Dunlap informed Carter there was not sufficient funds in the concert account to finance a discount for student tickets to the Jennings concert. The Concert Committee had already advertised that the discount would be available.

Carter said he thought that the Student Legislature had approved his budget request of $7000 last fall, but SGA

Creative Arts Department chairman resigns position

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Dr. Terry Theodore of the Department of Creative Arts has resigned his position as department chairman, according to sources within the department. The resignation became effective Monday.

Dr. James K. McGowan, assistant to the chancellor, has been appointed Creative Arts chairman on an interim basis, the sources also said.

Theodore was charged last semester in a petition signed by 18 department faculty members with creating a "demoralizing and negative" atmosphere within the department. The petition was presented to Academic Dean Daniel Plyler.

The petition alleged that there were personal differences between Theodore and other faculty members, and also asked for a clarification of the chairman's authority.

The Creative Arts Department was organized this year combining the drama, music, art and speech communications curricula under one department label. Each curriculum maintains certain autonomies, although degrees are conferred by the department.

Dean Plyler had responded to the petition by ordering a complete evaluation of Theodore and the department's structure this spring.

Sources also said that the positions of curriculum coordinators had been eliminated with the change in the department chair. The former chairs of the departments had served as coordinators under the new structure, and the elimination of these positions may signal further changes in the organization of the Creative Arts Department.

Administration proposal not thought-out, but changes are needed

The furor over an administration proposal to strip SGA of its budget-making authority for most student activities on campus is in full swing now with SGA President Wayne Dunlap and most of the Student Legislature expressing violent objections to the plan as ill-conceived, ill-timed and ill-prepared.

Student Activities Director Linda Moore and Assistant Director Jon Greene drew up the written proposal at the request of Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy. The plan was delivered to Malloy in late February, but the concept of the proposal has been on the minds of university officials for a number of years.

Student leaders became justly concerned when it was discovered that the plan was being pushed through administrative channels without the benefit of scrutiny by students in any substantive form. But for the quick action of a handful of student leaders, the proposal might have been presented to the student body as an administrative dictum within a week of being put on paper.

Malloy's department has been caught in a blatant act of inconsideration for the positions and opinions of student leaders. A plan that would change the complexion of student government and expenditures of student funds as much as this would should have involved open discussion before the student body from its inception to its final form. There is absolutely no getting around that fact.

Present System Often Reckless

This administrative blunder casts an unfortunate bad light on the move to improve the fee allocation system. It has prompted opposition to a plan the intention of which is in the best interests of both the student body and the university as a whole.

The present system, which allots a portion of student fees to SGA to be dispersed among student organizations, publications and programming committees, has proved reckless in the past and subject to abuse of the political motives of student government leaders.

Over the past two years alone, there have been several examples of problems of the SGA budget structure which argue for a change in the system:

In September 1977, nearly $3000 in student funds was spent on one of the biggest entertainment fiascos ever planned for this campus, the "Star Trek" science fiction convention. The SGA president and treasurer made the decision during the summer-while the Legislature was not in session-to give financial backing to a fledgling group of "Star Trek" enthusiasts which had never organized any sizable activity on campus before. The result was three days of movies, lectures and parties at which attendance was almost non-existent.

During the past semester, the Legislature has had difficulty reaching a quorum for its weekly meeting, and many times a meeting was not held while funding requests were bottled up. There have also been procedural problems, particularly with the Finance Committee- where the real money decisions are made-which operates without written guidelines to provide a consistent method of approving allocation requests.

SGA officials have continually shown a lack of understanding of the need to give media and publications and programming committees a free hand with their budgets. Last year, "Atlantis," the student literary magazine, was threatened with a cutoff of funds unless the "quality" improved. (Who should define quality, the editors or SGA?) This year, the Legislature inappropriately stepped into the internal operations of WLOZ radio by approving a study of the station's operations without consulting its management, using the control of funds as justification for the action. A serious misunderstanding of the concept of a central program board is evidenced by the failure thus far to allocate a lump sum to the board rather than separate budgets to individual committees of the board.

These are only a few examples of inadequacies within the current system. But they show exactly the problems that have occurred too often in SGA: unwise and ill-considered allocations; inconsistency in procedural matters; and abuse of the power of funding through inappropriate assertion of control.

New Proposal Not Adequate

The current administration proposal, however, has not outlined what changes are needed in the budget structure, nor has it explained why they should be made. More seriously, it fails to set up any specific guidelines under which the allocation board can operate. This parallels the creation of both the Program Board and Media and Publications Board, which are now suffering from a lack of clear definition of authority or procedure.

The need for a new agency at all is not clear by any means. The real benefits of a new system would be taking media, publications and programming committees from under the wings of SGA. The Student Legislature, with revised and improved operating procedures, could continue to handle other funding requests from clubs and organizations as equitably as any new board. Thus, we would have a three-way split of the fee money now controlled by SGA: among Program Board, Media and Publications Board, and the Student Legislature.

While changes in the allocation system should be agreeable to the student body, there are important specifics which must be worked out before the concept becomes a practical working system. These specifics are those which should be discussed, with good faith on both sides, among administrators and students so that we reach the best system possible.

The tenor of opinion with SGA officials appears to be anger over the proposal and the manner in which it was presented. That puts the administration in the awkward position of having to either drop the plan until tempers cool or force it down the throats of students. That is neither good for the proposal nor the health of student-administration relations.

The more temperant among student leaders, however, will not be so much angered by the situation as they are frustrated, confused and hurt by the fact that the manner of presentation was a slap squarely in the face. Good relationships are built on mutual trust, and mutual trust can only exist when both parties are willing.

Resolution of UNC-HEW desegregation dispute brings federal-state compromise

The deadline for some kind of resolution of the dispute between the UNC system and the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare has arrived, and officials on both sides, as expected, appear headed for a compromise that will preserve federal aid to UNC but push the university toward greater visible desegregation efforts.

The UNC-HEW disagreement has been a long and drawn-out affair. It started out as a decision from HEW to force North Carolina and several other states to make better efforts for desegregation under threat of a cutoff of federal funds. To UNC, this would have meant the loss of approximately $90 million per year.

The other states involved in the dispute have submitted revised desegregation plans and North Carolina has remained the most significant case still before HEW for the last year or so. Coupled with HEW Secretary Joseph Califano's vigorous anti-smoking campaign, which N.C. tobacco farmers have taken very personally, the UNC dispute has led state officials and the public in general to charge that Califano has "singled-out" North Carolina.

That, of course, is just so much malarky. Neither Califano nor HEW have anything against the state of North Carolina. If government studies show that smoking is hazardous to human health, it is the duty of the nation's health officials to warn the public of that hazard. If federal law says that racial discrimination is unconstitutional and it is illegal to support discriminatory programs with federal funds, it is the duty of the nation's education officials to identify discrimination and insure that where it exists federal money is not involved.

Of course, Califano and his department of bureaucrats made some blunders in the methods they used to carry out their "duties." UNC officials were alienated from the start when HEW took the stance of making decisions for the university. The unreasonable call for a 150 percent increase in black enrollment at UNC in a short time frame is a prime example here.

HEW's objections to UNC operations involved many aspects, including minority student enrollment, number of black faculty, program duplication and poor facilities at predominantly black institutions.

The first two problems are problems of numbers; that is, HEW simply called for a numerical increase in black enrollment and faculty. This becomes an emotional issue involving attitudes toward affirmative action plans in general and quotas.

While affirmative action plans are both morally and legally right, problems arise when strict quotas are demanded, when numerical goals are set that may ignore the reality of qualification. A sincere effort must be made to compensate for past discrimination and deprivation when black applicants are considered, but not at the expense of equally qualified white students and not for the sake of attaining an arbitrary number. Numbers alone are a good means to fool ourselves into believing we have solved a problem when in reality we have added to it.

Program duplication was the issue in the dispute which would supposedly bring the most serious disagreement. At issue were decisions to provide similar programs at both predominantly white and black institutions; the objection was that this would perpetuate segregation. Nursing programs at UNC-Greensboro and N.C. A & T, law schools at UNC-Chapel Hill and N.C. Central and engineering programs at A & T and N.C.

State are examples of the duplication of degree programs within UNC.

The theory of HEW officials was that if a degree was offered at only one UNC school, students who wanted that degree would go to that university. White students who wanted the degree would not automatically prefer the white institution, blacks would not prefer the black institution.

HEW did not push for elimination of any programs, but it did seek to have programs in the planning stages planned for one institution, with preference given black campuses to make up for past neglect. This would probably increase competition among the 15 campuses to have particular curricula established at one or another.

Program duplication is a most difficult issue to wrestle with. It can perpetuate segregation, but it also serves to give students a choice—not only between black and white campuses but between smaller and larger campuses and of location as well.

The problem of inadequate facilities at black campuses is the most easily solved because the solution is simply more money. The five black institutions have lagged far behind in financial support and the result is overcrowded buildings and insufficient equipment. UNC officials have, in fact, already begun the long process of correcting this situation. Those schools now rank just behind the three largest of the system in per student, per year expenditures.

UNC President William Friday, Gov. Jim Hunt and the Board of Governors have been cautious dealing with HEW to avoid any unwarranted interference by federal authorities. The state operates the university system and it must assert its responsibility to make policy decisions.

The HEW pressure, however, has served a good purpose for the state by calling our attention to the deficiencies within the UNC system and promoting a self-evaluation by university officials. It is extremely doubtful whether HEW would have actually cut federal aid to UNC, but it is important that they do have that leverage to serve as a check on state officials who might otherwise drag their feet in complying with regulations.

UNC's commitment to desegregation now seems real, it's officials taking into consideration the practical situation and preserving the concept of quality education. The fears of federal takeover of university administration have not proved justified; in other words, HEW's motives have been shown sincere and aboveboard.

The significance of the dispute will be the equity with which black applicants and black institutions are now treated by the UNC administration and state government officials. It is only wise that the larger institutions—Chapel Hill, N.C. State, East Carolina—should continue to receive some preference to maintain their status as national leaders in higher education.

But if the state wants to continue to support 15 institutions, it must realize what it will take to do so—money. The five black institutions are as much a reflection on the state as Chapel Hill; the state must provide adequate facilities and resources.

As for desegregation, we need to realize that it won't happen overnight and be lasting at the same time. Reasonable goals adopted with a good-faith commitment are the best solution.

The UNC-HEW dispute has been an example of federal-state confrontation, negotiation and compromise. From a practical point of view, this time it seems to have succeeded.

Students losing faith

To the Editor:

Well, it's happened again. I'm speaking of the administration's move several weeks ago which paired student against student in a blood-thirsty battle for a dorm room next semester. Once again the administration has kicked all students squarely in the rump!

Vice-chancellor William Malloy was quoted as saying that the students were "making a big deal out of the situation." Housing Director Charlie King was quoted as saying that "the big concern of the students was not whether they would have a room, but which dormitory they would reside in." I, personally, don't know which students they've spoken with, but those I've talked to deserved the right to "make a big deal," and were concerned with finding a room to live in, not "in which dorm."

Students who could not afford to camp out all night in front of the gymnasium, or who could not miss a class (which is why we're all here, right?) are now confronted with the problems of finding off-campus housing, and transportation to and from school.

My first question when this all began was "why cater to freshmen?" Why not give upperclassmen fringe benefits. Unfortunately the answer soon became all too clear. Once they've had us students here for one semester, chances are we'll stay; they've got us over a barrel.

So my dear administrators while you've opened your arms to 550 freshmen hungry for a taste of college life, you've alienated twice that many present students. Students who are beginning to lose faith in the college they've called home.

Debbie Doyle

Greedy administrators

To the Editor:

The Seahawk article of Feb. 28 concerning the proposal submitted by Student Activities Director Linda Moore and Assistant Director Jon Greene to create a Student Fee Allocation Board to take away the right of the Student Legislature to allocate student activity fees is disgusting and a show by the administration that its members are greedy and power-hungry. In particular Linda Moore, Jon Greene and Vice-chancellor William Malloy could not care less about the well-being of the students.

The control of the student activity fees belongs to the student-elected representatives, these being the student senators. To even hint of depriving the students of the control of these monies is to speak of denying us students of the little control we have over campus affairs.

Greene said in the article that the board would be "a consistent, concise form of distributing money . . . that now does not exist." He also said the business of allocating and monitoring funds detracts from other important SGA concerns. Well, I'd like for him to tell me what other concerns. The allocation of this money is one of the most important functions of SGA and to take away this right is literally stripping the SGA of what little power it is allowed by the "all powerful" administration.

Maybe the administration needs to be reminded that if it were not for the students Linda Moore, Jon Greene, William Malloy and all the other fat-cats whose salaries we students pay would be unemployed.

Title IX gets first big test at Michigan State

Campus Digest News Service. The controversial Title IX law, which includes a requirement of sexual equality in collegiate sports, is in its first test case since the recent clarification of the 1972 law.

Michigan State University has been ordered by a federal judge to give female basketball players the same traveling expenses given to the men's basketball team.

The 12-member women's basketball team filed a suit against the university Feb. 5, claiming that they were discriminated against because the men's team was given considerably more food and lodging expenses than they were.

U.S. District Court Judge Noel Fox has continued the temporary restraining order he made Feb. 6 and ordered the university and the women's team to negotiate an out-of-court settlement.

Fox ordered the university to give the women $16 a day to food while on road, and ordered that no more than two athletes be accommodated in each hotel room.

Michigan State was not adjusting its program to Title IX as quickly as many universities; the 1978-79 men's basketball budget was $152,000 while the women's budget was only $13,500.

Fox ordered the university and the women's team to organize negotiating teams, and Fox said he will serve as mediator.

The issue of equal traveling expenses is only one of many areas the Title IX law will be tested on.

Universities and colleges are expected to provide equal training facilities, equal numbers of scholarships and equal means of transportation for male and female athletes on a "per capita" not proportional basis. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare recently made the equal "per capita" ruling.

Major universities are each expecting to raise women's athletic budgets $1 million or more to comply with the newly interpreted law.

Since HEW still has not come up with ironclad Title IX guidelines for collegiate sports, universities will have to comply voluntarily through their own interpretations or face court cases. The constitutionality of Title IX guidelines will take some time to determine.

Legal service agency would cost students about 50 cents per semester

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Karin Whaley, former SGA president and legislator, presented the results of her investigation into a student legal service agency at UNCW to the Student Legislature at its meeting Thursday. March 1.

The agency, Whaley said, would give students legal advice for such problems as landlord-tenant disagreements and traffic and drug-related cases which a student might encounter.

The service would be financed through student fees at a cost of about 50 cents per student, per semester, much the same as the Student Health Service is now financed.

Whaley said she had talked with several area attorneys about the proposal and has worked out a specific plan with at least one.

In addition to the regular advisory service, the agency would probably sponsor workshops for students and run information columns in the Seahawk. Student workers would staff the office regularly with scheduled hours for an attorney to be on campus part time.

Whaley said that legal service agencies are popular at campuses across the country and noted that UNC-Chapel spends approximately $36,000 per year for student legal services on its campus.

In other legislative action, several proposals to change requirements for SGA candidates and officeholders and to extend the transition period between election and assuming office were all rejected. SGA President Wayne Dunlap had asked for many of the changes.

Dunlap urged that executive officers be allowed a one-month transition period to better acquaint themselves with their jobs before taking over.

Sophomore President Brad Williams moved to make this change, but Representative Michael Sanders pointed out that there is only a month left after elections before the SGA budget is approved.

Williams amended his motion to allow a two-week period, but Representative Cathy Robinson stated that "The only people who have trouble adjusting are incoming freshmen." She advocated a one-week period.

On voice votes, all motions and amendments on the transition period were rejected.

Williams made another motion dealing with elections which would have required all candidates and officeholders to carry 12 credit hours each semester.

Several legislators argued that this would not allow part-time students to be elected, and some pointed out that dropping below 12 hours in the middle of a semester would make the officeholder ineligible.

The motion was defeated.

The Legislature allocated $1100 to the Fine Arts Committee to be used for an all-night film festival. The festival will feature concert films.

An allocation of $98 was approved for the Sailing Club, and $70 was approved for the Board of Elections to hold a candidate/voter forum this Saturday in the Pub.

The Forensics Union was given $500 for travel expenses to a statewide debate tournament to be held at Wingate College. Faculty adviser Bob Rosenthal reported an increase in membership to 19 and said the money would be spent for lodging, travel and registration fees.

A charter for the Environmental Majors Club was approved.

The Legislature will meet at 7 p.m. Thursday in room C-218.

Honor Court serves as 'sounding board'

by Julie Russ
Staff Writer

To the majority of students at UNCW, the Honor Court by any other name would still remain virtually unknown. The Honor Court is a branch of campus justice that provides a "sounding board" for student/professor disagreements, such as when a student is accused of cheating by a faculty member.

Junior Glen Downs, who serves as SGA attorney general and handles student cases before the Honor Court, explained, "The Honor Court is basically brought into play when a professor specifically accuses a student of cheating and wants to take action. If the student feels he is being treated unfairly, the case is brought before the Honor Court."

Downs is the first attorney general to be elected by the student body. In previous years the SGA president has been responsible for appointing a student to the post. Downs, who served as freshman class president and sophomore class secretary, emphasized that the situation between student and professor is important when considering representation in the Honor Court.

"Both parties have to be serious about what they are contemplating," he remarked, adding that most professors do not push the issue any further.

According to Downs, no such case has ever progressed to the Student Court.

Glen Downs
SGA Attorney General

The Honor Court has been an integral part of UNCW since the university's initial founding, although its existence is not widely publicized. Students choose to contest accusations in court as an alternative to possible failure in the course in which they are accused of cheating. Expulsion is also a possibility, although considered a somewhat severe penalty, and could be devastating to any future educational plans.

Concluded Downs, "Most people don't have a lot of time for cheaters, and it doesn't pay in the long run. If someone is determined to cheat, he or she should be prepared to accept the consequences that follow."

Including a trip to Honor Court.

Davidson College says preference given males based on 'tradition'

CPS)—A curious thing happens in admissions applications at Davidson College in North Carolina. When an application arrives from a male who was in the top ten percent of his high school senior class, there's a good chance it will be accepted. But when it comes from a female, also in the top ten percent of her class, there's a much greater chance that it will be rejected.

The phenomenon isn't an arbitrary decision by the admissions committee. Instead, it is part of the small private school's admission policy. Last fall's code mandated an enrollment of 250 males and 110 females, or a 54:44 ratio. And last week Davidson's trustees amended the rule to admit even fewer females, at a 65:35 ratio. They also approved a measure that would allow administrators to admit more females if they were "exceptionally well qualified."

Why the discrimination? The reasons, Tony Boon of the admissions office hastens to explain have nothing to do with sexism. Asked for more specifics, he added, "Well, there's a whole lot of different reasons" why the school is reluctant to consider all applications equally.

The most telling is "something as simple as tradition." Davidson was an all-male school for 136 years before it decided to admit women in 1973. That decision, moreover, was prompted at "the feeling that a single-sex institution is less appealing" than a coed one, and by an anticipated decrease in the number of potential students.

Admitting women, which Boon feels has "been really good for the school," wasn't welcomed by all college groups. Specifically, the alumni seemed particularly disgruntled. Some felt, according to Boon, "there needed to be open to men a special kind of education." The fact that alumni are generous to the school "probably had something to do with" the 1976 decision to limit the admission of women.

A major fear of that time was that women would choose courses that weren't within Davidson's curricular specialty—pre-professional training. As a result, the school would have faced significant extra costs to hire more professors and expand existing facilities. But the problem, Boon says, never materialized. "By and large, the women enroll in the same things men do, and do just as well."

Whatever the reasons for the sexual quotas, though, not all of Davidson's 1300-some students are pleased. Six months ago, senior Martha Sanford brought a petition signed by over a quarter of the student body to administrators. The petition asked that the quotas be dropped. No action was taken, according to the "Davidsonian," the student paper.

In February, the campus National Organization for Women chapter again approached administrators, again asking for equal-access admissions. The group compiled statistics showing that, of equally-qualified applicants, 70 percent of the males were accepted, but only 58 percent of the women were accepted.

During the last weekend of February, though, the trustees reaffirmed the quotas. Boon was not too hopeful that they'd be dropped later, either. "We're a traditional school in the South," he sighs. "The thinking is a little more conservative."

records show the Legislature cut the allocation to around $2500. Therefore, while Carter believed his committee still had about $5000, it actually had far less than that.

Carter said Dunlap should have informed him of the budget cut, but Dunlap says that was not his responsibility. Program Board Chair Cindy Cole, meanwhile, says that she "disagrees with the way the whole thing happened."

Cole said that although there had been some concern about Carter's lack of participation on the Program Board, she had recently discussed the situation with Carter and he had agreed to become more active with the board.

"I don't think the (SGA) president should have the power to hire or fire that way," Cole said, adding that Dunlap should have consulted with her before making his decision. She said Dunlap had "stepped into the middle of a situation" without all the background.

But Cole also said that Carter seemed "not to have a real understanding of what Program Board is all about."

She also objected to the planning of the Jennings concert without prior consultation with the Program Board. Cole also said it is Carter's responsibility to keep up with the concert budget.

Dunlap reportedly told Carter that it is SGA policy that all program committee chairs work together on the Program Board. Dunlap said that Carter was unwilling to work within that policy.

But Carter says that the Program Board had never had a set policy for its operations and criticized the board for not having job descriptions written for its officers.

"I feel like my job is to put on the (concerts) and do the best job I can," Carter stated, adding that Dunlap's reason for dismissing him "wasn't (based on) performance, it was principle."

Carter was not sure this weekend whether he would appeal his dismissal to the Student Court or not. He indicated that it may be difficult to find constitutional grounds supporting his position.

Dunlap and Cole both agreed that there were no grounds for a court fight.

Cole labelled the situation a "good example of why things should be changed" with regard to program funding. She said the Program Board should be taken out of the control of SGA.

Tuition increase proposal defeated by subcommittee of legislature

(From the Raleigh News and Observer)

A proposal to increase tuition at the 16 UNC campuses has been defeated by a subcommittee of the joint House-Senate appropriations committee on education in the N.C. General Assembly.

University and student leaders had lobbied against the proposal, which called for a 10 percent increase in tuition for in-state students next fall. For out-of-state students, tuition would have increased 5 percent next fall and 5 percent the following year.

The out-of-state hike had been reduced by the subcommittee, which originally proposed a 24 percent increase.

Under the plan, an in-state student would have seen a tuition increase ranging from $27 to $36 a year at the various campuses. An out-of-state student would have paid an increase of $87 to $109.

Subcommittee Chairman Carolyn Mathis, D-Mecklenburg, said the action probably killed a tuition increase for the current session of the legislature, but Sen. Robert M. Davis, D-Rowan, who supports the increase, said he would take the proposal to the full appropriations committees later this year.

"It's very apparent that the university officials have done a darn good job lobbying this, but it's not dead," Davis said.

The subcommittee also called for a $1 million reduction over two years in the current $3 million tuition-remission program for talented students.

UNC President William C. Friday, accompanied by several students from various campuses, urged the committee not to approve the subcommittee's recommendation. He opposed the tuition increases and the plan to reduce the tuition-remission program's budget.

"The tuition increase will affect those least able to pay," Friday said. "The out-of-state rates now in North Carolina are the seventh highest in the nation and the highest in the Southeast."

Friday said the increase would have made it difficult for the university to meet the requirements of the U.S. Office of Civil Rights in eliminating segregation from the system.

"This would make it more difficult because of additional financial burden it would impose on students," he said.

Friday said cutting the tuition-remission program would severely handicap university research. The money in the program is used to pay graduate assistants who also teach in the research programs at some campuses. It is also used by athletic departments on the UNC campuses.

"We have a lot of other fees we must contend with, too," said Randy Sides, a UNC-Greensboro student who has representing the North Carolina Student Legislature. "They rise as well. Any increase of 10 percent would translate into 15 percent or maybe as high as 20 percent when it gets to the students' level."

"I feel strongly that higher education is on the line here," said Rep. Patricia Hunt, D-Orange. She said she could not support a tuition increase for state supported schools while increasing the state grants to private colleges.

Sen. Mathis said the Legislature must decide whether it would move toward the idea of doing away with tuition or whether students should pay the actual costs of their education.

She said that in the 1973-74 school year, in-state students were paying about 13 percent of the actual cost of their education at state-supported schools, while in the 1978-79 school year, it dropped to 10 percent.

"The increase would take it up to the student paying about 11.5 percent of the actual costs," she said.

Mathis said that the rise in tuition would have increased state revenues available for other purposes by $9 million over the next two years.

SGA officials express opposition to fee allocation proposal

by Bobby Parker
Editor

SGA officials expressed strong opposition to an administration proposal to place student fee funds under a separate allocation board and strip the Student Legislature of its allocation power at the Legislature's meeting March 1.

The Legislature appointed a committee, headed by Representative Michael Sanders, to investigate the proposal and devise an alternative plan.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap said that he was concerned that the proposal, drawn up by Student Activities Director Linda Moore and Assistant Director Jon Greene, had reached the Chancellor's office without consultation with SGA officials or other student leaders.

Dunlap said the situation represents a lack of communication between students and the administration.

"It is my personal opinion that (the plan) stinks," Dunlap said. He added that there is "no evidence in the proposal that the (new) system would be better."

Director of Student Activities Moore told the Legislature that the idea of a fee allocation board had been discussed by officials for some time. She said the instigation of a central program board in SGA had "probably brought this to a head" this year.

Moore said that the allocation currently in use at UNCW "is just non-existent at other schools."

Dunlap, however, said that "Just because you have a policy at one school doesn't mean you have to have it at another."

Moore emphasized that the new board would not take the place of the legislature.

Responding to criticism that the proposal does not set down specific guidelines for the board, Moore said the plan is a "skeleton proposal."

"It was meant to be that way," she added. "This was not what was going to be instituted."

Attorney General Glen Downs questioned what office would administer the funds since the SGA office would be removed from the bookkeeping.

SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan pointed out that the SGA office has a good reputation on campus for accurate bookkeeping.

Other students present called for a more detailed description of the proposal.

"We need to know why this change is being made," former SGA president Karin Whaley said. She added that allocating funds "is one of the things that (SGA) has done well."

An administration proposal made public last week called for the establishment of a student fee allocation board to disperse that portion of student fees now handled by SGA to student organizations and activities.

The plan recommends a six-member panel with three students elected by the student body, a faculty representative appointed by the Faculty Senate, an administration representative appointed by the Chancellor, and a chair who would be one of the three vice-chancellors on an alternating basis.

In an interview Monday, SGA President Dunlap said he expects that the final plan will result in a division of the SGA's budget, giving Program Board and Media and Publications Board authority to allocate money to organizations under their jurisdictions.

New service assists students in need of financial aid

A new service designed to assist students in need of financial aid to continue school or plan for graduate school has been announced by the Scholarship Bank.

According to Steve Danz, program director, the new service will give each student a print-out of the scholarships, loans, grants and work-study sources available to him or her in that student's specific field.

Students apply by writing for and filling out a questionnaire which is then used as the key to the data bank. The questionnaire is like a mini-profile of each student, seeking information on year in school, major, occupational objectives, sex, religion, parent's union, employer and military service and student's outstanding abilities, such as leadership experience or sports. The service is so thorough, according to the director, that in the field of girls' sports scholarships alone there are over 2000 entries.

Write to Scholarship Bank, 10100 Santa Monica #750, L.A. 90067 for an application. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope and the required fee.

Baseball team starts season

The UNCW baseball team started off the 1979 season with two wins and two losses. The Seahawks have beaten UNCC 5-3 and Salisbury State (Md.) 17-5. They opened the season with a rough 20-8 loss to the South Carolina Gamecocks and a heart-breaking 4-2 loss at North Carolina State. The Seahawks have scored 32 runs in four games and have been led by John Tailent, Herbie Dawkins, and Larry Livingston who have batted out about twenty hits among them. Several games last week were postponed because of rain and no date has been set to play them. Yale, Wake Forest, and Western Carolina are among the teams coming to town to play the Seahawks this week.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

As I was preparing to write this column last week, I was ready to laud the achievements of Carolina-area basketball and complain about how the NCAA had goofed in placing both ACC representatives in the same regional.

Well, needless to say all this lauding and complaining was before Sunday. Somebody, and I tend to lean toward Duke and Carolina, messed up the entire situation by losing. But I'm not here to make excuses, I'm here to say sporting things about the two teams and those that beat them. Duke was my pick to win the National Championship and I am disheartened and poorer because they lost. Carolina was choice number 2. I seriously believed that one of those two teams would win it all. So much for devout regionalism. St. John's and Pennsylvania both played outstanding games and deserved to go on. However, take nothing away from any North Carolina school, especially those two. Of the twenty-eight North Carolina schools competing at the NCAA Division I, Division II, or NAIA levels, eighteen had winning records. Impressed? How about the fact that seven of those teams went to one kind of playoff or another? Surely this fact must speak well of the North Carolina basketball traditions.

Now for my own fearless 1979 predictions of the teams remaining. (Remember my previous track record) My pick for the four finalists: West: UCLA, Mid West: Indiana St., Midwest: Notre Dame, East: Penn. My pick for NCAA champion: Indiana State should prove it was no fluke in being ranked number one this year.

Remember University of South Alabama? Remember that UNCW beat them 65-63 earlier this year and then they went undefeated in their conference and received an invitation to the NCAA's.

Swim team ends season with men and women in post-season competition

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW swim team officially ended its season this weekend, but not until after both the men's and women's teams had placed swimmers in post season competition. In only its second season of competition, UNCW had swimmers in both the Eastern Seaboard Championships (men) in Harvard and the NAIA Championships (women) in Reno, Nevada.

The women's team, just back from Reno, did not place anyone in the finals. However, the 400 yd. freestyle relay team of Sproles, Young, Squires, and Cushman made it to the first alternate spot, missing the finals by .08 of a second. Around 100 teams were in the field.

The men's team did well at the Eastern Seaboard Championships at Harvard, placing fifteenth in a 30 team field. Only 21 teams scored in the event. During the course of the Championships, the UNCW swimmers broke most of the school records previously set in the UNCW Invitational. UNCW scored well in the relay events, which counted double the points of an individual event. The 400 yd. medley relay team (Skipper Thompson, Mike Malone, Peter Gratale, and Sam O'Leary) came in at 3:37.00, the 400 yd. freestyle relay team (Peter Gratale, Roddy Michalove, Jim Baker, and Sam O'Leary) came in at 3:12.10, and the 800 yd. freestyle relay team (Jim Board, Scott Sasser, Roddy Michalove, and Sam O'Leary) came in at 7:11.00. Robert Quigley, just missed the finals in the 200 yd. backstroke with a time of 2:01.12.

The UNCW swim program received another boost this past week when they were voted into the Eastern Intercollegiate Swimming and Diving Championships to be held during the first weekend in March. UNCW will compete in this event beginning next year at West Virginia, along with 16 other independent schools including the likes of Pittsburgh, Duquesne, Niagara, Villanova, and West Virginia. UNCW will be pulling out of the Eastern Seaboard, according to Coach Dave Allen, because UNCW is not affiliated with the ECAC. (Most of the Seaboard field in ECAC.)

"This will give us a real good championship at the end of the season and a big boost because many other schools have tried to get in, but haven't made it," Coach Allen commented.

Now that this season is over, all efforts are geared toward next season. Recruiting will become top priority and in another week the spring program, with the Hawk swimmers involved in weight training and light swimming, will begin.

"I'm very pleased--it was a very satisfying year. We met most of our goals for this year and hope to upgrade our goals for next year," a happy Coach Allen commented.

Men's tennis ends road trip 4-5

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW men's tennis team ended their road trip here Monday, struggling with a 4-5 mark, after facing stiff competition. The Seahawks seek a winning mark this weekend as they face Amherst College here in a two-day doubleheader.

The Hawks won their season opener, 9-0, over Methodist College in Fayetteville. Then the Hawks returned here for the home opener, losing to powerful Salisbury State, 8-1. Bouncing back, UNCW collected three road wins in three days, defeating South Carolina

State, Baptist College, and Augusta College, all by 9-0 margins. Three more consecutive-day matches saw the Hawks lose their next three to very strong opposition. First, the team dropped a 6-0, rain-delayed match to Georgia Southern, then lost to Armstrong State, 6-3, and finally dropped a 9-0 decision to a powerful Citadel squad. This past Monday, the Hawks lost their fifth match to the University of Richmond by a 9-0 score.

Coach Larry Honeycutt was pretty much pleased with his team's effort. He pointed out that the team faced some of its toughest opposition early (Salisbury State, Georgia Southern, Armstrong State, The Citadel, and Richmond) and that despite the 4-5 overall mark, the team actually produced a 4-3 record on the road. UNCW will entertain Amherst College for two consecutive matches here on Sunday and Monday. The Sunday match begins at 2 p.m. and the Monday match begins at 2:30 p.m. Both matches will be played at the campus courts.

Basketball team closes on good note

The 1978-79 basketball season ended on a definite upswing for the UNCW Seahawks last week, as Coach Mel Gibson's club captured its third win in a row on the road, its fourth straight overall, and consequently, matched last year's school-record 19 wins for a single season.

A 74-65 come-from-behind victory over a fine East Tennessee State squad topped off a highly successful roadtrip that concluded the 78-79 campaign—a trip that also was UNCW defeat UNC-Asheville, 90-87, and Arkansas-Little Rock, 82-75.

"The year could not have ended any better," Gibson says. "All the credit in the world has to go to these young men who worked so hard all season long. They played their best basketball of the year the past two weeks."

"I'm especially proud of our seniors—Dave Wolff, Ralph Peterson, Delaney Jones and Art Paschal. They gave us outstanding leadership throughout the year, which will be extremely hard to replace."

Wolff, in particular, was superb down the stretch. The 6'5" forward from Indianapolis, Ind., who for the second straight year is a nominee for Academic All-American honors, led the Seahawks in scoring and rebounding in all four of his final games at UNCW.

He totaled 87 points (21.8 ppg) and 49 rebounds (12.3 per game) in the season's final four victories.

Bakke decision creates difficult times for administrators

DETROIT, MI (CPS)--All professional graduate schools have had a difficult time trying to modify their admissions procedures in light of the U.S. Supreme Court's June ruling in the Bakke reverse discrimination case. They have had to speculate just what the court meant in allowing Allan Bakke into the University of California-Davis medical school. Then, after drawing up guidelines that no one really knew complied with the Bakke ruling, there were the inevitable controversies stimulated by people who protested the new procedures were unfair to either blacks or whites.

Wayne State University's Law School was no exception. It prepared new admissions guidelines last summer, circulated them among faculty members, and listened to various protests from not only the faculty, but from community groups. The ensuing debate was long, and in November the faculty approved a new set of guidelines that was substantially different from the ones the administration had proposed. Then those guidelines were challenged by a group of current and former Wayne State law students.

The faculty proposal eliminated the school's practice of, in associate dean Arthur Lombard's words, admitting students "predominantly on the numbers." Applicants were admitted according to their grades and their Law School Aptitude Test (LSAT) scores. There was a separate pool of applicants considered for "special circumstances."

Such applicants could not, under the old procedure, comprise more than 10 percent of each class. While the classes were anywhere from 12 to 14 percent minority, Lombard says they were chosen on an "ad hoc basis" and only "about five percent" of the students were admitted under "special circumstances. We were arguably out of compliance with Baake."

Under Wayne State's new guidelines, admissions are administered "as a single process." Seventy-five percent of the applicants are still primarily chosen by the numbers, but 25 percent of each class is chosen from a "discretionary pool" of applicants. Grades and LSAT scores are still weighed while sifting through applicants in the discretionary pool, but are "tempered by a number of additional factors," like "membership in a preferred minority group," age, and early educations in segregated school systems.

The faculty first approved the guidelines in November, but was promptly sued by the law student group. It charged that the meeting at which the faculty vote had been taken violated the state open meetings law. Lombard says that there were "four or five student representatives" at the meeting, but ceded that, under the law, it had not been "open." Wayne County Circuit Judge William L. Cahalan thought so, too, and enjoined the school from implementing the new policy the meeting had approved.

The student group readily confessed that the suit had been less an idle harassment than a tactic to delay implementation of the new policy until a "better" one could be written. The group wanted a higher limit on the number of people admitted from the discretionary pool of applicants.

But the school wouldn't be denied. "Rather than wait" for the case to go to trial, Lombard says, "we decided to comply with the open meetings law." Wayne State law faculty members met again last week, this time with strict attention to Michigan's sunshine law. They approved the procedures a second time, and the law school administration immediately mailed out 1300 letters of acceptance, awarded under the new policy, that had been held up by the injunction.

Enrollment in colleges nationwide decreases for 1978-79

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS)--Enrollment at colleges and universities across the country for the 1978-79 school year is down, according to the latest estimates from Marie Eldridge of the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES). Enrollment estimates get more accurate as the school year progresses, and the most recent NCES assessment supports an October report from the University of Cincinnati, which said enrollment this year "will neither increase nor decrease by any significant amount."

NCES counted 11,346,000 students on campus in September 1977. Most of the decrease was attributable to the relative scarcity of the full-time male student, who now accounts for less than a third of the national college population.

There are 2.5 million full-time female students enrolled in colleges this year, a two percent increase over 1977-78. A University of Cincinnati report last spring showed that men and women will be attending colleges in almost equal numbers for the first time in history sometime in the early 1980's.

The increasing number of women on campus, though, has not helped compensate for the dramatic drop in the number of high school seniors of both genders. The U.S. Bureau of the Census foresees a 20 percent decline in the number of 18-year-old potential college students over the next decade.

The one category of higher education that is enjoying an enrollment increase is the two-year college. But even in two-year schools, says Eldridge, "the increase is negligible."

As a result, many schools are now revising their enrollment goals. At Ohio University in Athens, for example, enrollment increased on percent this year, but the goal, according to OU admissions director Dr. James Walter, is no longer expansion. Walters told the Athens "A" News the new goal was "stabilization." His words have been echoed by admissions directors even at schools which have had enrollment increases this year, like Tufts, the University of Texas-Austin, and the nine campuses of the University of California.

But total enrollment in all California colleges has declined by about 12 percent since the beginning of the decade. New York-wide enrollment is down about three percent, as is enrollment in other states like West Virginia, Colorado and Georgia.

Twenty in honor society

Twenty students at UNCW have been tapped for membership in Phi Eta Sigma, a national collegiate scholastic honor society for freshmen.

Founded at the University of Illinois in 1923, the society has some 180 chapters and 200,000 members throughout the United States. Its goal is to encourage and reward high scholastic attainment among freshmen in institutions of higher learning.

To qualify for membership students must attain at least a 3.5 GPA during their first curricular period or their first year of college.

Members of the recently founded UNCW chapter are Paul Saunders Ashworth, Lisa Earline Bennett, Rita Marie Broome, David Wayne Butler, Jack Gaylor Carter, Sarah Renee Cox, Michael Eugene Downing, Margaret Elizabeth Gandy, and Lori Ann Gaskins.

Other members are Judy Ruth Gray, Cindi Blair Hamilton, Lynn Victoria Jaeger, Katie Frances Spivey, David Alan Strong, Robin Lee Weaver, William Woodrow Vick, Beverly Louise Williams, James Bradley Williams, Linda Blanche Williams and Deborah Bodolus Zeleznick.

Organization works to help animals near extinction

H.A.L.T., an acronym for Harmony with All Living Things, is a newly formed organization that held its first meeting Feb. 14 at Wrightsville Beach.

The original goal H.A.L.T. set was to help end the slaughter of the whale. In subsequent meetings it was decided to broaden the scope of the organization into working with all living things that might need help from extinction.

A multi-media presentation dealing with whales and people will be presented by Rob Morpew in the Library Auditorium Mar. 20 at 8 p.m. Morpew is an artist with the N.C. Marine Resources Department in Bogues Banks.

At that time, further information concerning H.A.L.T. will be available, as well as positive suggestions as to how individuals can help end the slaughter of the whales.

Anyone interested in joining H.A.L.T. can call either of the co-chairpersons at 256-4634 or 675-9168.

Committee sponsors

Spring Fever Celebration

The UNCW Coffeehouse Committee is sponsoring a Spring Fever Celebration with live music in the Goodwood Tavern Friday, at 8 p.m.

Performing are Campbell, Dickson, and Egolf who have appeared locally at the Pony Express, Bri-a-Brak, and Maswells. With ten years together, they perform songs by the Eagles; Poco; America; Crosby, Stills, and Nash; and many others.

The group consists of Jeff Campbell on lead and rhythm guitar, Marc Dickson on bass, and Butch Egolf on 12-string rhythm guitar.

The Spring Fever Celebration is free to students with a valid ID and $1 for non-students. Bring your own spring tonic (beer or wine).

Work study applications due by April 15

by Elizabeth Shoaf
Features Editor

A work study program is a federally funded plan that provides part-time employment for students who have a financial need and must earn apart of their living and educational expenses.

Approximately 80 to 100 jobs are available in every area of the campus. These include maintenance, labs, library, dormitory, basket rooms, and office work.

The number of hours a student is eligible to work depends on his or her own financial needs. Due to limited funds, 20 hours per week is the limit. Students are paid at the rate of the federal minimum wage level.

Work study jobs are guaranteed to an individual for only one school year. A job is renewed each year on the basis of need.

Joseph Capel, director of Student Financial Aid, states that the program has been well received over the past few years. Although he says funding is not large enough at the present, Capell hopes it will increase in the near future.

The money a student earns through the program need not be used for tuition only. However, the money is expected to be used for school and living expenses.

The problem of finding a job in Wilmington for college students has helped work study become increasingly popular

The Cars: Best new group of 1978

The Circus Weekly Readers awarded the "Best New Group of 1978" to the Boston-based band, The Cars. After listening to their debut album, The Cars, I agree with the readers. Although Cars music is what I'd call punk, with the British influence, electric horseplay, and tunes featured on the album, you can't help but get off on their music, even if you don't like punk rock.

Since The Cars was released, two singles have been hits. The hits include "Just What I Needed" and "My Best Friend's Girl." "Just What I Needed" is my favorite cut because of the beat and electronic sound of the cut. Cars is also going to release "Let the Good Times Roll" as their next single. This song along with "All Mixed Up" really express the British influence over the group whose members include: Ric Ocasek (guitar, vocals), Ben Orr (base guitar, concept, a Campbell soup can thing, with Cars being a real all-American symbol," says the vocals). Elliot Easton (guitars), Greg Hawkes (keyboard) and David Robinson (drums).

Cars music seems to grab you but the lyrics, like most punk tunes, don't really have a meaning that is cut and dry; many meanings can be read into the music. With a name like Cars, I tried to find the reason for the band selecting their name. This information I found about Cars' name and is quoted from Circus Weekly by Ric Ocasek. "It was a pop-art

Cars' Ric Ocasek of the band's name, which he chose after much conceptual deliberation.

"We all had that British rock thing inside of us, liking groups that weren't too popular. But a name like The Cars seemed like a good offset to the concept itself."

Cars is now making plans for their second album which I'm sure will continue to impress people as did their first album, The Cars.

JUDY PARRY

Local artist featured in one-man show

Local artist Jack Morgan will be featured in a one-man exhibition through the month of March at First Union Bank Building on Front Street in downtown Wilmington.

The exhibit will feature Morgan's original works including paintings in acrylic and watercolor and pen and ink drawings.

Morgan first began painting as a high school student in Winston-Salem. He studied with well-known local artist Irvin Riley and became a member of the Associated Artists of Winston-Salem in 1974. His acrylic painting "Final Frontier" was accepted in the association's juried annual theme show, and his work has since been exhibited in several shows throughout the state.

As a resident of Wilmington, Morgan has studied with Mary Ellen Golden and has exhibited works in the annual student exhibition at St. John's Art Gallery in 1978.

A limited edition print of "Beekeeper's Shack" will be available to those attending the exhibition. Also, those signing the guest register will be eligible to win a set of four limited edition prints, "Low Country Collection," to be issued this spring. Five sets will be given away.

Casino Nite held March 24

Casino Nite '79 will be here Saturday, March 24 at 8 p.m. in the Pub. Casino Nite is a night of gambling featuring many types of games.

The games which will take place include craps, blackjack, the roulette wheel and poker.

Fake money will be distributed days before the event for students to use at Casino Nite. There will also be one massive drop of money by a helicopter over campus the day of Casino Nite.

in the past year. Work study not only provides valuable experience but also looks impressive when listed on a job application.

Anyone interested in this program for the coming fall semester should apply before April 15. If interested, contact Betty Phelps, Financial Aid Office, room 110, Alderman Administration Building.

Beer will be provided by the Program Board at a small fee of $2500 a glass (using your fake cash). For nondrinkers, soft drinks will be offered.

Casino Nite '79 has been planned in conjunction with several events scheduled on the weekend of March 23-25 in an attempt to allow the students some relaxation and amusement before the Easter break. After the games close at midnight there will be an auction in which prizes will be given the highest bidder.

National student film competition to present 1979 winners in March

Focus '79, the national college student film competition sponsored by Nissan Motor Corporation, will honor the best of a new generation of filmmakers March 22 with the premieres of Focus '79's five award-winning films at Plitt's Century Plaza Theatres, followed by a gala awards ceremony-reception at the Century Plaza Hotel for both student filmmakers and film study winners.

Approximately one-half of the seats for the Premiere will be reserved for college students (on a first come, first serve basis). By allocating these seats for collegians, Focus '79 will enable students to see the award-winning films of their peers in the select audience, in part comprised of film industry decision makers.

The Focus '79 filmmakers' honors will be presented by a panel of judges consisting of Dyan Cannon, actress/director/writer/producer; Steven Spielberg, director of "Jaws" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind;" Paul Mazursky, director of "An Unmarried Woman;" and "Harry and Tonto;" and Haskell Wexler, Academy Award-winning cinematographer for "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid."

Focus '79 Filmmaking scholarships are being underwritten by Universal Studios and will be presented by studio vice-president Verna Fields.

In the Focus '79 Film Study category, four awards and scholarships will be presented to students based upon either reviews of commercially-released films since 1977; a comprehensive critique of a particular director, screenwriter, film editor, performer or cinematographer; or a comprehensive essay on a particular film genre. Judging the awards in this category will be the following noteworthy film stalwarts: Roger Ebert, film critic of the Chicago Sun-Times; Molly Haskell, author and film critic; Arthur Knight, film historian and film critic; Gene Siskel, film critic of the Chicago Tribune and Bruce Williamson, film editor for Playboy Magazine.

First place winning students in the Filmmaking and Film Study categories will each receive Datsun's new front-wheel drive 310, and other Datsun Vehicles will be awarded to the film department of each of the students' schools.

Playboy Magazine is sponsoring the Film Study awards, including an internship at their editorial offices, which will be presented by Christie Hefner.

Two new awards will also be made at the reception—in the areas of film production and sports films. The Allan Carr Producer's Award will be presented to a student who enters both a film and an essay on his or her experiences in producing the submitted film.

The U.S. Tobacco Student Sports Film Grant will be presented to a student filmmaker submitting the best treatment for a sports film which the students would like to produce during the coming year.

As an added highlight to the evening's festivities, Focus '79 will present the Student Choice Awards for Best Actor, Best Actress, Best Director and Best Film. These awards will be presented for work done in 1978 as the filmmakers of tomorrow salute the filmmakers of today. Voting is currently under way on campuses across the country with students using ballots supplied by their college newspapers.

Members of the Focus '79 Board of Governors scheduled to attend the March 22 event are Allan Carr, Chevy Chase, Verna Fields, Ted Perry, Gene Roddenberry, David Salzman, Andrew Sarris, Paul Schrader, Barbara Zicka Smith and Joan Tewkesbury.

Literature course planned

The Supernatural in Literature (English 292), a new course offered by the Department of English, will be taught during the first summer session of 1979 at 12 noon. The course (three credit hours) is experimental and will cover writers who are concerned with supernatural events and characters.

According to Dr. James Collier, who will teach the course, the supernatural has been an important topic for writers for centuries, although it is often not covered in traditional literature courses.

Ghosts, vampires, the occult, and other aspects of the supernatural have inspired gifted writers to create literature of a high caliber, and yet many major writers in this area are often overlooked altogether.

Some of the best literature of the supernatural was written in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, and the course will focus on these two centuries.

Pianist Seymour Fink

Acclaimed pianist to be presented by Concert Association

The Wilmington Concert Association will present Seymour Fink, acclaimed American pianist, in concert Thursday in Kenan Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Fink, an internationally recognized artist and pedagogue, is the senior piano professor in the department of music at the State University of New York at Binghamton. He is on sabbatical and now living in Wilmington. His debut, at the age of 16, was made with the Baltimore Symphony performing the Tchaikovsky First Piano Concerto. One of the youngest students to be awarded the Artist Diploma from the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, Fink also holds degrees from Yale University and has been the recipient of both Fulbright and Yale University Morse Fellowships.

His numerous solo, chamber and concerto appearances in the United States and Europe included USIA tours in Germany as well as performances in England, France and Switzerland. He has also recorded on the C.R.I. label.

Before settling in Binghamton, Fink serves as a faculty member at Greensboro College, Vassar College, the Yale School of Music, and at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

Fink's program for the concert includes the Haydn Capriccio in C major, Schumann's Fantasia, Op. 17, Beethoven's Sonata in E flat major, Chopin's Nocturne in D flat major and Chopin's Ballade in F minor.

Admission to the concert is free to those holding season memberships in the Wilmington Concert Association and additional tickets will be sold at the door for $3.

'Brinks Job'

Mood for fun, not trouble

Planning a robbery? If you are you might consider a visit to the local theater for some suggestions. One film in particular, "The Brinks Job," provides a memorable variation of this theme. But don't let your plans get sidetracked, however, as steady acting and plenty of laughs set the mood for fun, not trouble.

Peter Falk leads a mismatched gang of small time crooks through a series of bumbles pulling off the classic robbery of the half century.

Although they get tossed in the can for nabbing a safe from a candy factory, Falk and his boys make it look easy as they poke their way past a slow motion security person and into the feebly guarded Brinks operation. The group gets lazy, however, and flush fifty grand down the commode to avoid counting it.

Finally, with money in hand, the team members split and go their own ways. But itchy fingers get two of the crew into trouble, relocating them back behind bars for their parts in a shoplifting fieldday compliments of a local clothing store. The law plays dirty, however, and stacks their sentences to the ceiling, in an attempt to crack the case.

The film gets tense and mutual distrust among gang members and 13 years of prison harassment combine until one of the men breaks down and spills the story. By this time, the case is history, the boys are famous, and they get treated as home town favorites.

The film gets off to a jumpy start but settles down and keeps you in your seat. The casting is well done. Peter Falk lets everyone know he is the best safe man in the business while showing the audience he is one of the finer actors on the screen today and perfect for the part. Warren Oates is sharp as a demolition expert who snaps under prison pressure and distrust of gang co-stars Paul Sorvino and Peter Boyle. Enjoy their performances and take note of the post-World War sets. Keep this film in mind but as for the robbery, remember Ringo Starr's song "You know it don't come easy."

GREGG GLICKSTEIN

Former disco queen evaluates the disco scene

Quick, name one thing that makes you itch. If you said "disco," then move over; you're in good company. Now honestly, I think the American public managed to survive these many years before the advent of John Travolta and his flattedooters followers. (Personally, when I saw "Saturday Night Fever," I spent half my time blushing and the other half yawning.)

Before I'm trampled by a bunch of enraged dancers in spike heels, let me explain. Dancing is fun (especially the kind where you get to snuggle) but the sight of 50 couples reverberating (pun intended!) shuffling beneath colored lights just doesn't turn me on. And Heaven help me, until a few weeks ago I thought the shag was an outdated haircut. Now I know it's this frenzied little dance where two partners fling each other around and take turns trying to dislocate each other's shoulders.

Whatever happened to the good old days? (And no, I'm not talking about Lawrence Welk, although he does have a very sexy accent.) I mean when disco was a nice diversion from Neil Young but not, gee-whizz, an obsession. When only those girls who did you-know-what for a living wore spike heels and Brillo pad hardos. When guys were so endearingly clumsy on the dance floor, you just wanted to get out of there with all your tootsies intact. (These days, your tootsies aren't all you have to worry about while you're dancing!)

It's not as if I knock without knowledge, either, because, people, I have Been There. Yes, disguised as your typical empty-headed disco queen, I braved the ranks of the elite and endured a night of ear-drum agony. I am now sporting bruised shoulders as a result of jostling total strangers as I frantically Freaked all over the floor. My toes are chronically cramped from tottering around on needle-tipped heels (and my arches aren't to happy, either). And all that glitter I sprinkled seductively on my hair is still there, only now it's a lovely shade of tarnished green.

A word to the wary: disco is spelled L-O-U-D. But don't despair: lip reading can be fun! And while you're cheerfully going deaf, take a look at those fabulous strobe lights. Kinda like 40 Instamatic flashbulbs going off under your eyelids, huh? Two minutes after I walked in my corneas went on strike.

All in all, my night in the Dancehouse Dungeon wasn't a total waste. I brushed up on a couple of new dances (Le Freak and Le Fractured Toe) and I formed some of the opinions you have just been reading. And, girls, I also learned that when gyrating at approximately 98 revolutions per minute, sweating becomes a fact of life. So when the perfume starts giving out those familiar last-chance fumes, it's time to dig out the old car keys.

The best part of the whole evening, though, came on the way home when I stopped at a friend's house to borrow the latest Neil Young LP. Disco it ain't, but good music it is!

All students are urged to attend this forum to meet their candidates.

Beer and soft drinks will be served.

Essay contest entries accepted

by Cheri Simmons
Seahawk Contributor

Entries are now being sought for the second annual Shannon Morton Essay Contest. The contest was named in honor of the first chairman of the UNCW English Department and member of the original Wilmington College faculty of 1947. The contest, held annually, was established to express the gratitude for Miss Morton's help and understanding of both students and faculty.

The topic for this year's contest is "Coping With Change." The essay is a reflective essay in which students are able to express their own ideas on the chosen topic gained through personal experience.

The rules for this year's contest are the same as last year. All UNCW students who are enrolled in at least one course are eligible to enter. The essays must be 1000 words or more and should be submitted to the English Department by Thursday, April 12.

A $50 award will be given as first prize, $30 for second prize, and $20 for third prize.

As last year, the contest is being sponsored by Dr. and Mrs. Gerald S. Rossetol and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas C. McCall, close friends of Shannon Morton. Rossetol and McCall are members of the faculty of the UNCW English Department. The essay coordinator is Dr. James Collier, also of the UNCW English Department.

Positions with media and publications soon to open

The Media and Publications Board has announced that applications will soon be accepted for editorial and managerial positions with student media and publications. New personnel will be appointed in the spring to take office at the end of the spring semester.

The board will appoint editors of the Seahawk, Fledgling (yearbook) and Atlantis (literary magazine) as well as managers of WLOZ radio and the videotape committee.

Students interested in these positions should contact the Student Activities Office in the Pub or the current editor, manager or faculty adviser of each group. These persons are:

— Seahawk: Bobby Parker, editor, John Justus, adviser.
— Fledgling: Robbie Register, editor, Linda Moore, acting adviser.

— Atlantis: Richard Long, editor, James Collier and Joanne Corbett, advisers.

— WLOZ: Karen King, manager, Irvin Clator, adviser.

— Videotape: Dale Case, adviser.

For any information regarding job descriptions, salary or other aspects of each job, students may also contact the above officials.

In addition to editors or managers, several other positions on the staffs of campus media and publications will also be open for application to students. Persons in these positions will be appointed by the new editor or manager after that person is chosen. Many of these positions are allotted a tuition scholarship, which must be approved by the Media Board for any individual appointee.

These positions include, but may not be limited to:

— Fledgling: associate editor, head photographer, business manager, student life editor, sports editor, classes editor, features editor, who's who editor, faculty editor.

— Atlantis: associate editor, prose editor, poetry editor and art editor.

— WLOZ: program director, news director, music director, business manager, assistant program director, and assistant news director.

— Videotape: assistant manager.

In addition to student staff members, the Media Board is also searching for a faculty adviser for the Fledgling. Any interested faculty member should contact Robbie Register, editor, or Linda Moore.

Deadline for short story contest

The deadline for submitting short stories to the Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest has been extended to March 15.

All UNCW students are eligible to enter the contest. Prizes include $100 first place, $50 second place, and $30 third place.

Stories should be submitted to the Department of English in the new classroom building.

All entries should be in the English Department by 5 p.m.

on March 15.

The awards will be presented on Thursday, March 22, at 11:30 a.m. in the SRO Theatre in Kenan Hall. The awards presentation will include a reading of the winning story by Doug Swink of the Department of Creative Arts.

All students, faculty and staff are invited to attend the awards ceremony. Any student enrolled in one or more courses is eligible to enter the contest.

Summer school in sunlight?

New courses given consideration by curriculum committee

by Doty Shoffner
Seahawk Contributor

Interested in spending summer school in the sunlight, rather than under the glow of the fluorescent light in a muggy classroom? A new course being considered by the Curriculum Committee may permit just such an academic experience.

The new Physical Education course (Program of Outdoor Pursuits) will, if approved, incorporate lectures with outside experiences culminating in an eight-day field trip between summer sessions. This is just one of 21 new courses being considered this semester by the committee.

"This kind of course is a little different and one which undergoes more study than a course which fits the typical academic structure," explained Dr. Larry Gerstenhaber, committee chair. "It is much more difficult to evaluate an experimental course than a traditional one, but that does not make it less important."

The Curriculum Committee is one of the most important committees on the campus because it oversees the quality, direction and development of the basic educational identity of the campus. According to Gerstenhaber, the committee serves two basic functions: it insures that all courses fit into the overall goals of the university and that all departments are kept well informed on curriculum changes campus-wide.

The committee consists of a representative elected from each department, the vice-chancellor for academic affairs, director of admissions, academic dean (or his representative) and three students appointed by the SGA president. The chair is elected by the committee.

Changes in the curriculum go through a lengthy but thorough process before a decision is reached. The proposal must be in writing (a form guideline is provided), endorsed by the sponsoring department and signed by the chair of that department.

Fully documented and justified, the proposal (30 copies) is then sent to the Curriculum Committee where it is assigned to a relevant subcommittee. Here it is considered and finally a preliminary report is presented to the full committee for action.

Usually it takes about a year from the conception of a new course until it is printed in the catalogue. There is, however, a method available for faster action. The "trial" or "experimental" course can be conceived one semester and into the schedule the next.

"Soon the committee will be looking at this procedure, hoping to allow even more flexibility," Gerstenhaber continued.

"We also want to institute a new policy for internships and practica. Our goal is to streamline the procedures of the committee and make it function more smoothly."

While the process may appear slow and ideas of "streamlining" reflect a need for speed, Gerstenhaber emphasizes that he seeks efficiency, not expediency, and fully believes that courses need time and thorough study before approval.

The Curriculum Committee is an active committee and meets every week. Evaluation and planning are the tools used to insure that the university curriculum remains high in quality, diversified and reflects the current needs of the student.

Ahh, the care package from home.

Now comes Miller time.

Four candidates to vie for SGA president in elections

Four candidates will compete for SGA president and two for vice-president as students go to the polls for elections Thursday and Friday.

Candidates for president are Francis DeLuca, Glen Downs, Jon Faili, and Sheila McLamb. For vice-president, candidates are Michael Sanders and John Wiley.

In addition students will elect a chief justice, attorney general and members of the Student Legislature.

DeLuca, who currently serves as SGA vice-president, is a rising senior and a political science major from Jacksonville. He served in the Student Legislature his freshman and sophomore years and has been a member of the legislative Investigating Committee and include the three-way races for both sophomore class president and vice-president.

John Owens, Cathy Robinson and Jason Tyson will compete for sophomore president. All currently serve in the Legislature.

Daniel Antonelli, Darren McGuire and Charles Parsons make up the field of candidates for sophomore vice-president.

Eight at-large representatives will be elected to the Legislature from a list of ten candidates. They are: Henry Arthur, Robert Black, Scott Bourton, Lisa Cook, Pete Divoky, Bettie Fennel, Daniel Goforth, Donna McMillen, Karin Wansley, and Ken Watson.

In other uncontested races for legislative seats:

Frank Colvin will run for senior class president and Scott Bragg for class vice-president. No candidates have filed for two senior class senate positions.

Larry Hulet is a candidate for junior class president and Patrick Hardison, for one junior senate seat. No one filed for class vice-president or the remaining senate seat.

For sophomore class senate, Cynthia Dwiggins and Michael Stroud are the only candidates for two seats.

Voting polls will be located from 9 a.m. to 12 noon in the cafeteria and from 1-5 p.m. in the Pub. A validated student I.D. is required of all voters.

Downs is presently SGA attorney general. He served in the Legislature his freshman and sophomore years and was a member of the Finance Committee last semester. Downs is a rising senior majoring in economics from Greensboro.

A student legislator last semester, Faili is serving as an intern with the N.C. General Assembly this spring. He was also a member of the Finance Committee last semester. Faili is a political science major, rising senior and from Wilmington.

McLamb served as a student legislator for two years at the University of Maryland where she also was a member of the finance committee. She was involved with the student legal service agency and served on various committees. McLamb is a business administration major and a rising senior from Shallotte.

Doug Brown is running unopposed for chief justice of the Student Court, as is Peter Johnston for SGA attorney general.

Browne is currently a justice on the Student Court. He is a political science major and a rising senior.

Johnston is a communications major and a rising junior.

Concert Committee chair will appeal dismissal to Student Court this week

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Former Concert Committee chair David Carter said Monday he will file an appeal in the Student Court to reverse his firing by SGA President Wayne Dunlap earlier this month.

Carter said his appeal would be based on his belief that Dunlap's decision violated the provisions of "due process" in the U.S. Constitution. He feels that Dunlap's decision was made in haste and that the president should have consulted with Program Board chair Cindy Cole before the dismissal.

The appeal will also be based on Carter's assertion that Dunlap's power to fire a committee chair is an implied power not specified in the SGA constitution. The president is given power of appointment but power of dismissal is not mentioned specifically in the constitution.

Dunlap, however, feels there (See Concert, page 9)

Glen Downs would bring experience, leadership as SGA president

In the race for SGA president, we endorse Glen Downs as the candidate who would bring experience, leadership and initiative to the job that will be needed during a time of reorganization for student government at UNCW.

Whatever the outcome of the current proposal to change funding allocations for student organizations and activities, there is sure to be significant changes in both the structure and operations of SGA next year. With the burden of tedious funding taken out of its realm of responsibility, SGA will need to address the issues and problems which concern all students.

To lead SGA through these changes, there is a need for a strong person in the office of the presidency who has the ability to work well with people at all levels—students, faculty and administration. We believe Glen Downs has those capabilities.

The experience that Downs would bring to the presidency is an impressive list compiled in just three years—class president his freshman year, class secretary his sophomore year, and the first elected attorney general his junior year. Those who have watched the Student Legislature during those years remember Downs as a leader in that body. In addition to these offices, he was also a member of the SGA Finance Committee last semester.

Downs is precisely on target with his strong advocacy of a three-way division of SGA funds among Program Board, Media and Publications Board, and SGA. He sees this as the alternative to the current administration proposal to put these funds under a central fee board. This division of funds would give programming committees and media and publications officials the necessary freedom to govern their own independent concerns without political interference from SGA. It would also free the Student Legislature to deal with vital concerns of UNCW students, working toward practical solutions to unsolved problems.

John Wiley has experience, understanding for vice-presidential job

In the contest for SGA vice-president, we recommend that students elect John Wiley on the basis of his experience in UNCW student government and his understanding of the workings of the Student Legislature.

The most important duty of the SGA vice-president is serving as speaker of the Student Legislature. The vice-president has the sometimes inglorious responsibility of making sure legislative meetings run smoothly. This position requires a good deal of experience and practical understanding of the particulars of UNCW's SGA in order to be handled effectively.

Wiley's perspective on the office of vice-president is a sound approach. He believes that there must be adequate adherence to parliamentary procedure to insure consistency in the operations of the Legislature, but he also realizes that strict adherence and procedural nit-picking is not a practical method of running our Student Legislature. Wiley would eliminate the practice of "suspending the rules" during legislative meetings to maintain procedural balance, but he would also seek a more-or-less informal working atmosphere in which student legislators feel comfortable.

As a member of the Student Legislature during the last three years, Wiley has been in SGA long enough to know its good and bad points from top to bottom. His experience would give him the background to work on solutions for the problems which plague SGA. Having been a candidate for SGA vice-president last year, Wiley also shows a real interest in filling this position.

Wiley is in agreement with fee allocation alternatives which leave the control of student fee money in the hands of students. He recognizes the need for autonomy of the Media and Publications Board and separation of the Program Board from SGA to allow student government the time to deal with issues other than funding.

Wiley believes that the Legislature can expand the arena of its concern into areas such as academics to go beyond what SGA is now doing to tackle some of the real problems faced by students.

The SGA vice-president needs to be a strong person capable of enforcing legislative policies and directing the legislative branch of student government. We feel that John Wiley is capable of serving in this position to the best benefit of UNCW students.

THIS NEWSPAPER'S OPINION

Downs also proposes an overhaul of the student court system, recognizing that the existing court is not providing a real service or benefit to students. He would establish a new court composed of student, faculty and administration representatives that would be given jurisdiction over many on-campus violations.

The needs of minority students have also been addressed by Downs in his proposal to reinstate an SGA-sponsored committee to deal with minority affairs. He realizes that the committee which was abolished this year was not in good working order, but he believes that there are problems of particular concern to minority students that should be acknowledged by SGA.

Downs would work effectively with the administration because he has the ability to take a firm stand with an appropriate amount of diplomacy. As a member of the Board of Trustees, he feels he must work in a "businesslike" manner with other trustees, and this is the proper approach to that board.

We believe that Downs has a proper perspective on the office of SGA president, he knows the resources that would be available to him and he understands how much he can reasonably expect to accomplish. Throughout his career in UNCW student government Downs has shown an uncommon interest and willingness in the performance of his duties. We believe UNCW students need Downs' abilities in the office of SGA president.

These SGA election endorsements are the products of interviews by members of the Seahawk Editorial Board with the individual candidates for president and vice-president. The decisions were collective judgements by Editorial Board members, although individual board members may not necessarily agree with the opinions expressed.

While these endorsements are our studied recommendations to student voters in the upcoming elections, we urge you to read all candidates' platforms in addition to our endorsement to insure yourself you are making your own decision.

Most importantly, we urge all students to vote Thursday and Friday in SGA elections.

Correction

The editorial appearing on page 2 of the Seahawk last week ("Administration proposal not thought out, but changes are needed") stated that the SGA Finance Committee operates without written guidelines.

Actually, the Finance Committee adopted written operating rules in December of 1978.

The Seahawk regrets this error.

VIEWPOINT

by Ray Warren

According to legend, there used to be a political "off season" every other year. In those years, trees sported more leaves than campaign signs, religious fanatics were bigger pests than candidates, and bumper sticker salesmen vacationed in Miami. Unfortunately, this off season is shrinking into oblivion. Campaign '80, alas, is upon us.

On the national level, a dozen Republicans and at least two Democrats are coveting President Carter's job. Carter's early bird campaign of 1976 has not gone unnoticed. Everyone, it seems, wants to mimic his Haratio Alger rise to power.

Predicting the outcome of the Democratic race is complicated by Carter's incumbency. A foreign policy coup could make him invulnerable while economic troubles could topple him. What will transpire in the next year, then, depends on events nobody can foresee.

At the present time, Carter's job security is mighty good. He seems to excite very few people to extreme loyalty, and like all centerists, he must endure slings and arrows from both right and left. Nonetheless, neither Governor Jerry Brown or Senator Edward Kennedy seem likely to capitalize on Carter's inability to inspire enthusiasm.

Kennedy's socialist brand of noble obligation runs counter to the country's fiscal mood. He may do well in the Northeast and Great Lakes industrial belts, but must contend with an antagonistic Southern and Western alliance. Southerners won't abandon native son Carter for a liberal yankee and the West, as a hotbed of anti-Washington sentiment, won't go for an expanded federal bureaucracy.

California's Governor Brown is harder to understand. With an exotic blend of fiscal conservatism, environmentalism and pro-labor activism, he may seem for a while as all things to all people. By voting time, however, one of Brown's positions is bound to offend almost everyone. Even flip-flops like the one executed over Proposition 13 will lose their effect with time.

On the Republican side of the presidential race, everyone from Connecticut's Senator Lowell Weicker (on the left) to Illinois Congressman Phil Crane (on the right) wants to challenge Carter. With so many candidates the following scenario is possible:

At the nominating convention Crane, Weicker, Ronald Reagan, Howard Baker, and John Connally each have large followings but no majority. Eastern businessmen and Texans favor Connally. Crane has a grip on the midwestern votes, while Reagan controls California. Weickers support is concentrated in his native Northeast, including much of the powerful New York delegation. Baker's supporters are more scattered, but just as numerous. The South is split to pieces between Baker, Crane, Connally and Reagan (not to mention North Carolina's favorite son commitment to Senator Helms).

What will happen? A dark horse like George Bush or the Hispanic businessman, Fernandez, could pick up the pieces. It is more likely, however, that a deal will be made between the leading contenders. Weicker, who is anathema to the right, will be eliminated. A Campaign '80 gears up for Republicans while state candidates become active

Reagan/Crane ticket would be very attractive for regional balance and ideological compatibility. The three more liberal contenders, however, may be able to block that conservative fusion. Since a Baker-Connally team would be geographically unwise, the next likely possibility would be an inter-ideological pairing. Perhaps the Baker/Crane combination would seem most attractive.

Whatever the outcome, the Republican convention will probably not be as cut and dried as the Democrat's, which makes for a curious role reversal from 1972.

Partisan politics is also heating up in North Carolina. Both Lt. Governor Jimmy Green and New Hanover Commissioner Vivian Wright have become the topics of much speculation.

Green's status in the Democratic party is still uncertain. Governor Jim Hunt would probably like to meet him in a primary rather than a general election. Many of Hunt's supporters, however, would be quite happy to see Green defect to the G.O.P.

From Green's point of view, the move to the Republicans would be wise. Hunt controls the Democratic party machinery. In addition, Green's courtship by Republicans has weakened his support among partisan Democrats.

For the Republicans, a Green defection is somewhat risky. Much of the party's success has been built on opposing the "courthouse ring" style politics that Green epitomizes. Nonetheless, the G.O.P. has just about reached the saturation point in urban conversions. In a state as rural as North Carolina, the one party vote of eastern North Carolina's rural areas is crippling. Such voters would be far more likely to vote for a Bladen County farmer than the usual Piedmont businessman. Thus Green could re-capture Senator Helms' successful urban Republican/rural conservative coalition. In fact, Senator Helms' organization would probably be put at his disposal.

Any temporary grumbling among anti-Green urbanites and anti-Helms moderates would be less important than the possibility of splitting the vote in the rural East. Therefore, party leaders will probably welcome Green with open arms. The question now is whether they will even have that chance. Green isn't talking.

Vivian Wright, on the other hand, is talking. The Wilmington Republican will challenge congressman Charlie Rose next year. Ms. Wright is a long shot in a district with a nine-to-one Democratic registration advantage.

Jimmy Green as a Republican would certainly make Ms. Wright's task easier. Even without him, however, she has a good chance of carrying the three more Republican counties in the district: Cumberland, New Hanover and Brunswick. The Democratic homogeneity of Columbus, Robeson and Hoke will present greater odds, but what should be worrying Rep. Rose is the Republican commissioner's record of beating the odds. If nothing else, it will probably accelerate his recent tendency to cloak himself in the trappings, if not the substance, of conservatism.

LETTERS

Firing said personal

To the Editor:

Perhaps the student body of UNCW would like some behind the scenes details that were not disclosed in the article on the possibly illegal firing of Concert Committee chairman David Carter. First, it is no secret on the committee that the two people in question, David Carter and Wayne Dunlap, did not get along personally. Their differences began in October of 1978 over the right of the chairman to decide on who should be on the committee. Along with the fact that the two did not get along it is quite easy to build a case from Dunlap's own statements that the firing was not professional in nature but purely personal. The allegation that Carter was removed for non-attendance of Program Board meetings is merely a smoke screen to hide Dunlap's own irresponsibility in the firing of Carter which led to the cancellation of the Waylon Jennings concert.

The Waylon Jennings concert was approved prior to scheduling by George Dalton of Trask Coliseum, Linda Moore and Jon Greene and was also approved by the Program Board before Carter was fired.

If David Carter's support of the Program Board left something to be desired, so has Dunlap's. Wayne Dunlap waited almost six months after the idea's inception to appoint a Program Board Chairman. If Dunlap really considers the Program Board that essential, why did he wait? It is simply a blatant demonstration of executive inability.

Wayne Dunlap further admitted to former student and Concert Committee chair Walker O'Quinn that the firing of Carter had nothing to do with the way David handled his job, but was "a matter of principle."

But who are the losers in this affair? The students of UNCW. There was no reason why the Waylon Jennings concert had to be cancelled. It could have continued had Dunlap simply appointed a new chairman or had Dunlap allowed David Carter to finish the concert he had started. Why didn't he appoint a new chairman? If firing of the chairman of a standing committee has been well-considered, the executive would surely have had some idea of a suitable replacement. The pathetic truth is that he didn't. What's more, Dunlap told the Student Senate that he was not going to appoint a new chairman until after spring break. After spring break he told members of the Program Board he was not going to appoint a new chairman, period. How can one coordinate concerts with a Program Board when the inept chief executive will not appoint a committee chairman?

The members of the Concert Committee feel very strongly that David Carter is a capable and effective leader. Join us in a call for his reinstatement as Concert Committee Chairman. The benefit will be good shows that don't get cancelled.

Concert Committee Members

Committee defended

To the editor:

The purpose of this letter is to truthfully defend the actions of the Finance Committee, which is a working committee of the Student Government Association. The two Seahawk editorials in question appear in the February 28 and March 14 issues. I chose to write this letter so that the students may be informed of the facts and not the value judgments on the part of the editor.

Contrary to the editor's opinion, the Finance Committee, which deals directly with the allocations, is not erratic, irresponsible nor ineffective. We are responsible people and we do our job very well. Being in the position of allocating over $110,000 this year, I am sure that some criticism is to be expected, but not outright lies.

The hasty generalization of the editor's opinions of the Finance Committee is uncalled for and not warranted. The Finance Committee has meetings weekly and hearings on special problems. The allocation of money, this year, has been by procedural guidelines and not by political motives. The majority of allocations to clubs and organizations have been presented before the Finance Committee, and a motion then comes out of committee to the senate floor. The allocations have not been unwise nor ill-considered and there have not been any inconsistencies in procedural matters.

For the facts:

(1) The Finance Committee is an effective working group. Changes are currently being made to accommodate the large sum of student fees. The Finance Committee has been thrifty, just and wise in all allocations thus far and carries the responsibilities of all decisions which are made.

(2) The Finance Committee does have written guidelines, which provides a consistent method of approving allocation requests. These operating rules were outlined and typed (after much discussion) in November and are available in the SGA office.

(3) There was not a serious misunderstanding of the concept of the Program Board. The Program Board, being a new entity this year, had no budgetary methods or controls for the use of a lump sum allocation. In the best interest of all involved and so that funds would not be misused, I recommended allocations to each committee under this board. Next year, the Program Board will have a procedure for budgetary controls, thus, a lump sum allocation is being advocated. For the editor's information, a lump sum allocation can not be made on money already distributed.

The Finance Committee is now in an awkward position. No matter how many times you defend your position on procedural matters or on information that is not factual, the reputation of this committee has already been damaged. The truth may not prevail in the minds of the student readers and this is what will hurt the Finance Committee. I would certainly be willing to answer any questions.

Fee proposal wise

To the Editor:

The recent proposal to set up a special programming committee to appropriate programming funds is extremely wise. The inefficient, unresponsive and unrepresentative Student Legislature, however, doesn't seem willing to give up the opportunity to mismanage programming in the future. Candidates for office have cried "foul!" and called the administration "greedy." The hypocrisy is laughable, but not really very funny.

Students do not care how programming is funded, so long as the method is representative, responsive and efficient. The student government is none of these.

The real world model used to (See Letters, page 6)

SGA presidential contenders

Francis DeLuca

SGA presidential candidate Francis DeLuca feels that the most important issue facing student government leaders next year is the need for an overall reorganization plan which would allow smoother operations and greater effectiveness for SGA.

DeLuca, who currently serves as SGA vice president, says that one of the basic ingredients of this organizational plan is a division of labor which would include taking responsibility for programming and media and publications from under SGA.

Major changes in the SGA constitution, DeLuca says, should be made with complete precision of mind. Needed additions to the constitution are a set of rules for the SGA operations and detailed guidelines for executive officers. He adds:

SGA has no money. DeLuca has served as speaker of the Student Legislature.

He says that SGA legislators should be more involved with SGA work other than their meetings and activities. An increase in committee work within the SGA is needed.

DeLuca's reorganization proposal would be for the Student Legislature and the Finance Committee to handle all SGA business. DeLuca says that a major step in the process is giving the SGA the right to control through a central fund.

DeLuca suggests that the new board should be composed of all the members, not just the parties now controlled by SGA.

The present administration proposal recommends a five-member board be given authority over funds now going to SGA.

DeLuca's proposal, however, would give the fee allocation board control over student fees going to athletics, the student union, intramurals and all other areas as well.

The Program Board and the Media and Publications Board should also be given control of funds for activities within their jurisdictions, according to DeLuca, without having to go through SGA.

DeLuca believes the Program Board has worked well this year although there needs to be some clarification of its role within its present structure.

DeLuca says that his experience in SGA makes him familiar with its structure. Before being elected vice-president, he served as a legislator for two years and as a member of the Legislature's Investigating Committee. He feels his legislative goals students more of a focus in the presidential race.

DeLuca is a political science major from Jacksonville who will be a senior next year.

Among other positions of DeLuca, he advocates appointment of an executive assistant for the president.

Says he would differ from the current president, Wayne Dunlap, in that he would spend less time at statewide student government conferences.

Wants to keep the SGA vice-president more informed on overall policies and issues.

Glen Downs

Glen Downs, a candidate for SGA president believes that SGA should not be responsible for programming and media and publications as it has in the past and suggests that SGA officials adopt a series of projects that involve them in more than a weekly meeting.

Currently serving as SGA attorney general, Downs believes that the student court system should be abolished as it now exists. He advocates the establishment of a new court which would include student, faculty and administration representatives and would be given greater jurisdiction over on-campus violations.

The Student Legislature, Downs states, has operated better this year than it has in the past, but, he adds, there are several improvements which need to be made. These changes would include a reduction in the number of legislators and a stronger campaign to combat absenteeism at legislative meetings.

Downs believes that the student fee money now controlled by SGA should be broken down among three categories: programming, media and publications, and SGA, the latter to handle funds for all groups not included in the first two categories.

Downs says that SGA would probably be more effective with fewer money problems to handle.

The fee distribution plan recently proposed by the administration, which would set up an allocation board to disperse funds now controlled by SGA, is a bad proposal, Downs says. He believes the action is a move by administration officials who wish to expand the responsibilities of their jobs.

Downs states that group pressure from SGA on administration officials could help bring about decisions favorable to students. He describes members of the Board of Trustees, on which he would serve if elected president, as the "students' best friends on campus" and believes they must be worked with in a "businesslike" manner.

Constant pressure on administration officials would result in approval of a division-status football program at UNCW, Downs says. He adds that community support for football would follow a definite commitment from the university.

Besides serving as attorney general, Downs has served as a member of the Student Legislature for two years. He was a member of the SGA Finance Committee last semester.

Downs is a rising senior from Greensboro whose major is economics.

Among other position of Downs, he:

Would not attend many statewide conferences concerned with issues that affect the entire UNC system, but would concentrate on UNCW issues.

Advocates appointing an executive assistant to the president to decrease the work load of one person.

Would work for the elimination of designated faculty parking spaces on campus. He notes this has been done at other UNC branches.

Jon Fail

The most important problem facing SGA, according to presidential candidate Jon Fail, is poor communication-between the president and the Legislature, between SGA and the administration, and between SGA and students. Fail says he would use campus media to counter the communications problem.

Fail advocates a reorganization for SGA that would include several revisions in the SGA constitution, most of which he describes as technical revisions. Changes would include simplification of the language and more explicit qualifications for candidates for executive office.

Fail says he would generally be a strong executive. Although he says UNCW would always be his first priority, he would take an active role in the UNC Association of Student Governments (UNCASG), as has current president Wayne Dunlap. Fail says he would work to change the "community college" image that UNCW has in many parts of the state.

Two, three or possibly more executive assistants are needed by the SGA president, Fail says. He sees one assistant to handle correspondence, one to deal exclusively with UNCASG issues, and others to cover particular areas as they become necessary. Fail states it would be important to delegate authority to these assistants and plans to have weekly staff meetings which will include administration representatives.

Fail says the proposal to place SGA funds under the authority of a new fee allocation board is ill-timed. He suggests retaining the current set-up with the Program Board and Media and Publications Board request a lump sum allocation from SGA to divide among individual committees or activities.

Jon Fail

The Program Board should be an autonomous committee, Fail says, and he sees no necessity for individual committees within it. The chairman of Program Board should be appointed by SGA but the board should be free to set its own operating policies.

Fail believes SGA should concentrate on a few major issues rather than dividing its time among all problems. He would select two to four policy areas for study by a select committee.

Fail says that his experience in the North Carolina Student Legislature will (See Fail, page 9)

Sheila McLamb

Sheila McLamb says that she is running for SGA president to increase the visibility of SGA on campus and to move effectively use the power which the organization has. By providing students with direct service, McLamb states, SGA can become more visible and be in a position to fight apathy among students.

The recent administration proposal to take control of funding student activities with student fees from SGA and give it to a newly created fee allocation board provided the impetus for McLamb to file for the office.

McLamb says she is totally against the change in funding.

McLamb says her inexperience with student government at UNCW does not put her at a disadvantage to her three opponents, and she adds that it may even be an advantage. Since she believes there has been a lackadaisical atmosphere in SGA in the past, she believes that its current members—her opponents included—could be held responsible.

Having several years of experience in student government at the University of Maryland—including two years as a legislator, serving on the finance committee, working with the student legal aid service, and serving on various committees—McLamb says she would bring a "fresh start" and enthusiasm to SGA at UNCW.

McLamb advocates reorganization for the Student Legislature to eliminate class representation and establish some type of district representation which would include representatives of residents, commuter students, and similar groups. This system would be fairer to students, McLamb says.

Sheila McLamb

McLamb would require legislators to maintain office hours to get them more involved in SGA. She also wants more committee work within the Legislature.

As president, McLamb says she would always put students first when working with the university administration. She says she would consider herself the students' representative as a member of the Board of Trustees.

McLamb says she is not familiar with the present set-up of either the Program Board or Media and Publications Board. But she would seek advice from members of these boards in deciding the future course of funding for each.

Vice-presidential candidates

Sanders advocates long-range goals

Michael Sanders, candidate for SGA vice-president, is a sophomore senator and a member of the N.C. Student Legislature delegation from UNCW. According to Sanders, the main issue facing SGA is the change occurring because of the growth of UNCW. He believes long range goals must be set for the students.

Sanders stated that "Only a small percentage of students are voicing their needs." He emphasized a need for student input so that the ideas of the student body could be discussed.

For example, he is the chairman of the committee to draw up an alternative plan concerning the fee allocation proposal.

There will be administrative input before it is presented to the student legislature. (The alternative plan will be open for debate at Thursday night's Legislature meeting.)

Michael Sanders

If Sanders is elected SGA vice-president, he will set down his own rules rather than follow strict parliamentary procedure. He feels that there should be "more control in the area of debate." The present meetings are too informal, Sanders believes, and more will be accomplished if the meetings are more formal.

To compensate for the growth and the changes UNCW will experience, Sanders stated that "the constitution will need improvement."

Wiley urges consistency in Legislature

John Wiley, a candidate for SGA vice-president, has three years of experience in the Student Legislature. Wiley stated that the main issue concerning the SGA is "the move by the Program Board on the fee allocation proposal." He feels that the Program Board "needs more autonomy."

Wiley wants more consistency established by the vice-president during legislative meetings. He believes the meetings should be more formal, but he wants a smaller group as representatives in the Legislature. If elected, Wiley will limit the speaking time during debates and will establish new operating rules. He also would like to see "more effective committee work."

He believes there is not enough student input in SGA. Wiley stated "The responsibility should come from the students rather than the administration." To get the students involved, Wiley believes "activities should be publicized better."

He also supports the proposed legal service agency because it would be a direct benefit for students. Wiley also suggests a new student publication strictly for entertainment purposes.

Chief justice candidate wants stronger voice

Would you like to see justice in the land? Or at least here at UNCW? Doug Browne, a candidate for chief justice of the Student Supreme Court, would. "I'd like to see the court have a stronger voice in student affairs," he stated when asked why he had chosen to run.

Browne, who is now a junior and has been active in student politics since high school, served as a Student Court justice this year. The justices are appointed by the Student Legislature, president and vice-president and are "an integral part of our governmental system," commented Browne. The Supreme Court is a fundamental aspect of student life; we are literally responsible for the execution of justice at UNCW."

Being chief justice is not a responsibility to be taken lightly, according to Browne. "My job is to preside over the Supreme Court and to be impartial in determining the outcomes of various cases," he declared.

When asked if he has any major changes in mind for his position, Browne replied, "There is nothing immediate that needs changing. There's been a lot of talk about revising the constitution, but I can't really take a stand on that issue now."

A political science major, Browne describes himself as "being on the five-year plan." After graduation he hopes to eventually become involved in politics. "Americans are really disillusioned with political figures," Browne commented. "And the apathy towards the establishment has got to end."

Pete Johnston uncontested in attorney general race

Pete Johnston, a rising junior communications major from Burgaw, is running uncontested in the race for attorney general in the SGA elections. Johnston sees definite problems in the current office, such as a lack of communication with the student body. "Students should be made aware of housing regulations (concerning dormitory life), honor codes and so forth. They're written in the student handbook, but students need to be made aware of these things. Students also need to know how other universities work (with regard to these problems)."

Johnston intends to tackle the communications problem by printing several articles in the Seahawk to inform students.

"There is a continuous change in student life. I intend to research and inform them. I also plan to work closely with the proposed student legal services."

Johnston also hopes to work very closely with the SGA office and with the Student Legislature.

"I think this office is a definite challenge. I'd like to expand the office of attorney general. I really feel that I could add to the Student Government Association," Johnston concludes.

Letters from the candidates

Frank Colvin

To the Students:

As a result of much reflection and discussion with other students, I'm announcing my candidacy for the office of senior class president.

I am a junior majoring in business administration and I've viewed with much concern the lack of significant participation by the student body at-large in the affairs of the SGA.

It is time for us as students to begin to play a larger role in the development of this young, but rapidly growing university.

As a candidate for senior class president, I will strive to help not only the seniors, but to keep an open mind to any suggestions or problems that any UNCW student or faculty member may have. I am seeking this office in an effort to take these problems and ideas and be in a position to help generate results.

I would like to have the SGA to make a more vigorous attempt to inform concerned students of the need for their attendance at the weekly meetings so that more ideas can be brought up and discussed.
